"Sobraon" writes:—"Shortly after the above medals were issued, I came into possession of one with five bars, viz., 'Central India,' 'Lucknow,' 'Defence of Lucknow,' 'Relief of Lucknow,' and 'Delhi.' It is inscribed on the edge 'A—— B——, 1st European Bengal Fusiliers.' The fact of one man having been the recipient of five bars has been impeached, and for the honour of the 'gallant old Ens's,' with whom I served through the Sutlej and Punjaub campaigns, I should like some one who was with them through the Mutiny to solve the apparent paradox of how a man could be present at the 'Defence' and also at the 'Relief' of Lucknow. That it is capable of solution I am certain, but an orthodox statement of the facts would set the matter at rest for ever."

The Russian Government has sent to the Japanese station the Kniaz Pojarski, armour-plated frigate, ostensibly for the purpose of continuing the hydrographic survey of the Japanese coast. The frigate carries an armament of ten 300-pounders, and has the reputation of being a fast sailer.

Under the authority of the Secretary of State for India, it is notified that in the event of the report of a marriage or the birth of a child not being made by a subscriber to the Indian Service Family Pension Fund, during his lifetime, in accordance with the rules, the widow or child will not be entitled to any benefits from the fund.

The following appointment has been made to the Staff of the Bengal Army:—"Capt. P. Walker, 34th Foot, to be a Deputy-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry, vice Major E. Beddy, resigned."

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Lucas has been noted for the adjutancy of the Derbyshire Yeomanry Cavalry, and been granted an extension of his leave of absence from the 8th to the 19th inst., pending his appointment. Capt. Bellwood has been ordered to proceed to Worksop, to assume the duties of adjutant of the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry Cavalry, pending his appointment being gazetted.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). The following appointment has been made to the personal staff of Gen. Sir F. Haines in India, viz.:—" Major J. Goldie, 6th Dragoon Guards, Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. Army Head-quarters, to officiate as military secretary, vice Col. R. Preston, C.B., resigned, from March 1, 1880."

7th Dragoon Guards. Capt. B. R. Bury, late capt. and adjt. of the West Kent Yeomanry, died at Wateringbury, Kent, on the 1st inst.

4th Hussars. A well-informed correspondent assures us that "the regiment by June next will be quite fit to take their place in the cavalry brigade at Aldershot. By that time the majority of the recruits will be dismissed, and the young horses in the ranks; and though a young regiment, the men are of an exceptionally good stamp, and likely to make good horsemen. Shorncliffe is, no doubt, a pleasant summer quarter, but the regiment has been there long enough, and the drill-ground is confined and unfit for cavalry manœuvring. Possibly 'Looker-on' may prefer the 'Lees' of Folkestone to the dust of the Long Valley, or a bell-tent on Cove Common."

5th Lancers. In a despatch from the Adjutant-General in India to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis Roberts, K.C.B., Gen. Massy's case is referred to as follows:—" Turning from the consideration of these gallant acts, I am to express to you the pain with which his Excellency feels it to be his duty to refer to the affair of Dec. 11, when so many casualties occurred in the endeavour to extricate the guns of F-A, R.H.A., which had eventually to be spiked and left for a time in the hands of the enemy. It is perfectly clear that, in obedience to your orders, Brigdr.-Gen. Massy, who commanded on this occasion, should have moved along the road towards Ghuznee, and not struck across country, as it must have been evident that the guns should have been kept to the road as long as practicable, and he should not have become engaged with the enemy until he had joined with Brigdr.-Gen. Macpherson. His conduct in commencing an engagement with the small force under his command, composed only of cavalry and guns, without any infantry in support against an enemy so numerous and determined as he reports them to have been, on ground such as that described, is, to his Excellency's mind, quite incomprehensible. Brigdr.-Gen. Massy's subsequent operations in continually advancing arms of precision and long range, such as the guns of the present day are, and thus losing their fire for the time, and in afterwards dismounting thirty lancers with carbines to stop the advance of 10,000 men, show him to have been quite unable to cope with the difficulties of the position to which he had committed himself. I am, by the Commander-in-Chief's orders, sending you with this a confidential letter dealing with the matter more in detail, and containing his Excellency's instructions thereon. The Commander-in-Chief is quite satisfied that the conduct of the officers and men under Brigdr.-Gen. Massy's orders, on this unfortunate occasion, was all that could be desired." In commenting upon the above, the Indian Daily News remarks:—" The matter lies in a nutshell—was Gen. Roberts or Brigdr. Massy in command? We remember that after October 8, there was fault found with Gen. Massy for not storming Deh-i-Mozung with his cavalry. But the conclusion we have come to are that if Sir F. Roberts knew that the men of Maidan were advancing, that provisions for the city were stopped, especially from Logar, that the Kohistanis were advancing; so that south-east, south-west, north, and north-west of him, he knew that bodies of Afghans were in motion; yet, instead of reconnoitring the country on Dec. 7 and 8 with his cavalry, he held a grand parade of all arms, and so wasted Dec. 8. With one English and two native cavalry regiments at Sherpur, he made no attempt to scour the roads, or keep touch of the Maidan and Kohistan forces. When he did move, he made an elaborate and misplaced exhibition of strategy, since, instead of going for the nearest body of the enemy, and accounting for them, he elaborated a combined movement, which served no other purpose than to divide his available field strength, and leave him no better immediate reserve than four R.H.A. guns and 214 troopers. The fact that he was moving by two columns ought to have necessitated the formation of a reserve, so posted as to be available as support or shelter for either, or as a means of opening rapid communication between them. This being so, we do not see how any one but the General can be blamed for all that took place, and we trust that Brigdr. Massy is not to be sacrificed."

9th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Cleland was to have left Cabul on the 12th ult. for Bombay to embark for England, travelling easy stages. He is accompanied by a medical officer. A convoy of sick and wounded left on the 11th ult. in charge of Capt. Shearburn, who has been ordered home to the depôt. The Calcutta papers do not agree in their statements about the movements of that energetic and highly favoured officer, Lord William Beresford. One of them says he has been "recalled," to resume his place on Lord Lytton's staff; another assumes the same thing, and expresses much, and perhaps very natural indignation thereat; but now the Asian says his lordship has only come away from his regiment on short leave. Capt. Chisholme left Bombay on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar for England.

10th Hussars. Lieut. Fisher is reported by Gen. Roberts "as having behaved in a conspicuously cool and gallant manner while in charge of the transport animals during the withdrawal from the Bala Hissar hill," during the operations before Cabul in December last. The name of Lieut. Durham has been substituted for that of Lieut. Fisher, in the list of officers detailed for duty with the regimental depôts. Lieut. Durham sailed for England on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar.

12th Lancers. Capt. Hayes is retiring. Capt. Beck has been told off for duty at the Wellington Depôt, Madras, during the present year. The death is announced from India of Lieut. E. C. Fulcher. The deceased entered the service, Aug. 14, 1873.

13th Hussars. The name of Lieut. Doyne has been added to the list of officers detailed for duty with regimental depôt.

15th Hussars. It is said that the regiment has received orders to proceed on service to Afghanistan.

17th Lancers. 2nd Lieut. Quintin has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on private affairs.

20th Hussars. Lieut.-Col. Chenevix-Trench has joined at Newbridge, from the Staff College, and assumed command, on promotion, vice Lieut.-Col. Lockwood, retired.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

In his despatch on the actions before Cabul in Dec. last Gen. Roberts writes:—" From Lieut.-Col. B. L. Gordon, commanding the artillery, I have received every assistance; and I take this opportunity of recording the services rendered by Major C. A. Gorham, R.A. (Deputy Judge-Advocate-General of the force), whose technical knowledge was of the greatest service in utilising the Afghan guns and ammunition. Capt. H. Pipon, F-A. Royal Horse Artillery, has also done excellent service; and Lieut.-Col. Gordon informs me that he has found his adjutant, Lieut. F. E. Allsopp, R.A., active and useful."

In his despatch on the capture of Konoma, Naga Hills, Brigdr.-Gen. Nation reports, "The manner in which Lieut. Mansel, R.A., assisted by his three bombardiers (John Watts, H. McAndrew, and Thomas Portman), served the guns brought up under the very walls of the enemy, with little or no cover, elicited most deserved admiration from all."

Lieut. A. H. Browne has been appointed to act as Third-Class Commissary of Ordnance in India, vice Lieut. H. H. Champion, R.A., who rejoins his battery, the 5-8th, about to be changed from a garrison battery to a mountain battery.

Lieut.-Col. E. Tierney (late Bengal), Superintendent of the gunpowder factory at Ishapore, has been granted leave from India to England until Nov. 24 next, on private affairs.

Col. C. H. Owen and Lieut.-Col. Eardley Maitland, who have been sitting as members of the Ordnance Committee, assembled recently to report on the relative merits of the breech v. muzzle-loading system, have, it is said, been noted for Staff employment, in recognition of their services.

The Irish Times says:—" Lieut.-Col. H. Brackenbury, of the Royal Artillery, who has been acting as military secretary to Sir Garnet Wolseley at the Cape, and who has by this time arrived in India to take up his new appointment as private secretary to Lord Lytton, is likely to be created a C.B., in addition to being promoted brevet colonel, in reward for his recent services; at least it is Sir Garnet's wish that he should gain both distinctions, and Sir Garnet generally carries his point."

Lieut. N. B. Inglefield, 1st Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate, and Lieut. E. Peel, 9th Brig., from Feb. 26 to July 25.

The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult., viz.:—Brevet Major R. G. S. Marshall, B Brig. R.H.A. (late Bengal); Capts. F. A. Yorke (1st Brig.), D. Mack, D. Waterfield (9th Brig.), and C. H. H. Mayne (2nd Brig.); Lieuts. C. C. Townsend (9th Brig.), and N. B. Inglefield (1st Brig.); Qrmrs. T. Briggs, W. Gunn, E. Hamby, W. Cliffe, B. Ashbee, T. Langrish, and A. Walker; and Vet.-Surgs. J. J. Philips and S. Gillespie.

Major H. J. E. Ford, 4th Brig. (late Bengal), the possessor of a Staff College certificate, has been appointed a Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. at Calcutta.

"Common-Sense" writes:—" Your remarks concerning the absurd cost entailed on the country by the manner in which the so-called Riding Establishment is kept up at Woolwich will, I trust, in all probability, induce the new Secretary of State to look into the matter. As at present constituted, it is a farce, simply playing at bad cavalry, doing no good to the regiments at large, and costing the country a lot of money, with an establishment of officers with nothing to do."

The following Royal Warrant was promulgated on the 1st inst.:—" Whereas it has been represented unto us that it is expedient to offer special inducements to certain officers of our Royal Artillery to retire voluntarily from our Service, with a view to carrying out, without unduly interfering with the prospects of promotion in the regiment, a reduction which has become necessary in the number of field-officers of that arm of our Service, our will and pleasure is that an extra-annuity of £150 shall be granted to each of 14 officers of our Royal Artillery not under the regimental rank of Lieut.-Col., who shall have completed the requisite periods of service to entitle them to retirement upon full pay or pension under our Warrants of May 1, 1878, and Feb. 5, 1880; and that such extra-annuity shall be granted in addition to the retired full pay or pension already earned by the officer, under the provisions of any of our Warrants now in force."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Lahore paper says:—" As the appointment of Lieut.-Gen. Sir M. Kennedy, K.C.S.I., R.E., to be an additional secretary to the Government, in the Military Department, appears to be popularly misunderstood, it may be well to explain that the effect of it is to make him more immediately responsible to the Government and subordinate to the Military Member of Council. As Controller-General of Transport and Supply, he was absolute and irresponsible, except, perhaps, to the Viceroy; and we receive the intelligence of his new appointment with the more satisfaction, that it appeared to us highly desirable that some check should be imposed upon a course of action which was more conspicuous for costliness than for increased efficiency."

Gen. W. E. B. Broughton, colonel-commandant, died at Surbiton on the 5th inst., in his 76th year. The deceased entered the Army Aug. 6, 1825; became 1st-lieut., Feb. 24, 1829; capt., April 1, 1841; lieut.-col., June 20, 1854; brevet col., June 20, 1857; col., April 18, 1860; major-gen., Jan. 1, 1868; lieut.-gen., June 19, 1872; colonel-commandant, June 19, 1872; and gen., Oct. 1, 1877.

Scots Guards. Lieut.-Col. Stracey has left England for Bombay, in company with Sir J. Fergusson, Bart., the new Governor, as Military Secretary.

2nd Queen's. 2nd Lieut. Crawley, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-officer 22nd Bengal N.I., on probation.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., 2nd Batn, has been appointed temporarily to the staff of the Bombay Army, as a brig.-gen., in succession to Lieut.-Gen. J. M. Primrose, C.S.I., appointed to a command in Afghanistan.

6th Regiment. Capt. Grundy has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs. Lieut. and Adjt. Ball, 1st Batn., left Bombay on the 17th ult., in H.M.S. Malabar, for England.

8th (the King's). Capts. Cope and Blake-Humfrey have joined from England. Lieut. Balfour has been appointed a probationer in the 13th Bengal Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Tanner leaves the 2nd for the 1st Batn., on promotion, regretted by all, after 22 years' continuous service in it. We take the following from one of our Indian contemporaries at Kurum:—" Looking up to the Peiwar Kotal, I can just see the smoke of the huts, though the ground there has at least five feet of snow over it; but the inhabitants are stout-hearted mountaineers by now, and care little for frost and snow; indeed, it would be difficult to find in the Army better or grander material than now composes 'The King's.'" Writing from the Kurum Valley on Feb. 28, a correspondent of the Lahore paper says:—" It would be difficult to find in all our Army sounder or better material than now compose the 8th King's." The behaviour of this battalion throughout the Afghan campaigns has been most creditable. Lieut. Fletcher, 2nd Batn., a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed officiating wing-officer 27th Madras N.I., on probation. Capt. Turner, 2nd Batn., left India on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar for England. Capt. Turner was present at the battle of the Peiwar Kotal, and obtained leave to Europe at the conclusion of the first Afghan campaign. On the resumption of the war, he returned to India and accompanied the late lamented Brigdr.-Gen. Tytler in the Zaimukht expedition.

13th Light Infantry. Capt. T. Hoban, qrmr., on the Half-pay List, died at Jellalabad Villa, Deal, on the 1st inst., aged 62 years. The deceased served with the regiment throughout the campaigns in Afghanistan from 1838 to 1842 inclusive, and was present at the storm and capture of Ghuznee (medal), and was one of the volunteers who previously reconnoitred the fort, and was also a volunteer for the storming party; was present at the forcing of the Jugdulluck Pass, where he commanded a party of six men who mounted the highest point of the pass, and took possession of it from the enemy. Again, with a similar number of men, he took possession of a breastwork from a party of the enemy more than thrice his number (highly complimented by Sir R. Sale). He was subsequently in the heroic defence of Jellalabad, including sorties of Nov. 14 and Dec. 1, 1841 (twice defeated opponents in single combat) (medal); storming the heights of Jugdulluck, Sept. 8; action at Tezeen on Sept. 12, in which he played a conspicuous part, he having, when his company was detached to reinforce the Goorkha Sappers, who were overpowered and driven from the heights, been the first to mount the hill in face of a heavy fire from the enemy; was in the general action at Tezeen on Sept. 13, 1842, and recapture of Cabul (medal). Served in the Crimea from June 30, 1855, including the battles of Tchernaya, siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with clasp and Turkish medal). Served in the Indian campaign from Oct. 3, 1857, and was present at the relief of Azimghur, April 6, 1858 (mentioned in despatches). Also in the Trans-Gogra campaign, including action of Toolsepore (medal). He was promoted to an ensigncy Jan. 12, 1855; was appointed quartermaster May 25, 1855; and retired upon half-pay, with the hon. rank of capt., July 27, 1866.

14th Regiment. Lieut. Wemyss, 1st Batn., and 2nd Lieut. Vanrenen, 2nd Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult.

24th Regiment. The command of the 1st Batn., just returned from active service in Zululand, is about to fall vacant by the retirement of Col. Glyn, C.B., who did duty uninterruptedly at the Cape from the first outbreak of hostilities. Col. Glyn obtained command of the battalion as far back as Feb. 1867 Twelve years is a long period for an officer to pass at the head of a battalion in these days of compulsory retirement! The truth about the state of the dead on the field of Isandhlwana is probably to be found in the official report of the magistrate (Mr. Fynn), and the police officer, who were sent to inspect. This document states that they found that nearly every trace of the conflict had disappeared. But in a great many instances the earth had been partly washed away from the graves, exposing the bones to view. "It is recommended that Europeans, under proper supervision, may be sent to re-bury such of the dead as are now only covered by earth and stones, by digging deep graves at the sides, and moving the remains and the earth about them into the new graves." The dead were too far apart to be conveyed to one spot. Capt. and Pymr. C. B. Griffith, from the York District, has been appointed to the 2nd Batn. as Pymr.

40th Regiment. Capt. Story has been appointed officiating D.A.Q.M.G. of the Sirhind Division of the Bengal Army. Capt. Kelly left India on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar, for England.

43rd Light Infantry. The following notice appears in the Indian papers:—"Murdered by thieves in the Kurum Valley, Feb. 20, Gordon Hugh Lumsden, lieut., 13th Bengal Lancers." A correspondent, writing to the Lahore paper from the Kurum Valley, on Feb. 28, says:—"The murderer of poor young Lumsden has not yet been discovered, and as all the stolen property, including cash, has been recovered from an old Mahommedan tomb in the neighbourhood, there is really no clue left likely to lead to a discovery. The incomprehensible part of the affair is that the murderer should not have been disturbed in the act. The deceased's orderly was asleep within three paces of his master's bed, and from the circumstance of every article in the tent that was not marked with blood having been removed with the money, it can only be inferred that a candle must have been lighted. Not the least sinister feature of the business is that it is now said all the wounds, some fourteen in number, were inflicted with a bayonet. If you regard the position of the officers' tents in the 13th Lancers camp, placed as they are along the edge of a ravine, the question irresistibly suggests itself as to where the sentries were. I regret to say there were none—none, at least, that could have been of any service; and it is sad to think the catastrophe might have been altogether averted by ordinary precautions." Lieut. Curtis has been posted to the Wellington depôt, Madras, for duty during the present year.

47th Regiment. Capt. Biscoe will shortly be appointed adjt. of the Forfarshire Rifle Volunteers.

ROYAL MARINES.

The new schools for the children of the non-commissioned officers and men of the Chatham Division, Royal Marines, are now complete, and have been handed over to the Royal Marine authorities. The schools will accommodate 150 girls, 150 boys, and 200 infants. In addition to the children of the men at present serving, the children of Marine pensioners in the employ of the Admiralty will be allowed to attend.

The remains of Lieut.-Col. Poore, R.M.A., who died on Sunday, were interred on Thursday afternoon at the Portsmouth Cemetery, with full military honours. The cortége, consisting of firing party of 300 men of Royal Marine Artillery, bands of R.M.A., R.M.L.I., and 108th Regt., left Eastney Barracks at two o'clock. A large number of naval and military officers, including Lieut.-Gen. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and staff, were present.

51st Light Infantry. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Farrington, and Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. Bengal, has been appointed officiating D.Q.M.G. of the Oudh Division. Qrmr. Murray is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult.

60th Rifles. Capt. Chalmers, 2nd Batn., has been appointed brigade-major of the 1st Brigade at Candahar, vice Capt. Stockley, 9th Regt., reverted to duty with his batn. at Candahar. We learn from Allahabad, dated March 12, that Lieut. Kitson, A.D.C. to the Viceroy, has fallen from his horse and broken his ribs. The testimonial of the county of Devon to Col. Buller, V.C., C.B., C.M.G., has been completed, at a cost of £800, and will be presented in a few days. The testimonial is a centrepiece, the principal figures of which are Col. Buller in hunting costume, with a friendly Zulu on the watch crouched at his feet. The panels of the pedestal, from which three figures rise. bear representations of the rescue of a dismounted trooper by the Colonel in the affair of Zomblani, for which act he received the Victoria Cross; and another bas-relief pictures the field of Ulundi. On either side of the central figures are dismounted troopers and their chargers, the man in one case being the Colonel's orderly, and in the other a member of the Mounted Infantry. The whole design is very spirited. The testimonial is of solid silver. Qrmr.-Serjt. P. Lyons (late of the 1st Batn.) has been granted a medal and gratuity of £10 as a reward for distinguished or meritorious services, to commence from April 1, 1879.

72nd Highlanders. In his despatch on the action before Cabul in December last, Gen. Roberts writes:—"The ground was most difficult, and the enemy fought with the greatest obstinacy; the Highlanders and Guides were, however, not to be denied, and eventually reached the highest peak, where a number of Ghazis stood fast, determined to die. Here a great struggle took place, and I wish to bring to particular notice the conduct of Lance-Corporal George Sellar, 72nd Highlanders, who had rushed on well in advance of his comrades, and fell to the ground in combat with one of the Ghazis, from whom he received a severe sword-cut on the arm. The forward gallantry of the corporal excited the admiration of all who saw it, and I purpose addressing the Military Secretary a recommendation that he may be granted the decoration of the Victoria Cross." We learn from India that Lieut. the Hon. R. C. Drummond has resigned his appointment on the personal staff of Sir Ashley Eden, and proceeds to join his regiment, the 72nd, in Cabul.

78th Highlanders. The death has been officially announced of Capt. H. H. Douglas, on the Half-pay List. The deceased entered the Army, March 12, 1814; became lieut., April 14, 1818; capt., June 30, 1824; and retired upon half-pay, July 16, 1826.

80th Regiment. A Cape paper says:—"No fewer than eighteen men have been gazetted as deserters; the runaways including the paymaster-sergeant, a colour-sergeant, and a sergeant." Capt. Howard is a candidate for the Pay Department, and will most probably obtain the regimental paymastership.

81st Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Young is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 13th Bengal N.I., on probation.

88th Regiment. Lieuts. Wood and Webb and 2nd Lieut. Clough-Taylor have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. A handsome monumental tablet has been erected in the parish church of Ross, Herefordshire, by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment, to the memory of Lieut. Thirkill, who died while on active service in Zululand. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Dalrymple has been confirmed in the appointment of Military Secretary to Lord Lytton at Calcutta, vice Gen. B ker, who has resigned, and retains his Afghan command at Cabul.

89th Regiment. Lieut. Maxwell left Bombay on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar for England.

90th Light Infantry. Capt. Hutchinson is about to retire upon half-pay. Lieut. Campbell is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Malabar. Lieut. Heathcote has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. A correspondent asks:—"Can it be true that the War Office has finally determined that the boy's service of Brevet Lieut.-Col. R. H. Hackett, the unfortunate senior officer of the 90th who lost his sight in Zululand, shall not count towards pension? If this be so, the unfortunate officer will be compelled to retire on a captain's annuity of £220 a year, together with such blood-money as a grateful country may afford."

91st Highlanders. In announcing the death of the late Major Gurney, the Mauritius Gazette says:—"With deep regret we have to announce the death of Major W. P. Gurney, commanding the detachment in this colony of H.M.'s 91st Highlanders, who died on January 27, at eight o'clock, at The Villa, Moka. But a few days ago Major Gurney was apparently well and strong, taking an active part in the athletic sports of his regiment, and in various regimental amusements, notably in the performances of the garrison dramatic club, of which he was president. He was foremost in promoting the social and moral welfare of the soldiers under his command, and more than one of his men has spoken to us of him as 'The soldier's friend,' a proud and distinctive title, not enjoyed by many commanding officers. Among his brother-officers he was known by the name of 'The good creature.' The deceased had done good service in the late Zulu war, and it is believed that the privations and hardships he there underwent must have enfeebled his constitution, so as to have rendered him susceptible to the prevalent fever of the island. Major Gurney was one of the most popular officers that has ever been stationed in this colony, beloved alike by his officers and by his men; and his death has cast a gloom over military and social circles here which time alone can dispel. In him his brother-officers have lost an example which they may well be proud to imitate, and his men a lenient and just commanding officer, a ready and true counsellor, and, as we said before, a real friend. The funeral of the deceased officer took place on the 28th ult., with military honours, at Beau Bassin."

92nd Highlanders. In his despatch on the operations of Dec. 11 before Cabul, Gen. Roberts writes:—"The 92nd Highlanders led the advance, under Major G. S. White, who has so frequently distinguished himself during the present campaign; and the attack on the enemy's first position was gallantly headed by Lieut. St. John W. Forbes, who, together with the colour-serjt. of the company, James Drummond, was killed in a hand-to-hand fight. The leading men of the 92nd Highlanders were most resolutely charged by the enemy, who had a very considerable advantage both in numbers and position. After the loss of the officer and colour-serjeant, there was a momentary waver, when Lieut. W. H. Dick Cunyngham rushed forward, and, gallantly exposing himself to the full fire, poured upon this point, rallied the men by his example and cheering words. A large portion of the enemy being thus prevented from uniting themselves with those occupying the Takht-i-Shah, the 92nd Highlanders and Guides, covered by the fire of Major Swinley's guns, which had by this time gained the summit of the lower ridge, and aided by that of G-3, R.A., from the plain below, continued the advance on the conical hill, fighting for some distance every foot of the way. The position of the enemy was enormously strong, but by 11.30 a.m. the 92nd Highlanders and Guides had reached the summit, where they were met by some of the 72nd Highlanders, 3rd Sikhs, and 5th Goorkhas, under the command of Major J. M. Sym, 5th Goorkhas, who had arrived there a few minutes before. Colour-Serjt. John Yule, 72nd Highlanders, was the first man up, and captured two standards. This gallant non-commissioned officer was, I regret to say, killed on the following day." Referring to the action on Dec. 14, the General says:—"Serjt. J. McLaren and Corpl. E. McKay, 92nd Highlanders, distinguished themselves by great personal gallantry on this occasion." Under instructions from the Horse Guards, Capt. Oxley has been directed to proceed to England at the public expense, to take up the adjutancy of the Aberdeenshire Militia, for which he has been selected. Capts. M'Callum and Gordon have been invalided to England from Cabul. The colonelcy has become vacant, by the death of Gen. G. Staunton, C.B., which occurred on Sunday last at The Hall, Brampton Bryan. The deceased served in the 10th and the 31st Regts. With the former he was present in the Sutlej campaign of 1846, including the battle of Sobraon (medal). He commanded the 31st in the Crimea from May 22, 1855, and was present at the siege of Sebastopol and attacks on the Redan on June 18 and Sept. 8. He commanded the 2nd Brig., 4th Division, as a brigdr.-gen. from Nov. 13. For his services during the war he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and received the Sardinian and Turkish medals, the fourth class of the Medjidie, and medal and clasp for Sebastopol. For some years he was in receipt of a reward for distinguished service, which he enjoyed till his appointment as colonel of the 92nd, in Dec., 1871. He was nominated a C.B. in 1873. He entered the Army as ensign, by purchase, in Oct., 1826, and obtained the rank of lieut.-col., by purchase, in July, 1849; was promoted to col. in Nov. 1854; major-gen., Jan. 1864; lieut.-gen. April, 1872; and gen., Oct., 1877.

100th Regiment. Lieut. Coles has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate. Lieut. Coles left Bombay on the 17th ult. in H.M.S. Malabar for England. Lieut. Thomson is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 3rd Goorkhas, on probation.

Rifle Brigade. A telegram to the Times, dated Calcutta, April 4, states that "Col. Newdigate, of the Rifle Brigade, has been appointed to the command of a brigade in Kurum." Lieut. Mildmay, 4th Batn., is a passenger to England in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult. Capt. Mansel has been appointed aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. J. Ross, C.B., commanding reserve division, Peshawar, with effect from Jan. 12. Lieut. F. H. J. Fergusson, 2nd Batn., will leave England on the 21st inst., en route to join the staff of Sir J. Fergusson, Bart., at Bombay. Capt. the Hon. C. D. Home, 1st Batn., reverts to regimental duty from the Staff of the Devonport District, where he has been employed as aide-de-camp to Lieut.-Gen. Hon. L. Smyth, C.B.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major R. Murphy has passed the lower standard in Hindostanee. The Pioneer says that it has been decided that the secretary of the principal medical officer of a division of the Army in India shall be considered as attached to the division, and not a personal staff officer of the principal medical officer. Should the principal medical officer be removed to another division, the secretary does not accompany him, but continues his post under the successor. We learn that in consequence of a despatch from Lord Lytton requesting that the order for Surg.-Major O. Barnett to revert to his departmental duty might be withdrawn, it has been decided to retain him on the seconded list for so long as Lord Lytton may hold the Viceroyalty of India. An Indian up-country paper lately published a report to the effect that Surg.-Gen. J. H. Kerr-Innes' donation batta for crossing the frontier in the late Afghan war amounted to above rs. 12,000. A correspondent now writes to say that Surg.-Gen. Kerr-Innes has merely received the six months' pay of a colonel, viz., at the rate of rs. 670-15 per month. The death of Surg.-Major R. H. Bolton is announced by telegram from Candahar, Afghanistan. The deceased, who was 40 years of age, entered the Department Sept. 30, 1863, and became Surg.-Major April 28, 1876. He embarked for the Gold Coast with the 2nd Batn. 23rd Fusiliers, and had medical charge of the left wing throughout the second phase of the Ashantee campaign of 1874 (medal with clasp). The Malta correspondent of the Evening Post announces the death of Surg. W. J. Moylan, which occurred on board H.M.S. Euphrates, whilst on passage to India. The deceased entered the Army April 1, 1871. The following appointments have been made in India :—Deputy-Surg.-Gen. H. B. Hassard, P.M.O. Khyber Division, to be P.M.O. Cabul Field Force, vice Officiating Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. H. Porter, deceased; Officiating Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. A. Hanbury, M.B., P.M.O. Reserve Division, Peshawur, to be P.M.O. Khyber Division, vice Hassard; Surg.-Major A. M. Tippetts to be P.M.O., Reserve Division, Peshawur, vice Hanbury, and to have the temporary rank of Deputy-Surg.-Gen. from the date of his taking up the duties of the appointment." The following officers have been granted leave of absence from India to England :—Surg.-Majors T. Kingston, M.D., J. J. d'Altera, E. L. Low, M.B., E. M. D. FitzGerald, M.D., J. Candy, M.D., to England, on medical certificate; and Surg.-Major I. Bourke, M.B., six months, on private affairs. The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Malabar, which sailed from Bombay on the 17th ult., viz. :—Surgs.-Major J. Kellie, E. Low, W. Cattell, T. S. Hollingsworth, I. Bourke, E. M. D. Fitzgerald, J. Candy, F. E. Scanlan, and W. D. Wilson, and Surg. W. B. Miller.

Veterinary Department. The Lahore paper says :—"Veterinary surgeons in charge of transport animals will in future get a staff allowance of rs. 75 per month for the work. Hitherto nothing in the shape of remuneration has been given. The veterinary service is the best abused and worst paid of any in this country." First-class Vet.-Surg. J. Baldeck has been posted for Aldershot for duty with the Royal Horse Artillery, on transfer to the department from the 3rd Hussars. Vet.-Surg. G. Aitken has taken up duty with the 16th Lancers at Brighton on appointment.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

Suffolk Artillery. Capt. R. H. Pennell, senior captain of the regiment, died at Dane John, Canterbury, on the 2nd inst. The deceased had been many years in the regiment, in which he obtained his battery in May, 1866.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Derbyshire. Capt. M'Taggart, 14th Hussars, has resigned his appointment as adjutant, and is to be succeeded by Capt. Lucas, 3rd Dragoon Guards.

West Kent. The adjutancy is vacant, by the death of Capt. Bury, which occurred at Wateringbury, Kent, on the 1st inst., at the age of 39 years. Capt. Bury had held the appointment since June 1, 1870.

Northamptonshire (Sherwood Rangers). Capt. Bellwood, 3rd Dragoon Guards, is about to be appointed adjutant.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) Rifles. It is announced in the orders of this regiment that every colour-serjeant who shall produce at the end of the year 125 efficients, shall be entitled to a prize. The 37th is a well-ordered battalion, and it would appear from this that they intend to maintain their efficient strength, which last year reached nearly 1,000. Guard-mounting, the mode of posting and relieving sentries, and the bayonet exercise are now part of the weekly instruction, and might with great advantage be introduced into other regiments.

38th Middlesex (Artists') Rifles. A match with the Martini-Henry was fired on Wednesday at the Scrubs between teams of ten men of this regiment and ten of the Queen's Westminster, resulting in the defeat of the latter by two points—817 against 819; usual Queen's ranges, seven shots. The highest score (94) was made by Pte. T. W. Wilson (Artists), and the next highest by Pte. Fletcher, of the same regiment, and Serjt. Wilson, Queen's, 90 each.

The Indian Army.

2nd Bengal Cavalry. The command has become vacant, by the retirement of Col. O. Wilkinson, C.B., who was appointed March 11, 1871.

7th Bengal Cavalry. Major J. L. Ferris has been moved up a grade, in succession to Major H. C. Creak, Major J. Hay succeeding him as squadron-commander.

10th Bengal Cavalry. Sowar Bhugwan Sing and Sowar Zeadeh Khan, of the 18th Bengal Cavalry, have also been admitted to the 3rd Class of the Order of Merit, the former for gallant conduct whilst carrying the mails from Pezwan to Jugdulluck, when much anxiety was felt about Gen. Hugh Gough's column; and the other man for conspicuous gallantry in attacking single-handed a party of marauders between Mandoria and Chapri, in the Khurum Valley, on Nov. 20, and compelling them to abandon their plunder and disperse.

11th Bengal Cavalry. We quote the following extract from the Gazette of India :—"His Excellency the Governor-General in Council is pleased to admit Ressaldar Bahawaldin Khan, 11th (Prince of Wales's Own) Bengal Lancers, to the 3rd Class of the Order of Merit, for conspicuous gallantry at the storming of a fortified serai near Cabul, on Dec. 13, 1879."

13th Bengal Cavalry. A telegram from Calcutta, dated April 4, states that "a fire has occurred in the stables of the 13th Bengal Cavalry. Fifteen horses were burnt to death and 50 were injured, while a large quantity of arms and accoutrements was destroyed. It seems certain that the fire was accidental."

14th Bengal Cavalry. Col. Ross has been confirmed in command of the regiment. For conspicuous gallantry in action in the Chardeh Valley, on Dec. 11 last, the name of a native officer, Jemadar Gopal Sing—the brave fellow has since died of his wounds—is to be placed in the list of those on whom the Third Class of the Order of Merit has been bestowed. A non-commissioned officer of the same regiment, Duffadar Kanhiya Lala, has been granted the same Order.

18th Bengal Cavalry. It is stated that the officer commanding has applied for sanction for his regiment to be equipped as lancers, and that the question of the equipment of the whole of the Bengal Cavalry with the same weapon is at present under the consideration of the authorities. (See 10th Bengal Cavalry.)

5th Bengal N.I. The command of the regiment in Afghanistan, now on service, has become vacant, Col. W. J. P. Barlow having been obliged to resign, in consequence of ill-health. Col. Barlow was appointed Feb. 18, 1873.

6th Bengal N.I. Major A. G. Handcock, wing-commander, assist.-adjt.-gen, Candahar Field Force, has been appointed as assist.-adjt.-gen. on the Bengal Establishment.

10th Bengal N.I. A wing of the regiment has been ordered from Barrackpore to Cachar.

18th Bengal N.I. A wing of the regiment has left Julpigoorie for Golaghat, to be added to the reserve force in Cachar.

19th Bengal N.I. arrived at Candahar on March 4.

29th Bengal N.I. Extract from the Indian Government gazette :—"Col. J. J. H. Gordon, C.B., commandant, 29th Punjab N.I., to command a brigade in the field, vice Brigdr.-Gen. J. A. Tytler, C.B., V.C., deceased. While so employed, Col. Gordon will have the temporary rank of Brigdr.-Gen, 2nd class." Brevet Lieut.-Col. G. N. Channer, V.C., has rejoined his regiment with the Kurum Field Force, from leave in England.

31st Bengal N.I. Col. H. M. Wemyss, second-in-command 39th N.I., has been appointed commandant, vice Col. E. G. Langmore, retired.

40th Bengal N.I. We understand that Capt. Hutchinson, wing-commander, is the likely candidate for the adjutancy of the Mussoorie Volunteers, which has been vacant since the death of Capt. Crofton, 60th Rifles.

41st Bengal N.I. Capt. H. M Rose is officiating as a D.A.Q.M.G. in India.

44th Bengal N.I. A telegram from Calcutta to the Times, dated April 4, says :—"There is reason to hope that the Naga war may now be considered at an end. The Konoma Nagas have given in and surrendered their arms, and their fortifications have been occupied by the 44th N.I."

Bengal Medical Service. Extract from Indian Government gazette :—"The under-mentioned officers of the Bengal Army are permitted to retire from the Service, from the dates specified :—Surg.-Gen. J. F. Beatson, M.D., C.I.E., March 29, 1880; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. F. F. Allen, C.B., March 31, 1880." Surg.-Major J. M. Cunningham has been appointed Surg.-Gen., in succession to Dr. Beatson.

4th Goorkhas. The following announcement has appeared in the Indian papers :—"At Thull, Kurum Valley, on the morning of Feb. 14, 1880, Brigdr-Gen. J. A. Tytler, C.B., V.C., commanding a brigade, Kurum Field Force, and commandant 4th Goorkha Regiment. Very deeply regretted by all ranks of the regiment he commanded for 16 years, and by all who served under him whilst Brigdr.-Gen. in the Afghan war of 1878-79-80." Capt. Gordon, Bengal S.C., has been attached to the regiment, as a temporary measure.

5th Punjab Cavalry. In his despatch relating to the action before Cabul on Dec. 11, Gen. Roberts says :—"The 5th Punjab Cavalry, under Lieut.-Col. Williams, again distinguished themselves, Majors F. Hammond and J. C. Stewart both leading successful charges." Col. B. Williams will shortly proceed to join the Saharunpore depôt, on army remount work. Col. Williams has the reputation of being one of the best judges of horseflesh in the Service.

1st Punjab Infantry. Capt. Howe Showers, whose death we announced last week, was an officer of great promise, bearing a name well known in India for every soldier-like quality. He was the son of the late Major-Gen. St. G. Showers, who commanded a brigade at the siege of Delhi, and the nephew of another General of the same name. Educated at Wellington College, Capt. Showers went to India in 1861, and shortly afterwards joined the 104th Fusiliers, of which regiment he soon became adjutant. On receiving his company Capt. Showers entered the Staff Corps, and was posted to the Central India Horse, which regiment he left in 1872 for the 1st Punjab Infantry. In 1877 he was appointed a garrison instructor in Bengal, but threw up the post in order to join his corps on service. Here his talents as a linguist and a draughtsman brought him into notice, and he was speedily placed by Sir Donald Stewart in the Intelligence Department. Accompanied by a handful of men, Capt. Showers was in the habit of traversing unknown routes, returning with plans full of invaluable information. On more than one occasion he was attacked either by the Kakars or by some kindred clans, escaping only by his personal valour and skill at arms. Recklessly gallant, he has now fallen, and, though her Majesty has lost many brave and good men in the course of the operations in Afghanistan, none better or braver has met a soldier's death than Capt. Howe Showers.

6th Punjab Infantry marched out of Abbottabad 770 strong for service in Afghanistan on March 5. This regiment is short of its complement by three British officers, a large proportion out of a total of seven.

29th Madras N.I. Lieut. S. W. Jervis, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

11th Bombay N.I. We regret to hear, through the medium of a Poona paper, that Major Fulton has met with a serious accident, through his horse rolling over with him, by which he sustained a severe injury to his right arm and shoulder, and is confined to his bed, being unable to move without assistance.

25th Bombay N.I., which arrived lately at Bombay from Aden, has not been sent to Belgaum, as at first ordered, but is to be stationed at Bombay. The Times of India says :—"This regiment occupies a high place for proficiency in shooting, and it would probably have been selected for active service had there not been of late a great deal of sickness among the men."

INDIA.

The following alterations have been made in the command and distribution of the force now in Cabul and on the Khyber line :—"1. The Second Division of the Cabul Field Force, hitherto under the command of Major-Gen. Bright, C.B., will be broken up. 2. The Reserve Division, under Major-Gen. Ross, C.B., will also be broken up, and absorbed into the line of communications. 3. The force in Cabul, under Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Roberts, will be divided into two divisions. The 1st Division will be under Sir F. Roberts's immediate command, and the 2nd Division under Major-Gen. Ross, C.B. 4. Major-Gen. Bright, C.B., is appointed inspector-gen. of the line of communications, and will command all troops thereon stationary, in movable columns or passing along the line. Major-Gen. From Safed Sung to Bootkak inclusive, under Brigdr.-Gen. Hill. 7. The General Staff for Major-Gen. Bright's command will consist of Col. Wemyss, Deputy-Adjt. and Qrmr.-Gen.; Major Thompson, Asst.-Adjt.-Gen.; Major Creagh, Asst.-Qrmr.-Gen.; Lieut. Maisey, Deputy Asst. Qmr.-Gen. 8. The Divisional Staff under Major-Gen. Roberts (5th Fusiliers) will proceed to Cabul, to command a brigade in the 2nd Division. 11. Brigdr.-Gen. Arbuthnot, C.B., will command the movable columns at Jellalabad and Safed Sung. 12. The force under Sir F. Roberts in Cabul will be styled the 'Cabul Field Force,' and the force under Major-Gen. Bright will be styled the 'Khyber Line Force.'"

Brigdr.-Gen. H. F. Brooke, half-pay, late 10th Regt., Adjutant-General, Bombay Army, and Brigdr.-Gen. H. H. A. Wood, C.B., Bombay S.C., have been detailed for brigade commands with the forces in Southern Afghanistan.

A Quetta correspondent writes :—"The brigades to relieve Gen. Stewart are to be composed as follows :—1st Brigade—The 66th Foot, the 1st Grenadiers, and the 19th Bombay N.I. 2nd Brigade—The 7th Fusiliers, the 16th Bombay N.I., and Jacob's Rifles. The 10th Native Light Infantry and 4th Rifles will garrison this place."

The following appear in the Bombay General Orders :—Capt. Watling, D.A.Q.M.G., Northern Division, Bombay Army, has proceeded to Quetta for duty with the 1st Bombay Division. Major A. R. Heyland, Bombay S.C. (brigade-major, Deesa), to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G., in succession to Capt. J. T. Watling, who has been appointed to the Staff of the Candahar Field Force. Capt. J. M. Heath, Bombay S.C. (wing-officer 26th N.I.), to officiate as brigade-major, in succession to Major Heyland. Major Heyland is posted to the Northern Division, and Capt. Heath to the Deesa brigade.

Major A. G. Handcock, wing-commander 6th N.L.I., A.A.G., Candahar Field Force, has been appointed A.A.G. on the Bengal Establishment, vice Col. A. G. Forsyth, retired.

It is rumoured that Lieut.-Gen. J. M. Primrose, C.B., is likely to succeed to the command at Candahar, on the advance of Sir D. Stewart.

The following appointments have been made on the Bombay Staff, in succession to Lieut.-Gen. Primrose, C.S.I., proceeded on field service :—Brigdr.-Gen. G. T. Brice (commanding Belgaum Brigade) to officiate on the Divisional Staff. Brevet Col. E. W. Bray, C.B., 4th Foot, to the Brigade Staff temporarily, with the rank of brigdr.-gen. whilst so employed. Brigdr.-Gen. Brice is posted to the Poona Division, and Brigdr.-Gen. Bray, C.B., to the Belgaum District.

We hear that the formation of a second division of the Reserve is probable, in the event of prolonged hostilities rendering it necessary, the command of which will be given to Brigdr.-Gen. J. I. Murray, C.B., Bengal S.C., now commanding the Lahore Division, with Major Dyson Lawrie, 34th Regt., as A.A.G.

THE "CARMICHAEL"
PORTABLE BOOT-TREE.

A want long felt has just been supplied by this most important invention. All sportsmen and military men know the great advantage of having both their long and short boots treed up every day, especially after they have been wet, but there is often great inconvenience in carrying about the boot-trees.

An officer in the 5th Lancers has lately hit upon the idea that an India-rubber tree, which, with ease, can be carried in the pocket, can, when put inside the boot, be inflated, filling out the boot tightly, and so making it an impossibility to shrink.

For officers on active service, autumn manœuvres, or whenever it is impossible to carry wooden trees, this invention will be invaluable.

This invention is patented for Great Britain and other countries.

Orders should be sent as early as possible, accompanied by an old boot as a pattern, to

TIC-SANO.

IT is a FACT, positively and earnestly asserted, that medical men, after trying every remedy in vain, have at once relieved the agonising pains of the following disorders by the use of a VEGETABLE MEDICINE which has been brought to their notice, and testimonials have been received which prove this statement is not a false one, but can be easily verified. This medicine is

TIC-SANO—which will always give INSTANT RELIEF in TIC-SANO.—RHEUMATISM,
TIC-SANO.—NEURALGIA,
TIC-SANO.—GOUT,
TIC-SANO.—SCIATICA,
TIC-SANO.—LUMBAGO,
TIC-SANO.—GRAVEL,
TIC-SANO.—Nervous and Sick Headaches; and will effect a cure in a very short time. In chronic cases of many years' standing, it has, when taken regularly, effected a complete cure, even in persons of advanced age, when the case had been pronounced hopeless.

From R. A. Allbut, Esq., L.R.C.P., Ed., L.S.A., Lond.; Physician to the Leeds Dispensary for Diseases of the Skin:

"Although I have, as a rule, a very great objection to all secret nostrums, still, for once, I must award due praise to a medicine which comes under that category. I find your Tic-Sano to be a very valuable remedy in neuralgia and rheumatic pains. I also find it most successful in many painful menstrual disorders, especially in dysmenorrhœa."

From J. L. Crombie, Esq., M.D., Berwick:

"I have now given your Tic-Sano a fair trial, and am satisfied that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of a neuralgic nature, and one that I should not like to be without, as these complaints are very prevalent in this neighbourhood."

A London M.D. writes:—"The value of Tic-Sano is enhanced by its leaving no ill-effects, no stomach derangement, &c."

TIC-SANO purifies the blood, strengthens the system, and so wards off one-half the diseases the flesh is heir to.

Beware of Imitations, and ASK for TIC-SANO.

Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1880.

IT is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable features of our Army that most Staff Officers imagine themselves made of totally different material to that of which the rest of the Army is composed. It is very evident that Staff Officers appear to be not as other men, and although in reality it may be so, nevertheless it is almost pitiable that they themselves, by their conduct, should impress this opinion upon those around them. The definition of what a Staff Officer should be, as regards his bearing and demeanour, is admirably expressed in Sir Garnet Wolseley's "Soldier's Pocket-book;" and if officers in Staff employ would but digest thoroughly the injunctions contained in that work, their duty would be pleasanter to those about them, as well as to themselves. "Some Staff Officers," writes the author of the work alluded to, "acquire a notoriety by brusqueness and incivility. Where such men are tolerated, it is always to the detriment of the Army. The motto for the Staff should be, 'Affability and reticence.'" Alas! it is only too often the case that an ordinary man who, by dint of hard work, passes through the Staff College, commences his subsequent career with an overweening appreciation of his superiority to the generality of military mankind. Such a man sometimes climbs the Staff ladder successfully, but it is by sheer plodding that he is enabled to do so. If he gains the higher rungs of the Staff ladder, it will for a surety be found that with his years his self-sufficiency increases, and he will cause it to be universally felt that he is virtually the head of the Military district to which he belongs, although there is a General Officer commanding it. Moreover, should any commanding officers of regiments or others show the slightest disinclination to grasp this fact, his memoranda and other official correspondence with them will very soon set them right, and act as a preventive to any future misapprehension. There are, of course, men who graduate at the Staff College from a pure love of the Service, who seek Staff employment because it opens out to them a larger field of duties than that embraced by regimental officers, who gain distinction without having courted notoriety, and whose characters, "come weal, come woe," never alter. Such men as these do not stand upon their dignity, indeed, they hardly know the meaning of the word. They always have plenty of work to do, they do it, leaving a feeling of satisfaction on the minds of all with whom they come in contact, and generally they wear themselves out before their time comes to reap the higher rewards which could be bestowed upon them in the Service to which they belong, and which they adorn. It is much to be regretted that many Staff Officers do not thoroughly realise the positions they hold. They may be leading men in their respective districts, and it may be that nothing is done in those commands without their advice, and yet they are only holding important posts in different fractional portions of our Empire, which is by no means the greatest military empire in the world. With such pride in such appointments, how irrepressible would they be, if they held positions which rendered their fame world-wide? They would become very Alexanders, claiming kinship with the Gods! It must be clearly understood that we allude to pride in general behaviour, to what is commonly and perhaps vulgarly termed "swagger." There are times when the sweetest tempers and most equable dispositions may be ruffled, and may show by their conduct that they are so. Far be it from us to expect men in authority to be civil and pleasant when errors are made, duty neglected, or orders disobeyed; but surely we may reasonably maintain that Staff Officers should be courteous and affable in the general tenour of their ways, and in the every-day course of human affairs. When it is otherwise, it springs usually not only from the esteem in which certain Staff Officers hold themselves, but also from the adulation they receive from regimental officers and those around them. As soon as an officer dons Staff uniform, every one helps to spoil him by making too much of him, and it is only partly his own fault if he does not successfully resist the temptations to arrogance which beset his path. When an officer is at home in his department, there is method in all things; every subordinate works in his own sphere, without hurry or bustle, every document has its appointed place, every duty its specified time. To enter such a man's office is a matter of pleasure, and not a disagreeable duty. A stranger is received civilly, if not cordially, and although the tables may be covered with returns and papers of various kinds, yet his business receives prompt attention and consideration, and if what he requires can be done, it is at once accomplished, or if he seeks information, it is afforded him without delay. There is no waiting in an ante-room for perhaps hours, and then a hurried interview, followed by a curt dismissal, or, perhaps, a reference to some other department, as is the case in many instances. As a rule, it may safely be concluded that in all Staff and Garrison Offices where urbanity presides the routine of work will generally be best carried out, because it is the men who do not know their work who are usually given to flurry and hot haste. We would, moreover, particularly impress upon the minds of Staff Officers generally a consideration of the littleness of little things, and urge upon them the necessity of "affability and reticence," which, after all, only form a part of that valuable virtue styled common-sense.

We understand that Colonel Stanley, had he remained in office, had intended to send all Militia candidates for commissions in the Line for two months' training at Sandhurst, after passing the qualifying literary examination. They were to wear their Militia uniforms, and to mess apart from the cadets. The notion is not a bad one, and is worthy of the attention of Colonel Stanley's successor.

The Brigade Depôt at York is to be formed on the 1st proximo.

Speculation is rife in military circles as to who will be the successor of Colonel Stanley and his movable subordinates at the War Office. No decision has, however, yet been come to on the subject, save with respect to Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who will revert to his old post as Financial Secretary. We have reason to believe that Major-General Sir Henry Havelock-Allan, V.C., would not be averse to a berth in Pall Mall, and there can be no doubt that the Army would much prefer him to a half-informed amateur military reformer like Mr. Holms, for instance. Sir H. Havelock-Allan's advanced views on political subjects have procured him a certain amount of abuse by officers, but every one is willing to concede that he is animated by a sincere desire to promote the welfare and efficiency of the Service. His abilities, too, are considerable, and few soldiers have studied their profession more earnestly, or have gained such extensive experience as he has. We therefore hope that those entrusted with the redistribution of place in the War Office will not overlook the claims of Sir Henry Havelock-Allan, V.C.

A distinguished-service reward of £50 per annum has fallen vacant by the death of Captain T. Hoban, Quartermaster on the Half-pay List, late 13th Light Infantry.

We believe that the statement of the Irish Times will obtain official confirmation, and that General Sir Arthur Cunynghame, G.C.B., will be Sir John Michel's successor in the command in Ireland, in August next, for a feeling prevails pretty generally that Sir A. Cunynghame was not treated with proper consideration when he was so suddenly recalled some time ago from the Cape, on his representing the difficulties of the situation, and the danger which we should run by taking the field with an insufficient force.

Lieutenant-General H. Hamilton, C.B., notwithstanding his recent promotion, is to be allowed to retain his command of the Cork District for another year. He was appointed in April, 1877, and entered upon his duties on the same day as Lord Alexander Russell, just removed from Dover, and the Hon. L. Smyth, who has been deprived of the Devonport appointment, on attaining the higher rank.

Colonel W. Bellairs, unattached, has been appointed colonel on the Staff commanding the troops in Natal and the Transvaal.

The regimental colonelcy vacant by the death of General G. Staunton, C.B., 92nd Highlanders, is, we understand, to be given to Lieutenant-General the Hon. R. Rollo, C.B., General M. K. Atherley, who was transferred a few weeks ago from the 109th to the 93rd Highlanders, being offered transfer to his old regiment, the Gordon Highlanders.

Surgeon-General H. H. Massy, M.D., C.B., is about to retire on the pension of his rank.

Captain F. G. Firth, Deputy-Commissary, on the Retired List of the Commissariat and Transport Department, who was for some years on the Staff of the Army Service Corps at head-quarters, and has since his retirement filled the Deputy-Governorship of Coldbath Fields Prison, has been appointed Governor of the County Prison at Dorchester.

A comparison of the Army and Navy Budgets of the six Great Powers of Europe show that, though the forces of Great Britain have a large empire to guard, the sums spent for military and naval purposes are not near so high as those expended by Russia or by France. The latter country disburses the inordinately large amount of £37,315,000, the figures being taken from last year's estimates. Russia follows, with £31,695,000; next comes England, with £26,330,000; Germany requires £23,000,000, Italy £12,160,000, and Austria £11,410,000, for military and naval expenditure. France, again, taxes herself to the utmost of her capacity for the sake of keeping up a large army and an imposing fleet, quite out of proportion to her requirements, exacting for this purpose alone, from a population of about 37 millions, a contribution of 19·9s. per head. In England, with a population of 34 millions, the proportion is 15·3s. per head, which, for the reason already stated, cannot by any means be considered too high. In the remaining countries, Germany, Italy, Russia, and Austria, with populations of 44, 28, 80, and 38 millions, the proportion per head is 10·3s., 8·7s., 7·9s., and 5·8s. respectively.

Deputy-Surgeon-General Sir A. D. Home, V.C., K.C.B., has been appointed principal medical officer of the Madras Army, vice Surgeon-General T. Crawfod, M.D., transferred to Indian Army Head-quarterrs.

The fortifications of Spandau (the Prussian Woolwich Arsenal) are reported to have now been completed. Its works have been considerably extended and strengthened, and in their present state they may be said to form one of the strongest fortresses of Germany, the importance of which, though it has no frontier to guard, is greatly enhanced by the immense amount of war material stored there. Another bulwark of the empire, at its eastern frontier, Posen, is also rapidly advancing towards completion. It is expected that its nine large and three smaller works will finished by 1883. In strength, Posen, as designed, is by some cities considered superior to Metz. However that may be, we may be sure that the Germans will not err on the side of over-confidence, especially as they have on their eastern frontier a neighbour whose ill-concealed enmity may develop any day into open hostility.

Major-General the Hon. R. Monck is permitted to retain command of the troops at Shorncliffe, as a temporary measure, and has not vacated the appointment, as stated.

We hear that the Russian Government intends despatching a number of Army doctors abroad, to report upon the medical service in other countries. It is understood that particular attention will be paid to army hospitals in England, and the sanitary and hygienic regulations in force in our Army.

Captain J. de Lancey, 71st Highland Light Infantry, has been appointed temporary aide-de-camp to Major-General W. Hope, C.B., commanding the North British District.

The construction of barracks is carried on vigorously in Russia. Quite recently, no less than £4,500,000 was set aside for the purpose, the money required being taken from the fund which has been accumulating for years from the Military Exemption Tax, capitalised at from five to five-and-a-half per cent. In Moscow, monster barracks, of a frontage of 3,300 feet, have just been completed. The estimated cost was close upon £350,000, but a saving is said to have been affected of £60,000.

Lieutenant-Colonel R. R. Jones, R.A., has assumed the duties of officer commanding the Auxiliary Artillery in the Aberdeen District, vice Colonel G. K. Taylor, R.A., whose period of Staff service has expired.

Hitherto, for financial reasons, only one class of the Reserve and one class of the Landwehr of the French Army were called in each year. This year, however, and for the first time, the new military law will be applied in its whole extent. According to official statistics, the active army will then number 497,793 men, the Reserve (in two classes) 313,850 men and 2,850 officers, and the Landwehr about 149,000 men and 4,800 officers, bringing up the whole strength of the French Army to 968,000 men.

Lieutenant-General W. C. Hadden succeeds the late General W. E. D. Broughton on the List of Colonels Commandant of the corps of Royal Engineers. General Hadden is in receipt of a distinguished-service reward, which will fall vacant on his appointment.

Colonel H. T. Arbuthnot, R.A., relieved Colonel F. Close, R.A., on the 1st inst., as superintendent of the Royal Small-Arms Factory, Enfield; and on the same day, Colonel G. H. Fraser, R.A., was succeeded in his appointment as superintendent of the Royal Laboratory, Woolwich, by Lieutenant-Colonel F. Lyon, R.A.

Brevet Major G. A. Furse, 42nd Highlanders, is to retain his appointment as Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General at head-quarters; and Major W. F. Butler, C.B., does not return to his former position, on arrival home from the Cape.

The Committee sitting at St. Petersburg to consider the question of the reorganisation of the Russian Army, together with the future uniforms to be worn, have decided, according to the Novosti, for the early reorganisation of the cavalry, and the adoption of the Austrian uniform. Its present strength will be maintained; but in place of generals of division, there will be commanders of brigades, the latter being incorporated with the reserve. On the whole, the Russian cavalry will consist of four divisions of twelve regiments each. As regards the uniform, that of the Hungarian Hussars will be adopted in its entirety, with these exceptions, that the Hungarian caps and czacos will be replaced by the Russian sheepskin caps, the long Austrian sword being also exchanged for the curved Cossack sabre. The Russian Uhlans will likewise have this sabre, but in all other respects they will be dressed and accoutred like the Austrians. As regards the lances, Uhlans, Hussars, and Cossacks will be armed with the Austrian pattern. Finally, all the Cossacks will have the national costume, as worn by the great Russians.

Alexandra, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., left Malta April 6, for a cruise of three or four weeks, visiting Naples, Syracuse, Messina, Brindisi, Avlono, Corfu, and Zante. Letters for the Alexandra should be sent to Brindisi, care of H.B.M.'s Consul, so as to arrive there not later than April 16; to Corfu, care of H.B.M.'s Consul, so as to arrive there not later than April 26; after that, to Malta.

Assistance, Capt. Claude E. Buckle, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday from the Channel Islands, with detachments of Royal Artillery.

Cambridge, Capt. Le Hunte Ward. On Monday afternoon, a seaman named James Rowe, belonging to the Cambridge, hired a small sailing boat to go to the Curaçoa in the Sound, but soon after he had left the ship for the shore a squall capsized the boat. The Whiting, gunboat, bringing in the liberty men from the Sound, which was coming in, sent her boat and rescued the man, otherwise he must have been drowned.

Charybdis, Capt. C. Hotham. Among other news from the China station is the saving of the crew of a wrecked merchantman by the boats of the Charybdis. The ship went ashore at the entrance to Nagasaki Harbour during a heavy gale, and soon began to show signs of breaking up and becoming a total wreck, but thanks to the services of the boats of the Charybdis, the master and his wife and family, consisting of four daughters, and the whole of the crew, were safely taken off the wreck.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Condor, Com. E. F. Day, left Salonica on the 23rd for Katerina Scala to embark H.B.M.'s Consul-General, Mr. Blunt, and Col. Synge, but, owing to a heavy surf, communication was not possible, left Katerina Scala on the 24th, and proceeded to Leptoro Khori, where she embarked H.B.M.'s Consul-General and Col. Synge, arriving at Salonica March 25. She arrived at the Piræus on the 6th inst. to relieve the Coquette.

Dragon, Com. Cæsar Hawkins, has been ordered from Mauritius to Madagascar, the unsettled state of affairs in the latter island, says the Standard, calling for the protection of British interests. The origin of the disturbance is the forcible seizure of a chief by the commander of a French vessel-of-war, the chief having destroyed the property of a trader of French nationality at St. Augustine Bay.

Elk, Com. H. Clanchy, was at Buenos Ayres awaiting orders on Feb. 28.

Euphrates, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg, arrived at Suez on Tuesday, en route to Bombay.

Flirt, Com. Brackenbury, C.M.G., called at Vigo on the 8th inst., on her way to the West Coast of Africa.

Flying Fish, now being got ready for sea at Sheerness, is ordered to be commissioned on the 15th inst.

Forward, Lieut.-Com. Brickdale, has orders to leave Monte Video for Maldonado, with the mails of April 26.

Garnet, Capt. Erskine, was at Monte Video on Feb. 27, and was to leave after the arrival of the mail due on Feb. 28 for the Falkland Islands, returning to Maldonado in April. Letters will be forwarded to the Garnet at Chupat.

Growler, Com. C. E. Wilcox, which left England in 1869, and was repaired at Hong Kong and recommissioned in 1877, will soon be home now to pay off, as she left Hong Kong for England, viâ Singapore, on Feb. 12. She has the same boilers now as were put on board when she was launched in 1868, so that she will require extensive repairs. —Hampshire Telegraph. The Growler arrived at Galle on March 11, and left on the 16th for Aden.

Hector, Capt. Richard Carter, who we stated last week has obtained command of this ship, entered the Navy in 1844, and served as acting mate in the Daphne, 18, Capt. Edward G. Fanshawe, in the Pacific from Jan. 9, 1851, until paid off in October, 1852. On Dec. 6 following, he was appointed to the Furious, 16, frigate, Capt. G. C. M. Loring, fitting at Portsmouth for the Mediterranean, and on Oct. 22, 1853, was promoted to lieutenant. On Jan. 17, 1854, he was appointed to the Euryalus, 51, Capt. George Ramsay, fitting at Chatham, and on Feb. 14, 1855, was transferred to the Nankin, 50, Capt. the Hon. Keith Stewart, also at Chatham, fitting for the East Indies, and returned to England and was paid off early in 1859. On May 13 of the year last named, he was appointed to the Emerald, 51, iron frigate, Capt. Arthur Cumming, fitting at Sheerness for the Channel Squadron, which ship was flagship for a short time of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, K.C.B., at the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa, and was afterwards employed again with the Channel Squadron, into which ship he was promoted, June 24, 1862, to the rank of commander. His appointment to the second captaincy of the Emerald is dated three days afterwards, and on Oct. 30, 1863, he was paid off after a servitude of more than four years and five months. He commanded the St. Vincent, 26, training-ship for boys at Portsmouth, from April 24, 1866, until July 20, 1869, when he was superseded, having been promoted to post-rank on the 1st of the previous month. He was not again employed until March 10, 1874, when he obtained command of the Spartan, 8, screw sloop, on the North American and West India station, which he brought home and paid off in May, 1875. From the following July until August, 1876, he commanded the Repulse, 12, flagship in the Pacific successively of Rear-Admirals the Hon. A. A. L. P. Cochrane, C.B., and George Hancock, when, at his own request, he was superseded. He subsequently commanded from June, 1877, until paid off in the spring of 1879, the Volage, 18, on the south-east coast of America.

Himalaya, Capt. Harry W. Brent, at Devonport, refitting, has been placed in dry dock in Keyham Yard for overhaul. Capt. Brent has proceeded on leave of absence.

Humber, Com. Way, arrived at Spithead on Thursday morning from Sheerness, and after embarking naval supernumeraries for the West Coast of Africa, men for the 1st Dragoon Guards at the Cape, and men belonging to the 7th Brigade for Mauritius, proceeded on her voyage in the evening.

Impregnable, Capt. R. Bradshaw, C.B. An officer's servant, named Lucas, belonging to the training-ship Impregnable, was drowned at Devonport on Sunday afternoon. He and a companion hired a sailing-boat, but had not left the landing-place more than five minutes before a gust of wind capsized the boat off the Victualling Yard. The other man, who could swim, was saved.

Inflexible. The whole of the armour having been affixed to the fore-turret of the Inflexible, the turning machinery has been tried for the first time at Portsmouth. The turret was estimated to weigh 320 tons, and it was rotated by hydraulic power in one minute and eight seconds, and reversed in one minute ten seconds.

Liberty, Lieut. G. O'Connor, has taken up her moorings at Plymouth, ready for summer cruising.

Lively, Lieut. C. Le Strange, flying the flag of Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, Superintendent of the Naval Reserves, remains on the Galway coast.

Malabar, Capt. John F. G. Grant, arrived at Malta from Port Said on Tuesday.

Meda. The late small addition to the Fleet, the surveying schooner Meda, experienced very heavy weather on her passage to Madeira, en route to Australia. She arrived at Madeira on March 22 rather damaged by the gales she had experienced, and had to make good defects before again putting to sea.—Hampshire Telegraph. The Meda sailed again on March 27.

Nautilus, Lieut. A. Blennerhasset, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Tuesday, for a short cruise, and afterwards returned between the island and main.

Osborne, Com. Lord Charles Beresford, will proceed to Flushing on 15th inst., to accompany the Victoria and Albert to Queenborough.

Philomel, Com. H. R. Berners, succeeded on March 6 in towing the Cunard liner Batavia afloat in the Straits off Perim, after that vessel had been two days ashore. The Batavia had to throw part of her cargo overboard. She proceeded to Bombay.

Revenge, Capt. C. M. Buckle. Rear-Admiral Richard Vesey Hamilton, C.B., who, we have already announced, has been appointed junior officer on the coast of Ireland, in the place of Vice-Admiral W. M. Dowell, C.B., promoted, was born in 1829, and entered the Navy in 1843. He served as mate in the Excellent, Capt. Henry D. Chads, C.B., from Sept. 12, 1849, until appointed Feb. 28, 1850, to the Assistance, discovery ship, Capt. Erasmus Ommanney, from which ship, on Feb. 16, 1852, he was transferred to the Resolute, 2, Capt. Henry Kellett, C.B., his commission as lieutenant being dated back to Oct. 11, 1851. He remained in the Resolute until 1854. While attached to the Resolute, he addressed his commanding officer thus:—"Beechy Island, Aug. 14, 1852. Sir,—On the 11th inst., Messrs. Domville, Alston, and myself, walked to Caswell's Tower. At the foot of it, facing the south-east, and about 300 yards from the beach, we found the remains of an old Esquimaux encampment, consisting of about 30 ruined huts. One of Edwards's small potato-cases attracted our attention, and on searching we discovered several of Goldner's preserved-meat canisters, seven or eight wine bottles, a fireplace, and a small well, the bottom of it was lined with small stones. A pathway of large, flat stones led to the well. No cairns or documents were found. These articles evidently belonged to some of Sir John Franklin's party, most probably a shooting party. I then ascended the tower, which is about the same height as Beechy Sound, but much steeper. Neither cairns nor documents were found. Five bears were seen during our walk; one of them was severely wounded by Mr. Domville. The land was very barren—a little moss and sorrel was the only vegetation seen." He served in the Desperate, 8, screw, Com. Richard D. White, in the Baltic, from Jan. 16, 1855, until Feb. 26, 1856, when he was appointed to the command of the Haughty, 2, gunboat, from which he was promoted to the rank of commander, Aug. 10, 1857. He commanded the Hydra, 6, paddle-sloop, on the West Coast of Africa, and on the West India and North America station, from June 4, 1858, until July 16, 1862, when he was transferred to the command of the Vesuvius, 6, paddle-sloop, on the station last-named, and in her returned to England, and was paid off Nov. 8, 1864, his post-commission being dated back to Jan. 27, 1862. He commanded the Sphinx, 6, also, on the West India and North America station, from April 27, 1865, until April 17, 1868; and the Achilles, 26, Coastguard ship at Portland, from April 12, 1870, until May 15, 1873, when he was transferred to the command of the Indus, guard-ship of the Steam Reserve, at Devonport, which ship he joined on the 30th of the same month, under the flag of the Admiral-Superintendent, Sir William King Hall, K.C.B., and remained until appointed, March 15, 1875, captain-superintendent of Pembroke Dockyard, from which post he was advanced to flag-rank, Sept. 27, 1877. He was nominated C.B. May 29, 1875. He was subsequently Director of Naval Ordnance.

Swallow, Com. J. B. Warren, which arrived at Monte Video on Jan. 10 from the Cape of Good Hope, remains as senior officer during the absence of the Garnet.

Sylvia, Com. Pelham Aldrich, which left England as long ago as Feb. 1874, and was recommissioned at Hong Kong in May, 1877, will be very shortly ordered home to pay off. The Sylvia was launched at Woolwich in 1866, and has been constantly employed since then. She received new boilers in 1873, and is now in need of a thorough overhaul. She will not arrive in England until towards the end of the year in all probability, for she is to come home by way of the Cape of Good Hope, and it is not improbable that she may be called upon to survey one or two doubtful points on that station on her passage.—Hampshire Telegraph.

Tamar, Capt. W. H. Liddell, was to leave Jamaica on March 26 for Barbaboes, and is now about due at Portsmouth.

Torch, Com. W. H. Selby. Letters for the Torch should be sent to Barcelona, addressed to the care of H.B.M.'s Consul, so as to arrive not later than May 6; to Marseilles, addressed to the care of H.B.M.'s Consul, so as to arrive not later than May 12; then to Malta.

Tyne, Com. J. E. Stokes, arrived at Suez from Trincomalee on the 8th inst., and was to leave for England to-morrow.

Victor Emanuel, Comdre. T. Smith. There were three courts-martial on board the Victor Emanuel on Feb. 11. Drunkenness, desertion, and theft in one case, and absence without leave and contempt towards a superior in another, gave two seamen each six months' imprisonment with hard labour; and drinking to an extent to produce illness cost a warrant officer six months' seniority.

Victoria and Albert, Capt. F. Thomson, will embark her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and suite, at Flushing on the 16th inst., and proceed to Chatham.

Wivern, Com. J. G. Jones, left Malta on the 4th inst. on her passage to Hong Kong, viâ the Suez Canal.

Woodlark, 3, Com. P. C. Johnstone, was inspected in Barnpool on Tuesday by Capt. T. Le H. Ward.

Wye, Staff Com. Sarratt, left Devonport on Tuesday, and will meet the Channel Squadron at Gibraltar on the 10th inst., according to her orders, and will there transfer her cargo of provisions and ammunition to the ships and the depôts on shore.

Zephyr, which was recently paid off at Chatham on her arrival home from the North American station, is ordered to be sent to Sheerness to be repaired.

The Admiralty have awarded medals for long service and good conduct to the following men:—George Witticombe, stoker, of the Enchantress; William G. T. Parish, yeoman of signals, of the Bellerophon; Henry Moyle, private Royal Marines, of the Implacable; Alfred J. Callaway, chief gunner's mate, of the Dædalus; Benjamin Roberts, head krooman, of the Dido; John Stevens and Frederick J. Torpey, quartermaster, of the Téméraire and Express; John Lynch, commissioned boatman, Thomas Brien and James Pitts, boatmen, of the Coastguard.

The Admiralty has been pleased to direct, by Fleet Circular No. 5, N.S., that, whenever a money-chest is returned into store from a ship in a defective condition, through the loss of any of the keys, the superintendent of the yard or depôt at which the chest is landed is to ascertain (by applying to the commanding officer of the ship, if the information is not otherwise obtainable), to whose default the loss is due, and he is to report the facts to the Commander-in-Chief or senior officer, in order that the cost of altering the lock and making the keys complete may be charged against the officer in default. In future, before a money-chest is returned to a yard or depôt, the accountant officer of the ship is to obtain a receipt for it from the carpenter, stating whether the chest and its locks are in good condition and the keys are complete. When a survey is held, on the death or removal from any cause of the accountant officer during the ship's commission, a statement is to be made upon the report of survey whether the money-chests and their locks are in good condition, and the keys are complete.

ALTERATIONS IN INDIAN TROOP SERVICE.

It has been arranged between the Lords of the Admiralty and the Secretary of State for India that the following alterations in the arrangements of the Indian Troop Service shall take place from the termination of the present season (1879-80). Commuted rates of charge by the Admiralty will be substituted for direct charges in the case of the pay, wages, and allowances of the officers and crews of the five troopships, and the victualling of the crews and troops. The former will be rates per ship per day for the trooping and non-trooping season respectively, and will include travelling expenses at home; the latter will be rates per ration, and will include the cost of implements, mess utensils, and medicines. There is no longer a separate "India Branch" of the Transport Department, and after March 31, 1880, India will no longer be charged with the salaries of certain individuals, but will make fixed contributions towards the cost of the Transport Department and for pensions. The control of the Indian troop service, the record of its financial transactions, and the preparation of the accounts, estimates, and returns required by the India Office in connection therewith will, however, still rest with the Director of Transports, whose approval will therefore be as necessary as heretofore in the case of all expenditure not covered by the commuted rates. Certain descriptions of stores on board the troopships will cease to be Indian property, the quantities of serviceable articles remaining on board at the termination of the season being transferred to the Admiralty by survey at the prices charged to India when they were supplied or at a valuation, all unserviceable articles being returned and disposed of for the benefit of India. All supplies or returns of such stores thenceforward will be treated, as regards supply and charge, both at the yards and on board ship in the same manner as similar supplies to or returns from Imperial troopships. The balances of cash in the paymaster's hands at the termination of the season will be transferred to the Admiralty on repayment, and all moneys required by them for the public service from that date will be drawn from Naval funds in accordance with the ordinary regulations of the Navy, or as may be directed by the Accountant-General. The payments to the Suez Canal Company for passage of the ships through the Canal will, however, continue to be made as formerly in bills on the Secretary of State for India in Council, the customary advice being sent to the Director of Transport. The paymasters will render their cash accounts to the Accountant-General of the Navy instead of to the Director of Transports as heretofore. The expenses of all kinds incurred by the Naval department in respect of the Indian troop service, including the commuted rates for pay and victualling, will be included in one quarterly claim, and a quarterly statement of credits due to the troop service will be rendered at the same time. After examination a certificate in payment of the claim will be furnished to the Accountant-General for presentation to the India Office; and a certificate of the credit due will be issued by the Transport Department to the India Office, on receipt of which the necessary receivable order will be sent to the Accountant-General of the Navy.

NAVAL UNIFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Would you do me the kindness to insert the following proposed alteration and adaptations in the Naval uniform in your paper? I am aware that it is already a well-canvassed question, and that everyone has his own particular ideas on the subject, but I think there are one or two points in these suggestions which have not been mentioned before. Without further preface then:—Naval uniform.—Full dress: As at present, except that the breast-flaps should be lined inside with white silk, in order to be buttoned back on certain occasions, such as balls, &c.; (a) sub-lieutenants and all officers ranking with them to wear gold-lace trousers, the same width as lieutenants. Undress: Frock-coat, with epaulettes, gold-lace trousers, full-dress sword-belt and cocked-hat, gold sword-knot. Duty dress: Frock-coat, without epaulettes, plain trousers, plain sword-knot (b), and belt; cap. Working dress: Double-breasted monkey jacket (c), four buttons on each breast, and distinction-lace on sleeves; cap. Mess dress: Jackets and epaulettes (d), gold-lace trousers, mess or white waistcoat; dress boots or shoes. Mess undress: Jackets, without epaulettes, plain trousers, mess or white waistcoat. In hot climates:—Tunic: White drill, single-breasted, turn-up cellar, fittings for epaulettes, and instead of distinction-lace on the sleeves, stripes of the same size and arrangement, &c., of blue jean, doctors wearing red braid between their stripes, &c. The arrangement of buttons in all branches to be strictly adhered to. Helmet: Plain white, with blue silk puggaree, fittings for a gilt chain, and for a button on top. Shoes: White or black. Sword-belt: White duck, with ornaments the same as black leather undress belt. Full dress: Tunic buttoned, epaulettes, full-dress sword-belt outside, white trousers, white shoes, gold distinction-lace on sleeves, helmet with button and chain. Undress: Tunic buttoned, epaulettes, white sword-belt outside, white trousers, white shoes, blue distinction stripes, helmet as in full dress. Duty dress: Tunic buttoned, without epaulettes, sword-belt outside, helmet without button or chain. Working dress: Tunic either buttoned or not, straw hat; if sword is worn, the belt inside the tunic; the hat to have a ship's ribbon and straight brim. Mess dress: White jacket, navy buttons, no lace, white waistcoat, blue-laced trousers. Mess undress: White jacket, as before, but plain blue trousers. Great-coat: Thick blue stuff, such as pilot cloth, &c., coming down to the ankles, high turn-down collar, having two buttons behind on the hips, with a connecting flap to adjust the coat for sitting or walking, a hole for the sword-hilt the left side, and to be made loose enough about the shoulders to admit of being worn over epaulettes. Plain sword-knot: Of exactly the same pattern as the full-dress one, but entirely of blue silk, and strong enough to be thoroughly serviceable. White shoes: Quite plain, without toe-caps or straps. Mess waistcoat: Blue-cloth, single breasted, with turn-down collar, three buttons, the outer edge of the collar to have one line of very narrow gold braid, and the same down the front and along the bottom edges of the front; a plain line along the top of each pocket, turning down at each corner, at right angles, for half inch. No crow's feet or other ornamentation about it. Notes.—(a.) Sub-lieutenants in the Royal yacht are obliged to have them as it is. (b.) The present knot is valueless as a sword-knot, always expensive, and very seldom an ornament, as it tarnishes and frays out so soon. It should be the "full-dress sword-knot," see "plain sword-knot" above. (c.) This will be adding no new garment. It should be allowed on board when not on watch, in harbour, always at sea, except Sunday forenoons, and for boat-work. A sword can always be worn under. (d.) This and the following are the regulation now on the Mediterranean station, ship or shore dinners, &c., Admiral's dinners, &c., with the exception of the epaulettes and mess-waistcoat, and are called officially by those names in the signal-books, &c. Mess waistcoats look much more dressed than plain blue, and are much more comfortable than white ones.—I am, &c.,

A Lieutenant.

The Admiralty has been pleased to issue the following regulations respecting the employment of electric firing-gear and of torpedoes (Fleet Cir. No. 28):—The electric firing gear supplied to H.M.'s ships is to be fitted, before a ship is placed in the 1st Division of the Steam Reserve, under the immediate superintendence of the commander or a lieutenant of the Naval Torpedo School at Portsmouth (timely information being afforded to the captain of the Vernon through the captain of the Steam Reserve), and the fittings so arranged are not to be altered without the sanction of their Lordships. The work is to be carried out by the fitters who have been instructed at the Torpedo School. The circuit, when completed, is to be tested by an officer of the Naval Torpedo School, and one firing battery charged. A copy of the results of testing the electric firing gear is to be furnished by the captain of the Vernon to the captain of the Steam Reserve, for delivery to the commanding officer of the ship when commissioned. In each vessel supplied with torpedo stores, at least two of the commissioned officers of the military branch, one of whom is to be a lieutenant, are to be thoroughly instructed in their use and application, and are to be fully competent to use the torpedoes supplied; they are also, in vessels fitted with electric firing gear, to be thoroughly instructed in its use, and to be competent to carry out electric firing from the director. The names of the officers are to be inserted in the half-yearly report of progress in gunnery and torpedo practice. The electric firing wires are frequently to be tested by the gunnery officer, or torpedo officer, where one is borne, and always, if possible, before general exercise. Two armourers or artificers are to be specially instructed in the manner of repairing the wires when damaged, and are to be stationed in the battery at general quarters for this duty. A small box is fitted upon each side of the battery for the use of these men, and is to contain short pieces of india-rubber tubing, india-rubber tape and solution, binding screws, pliers, twine, short lengths of insulated wire fitted with binding screws and tubing for bridging over temporarily a break in the main wires, spare branch wires complete, and, at general quarters, spare boxes of electric gun-tubes. In every ship, the boat which is fitted as an outrigger torpedo-boat is to be prepared in all respects for torpedo service, and exercised at least once in each quarter by day, and once by night. The date and hour when the practice was carried out is to be noted in the half-yearly report of torpedo practice. Though electric firing and torpedo stores supplied to ships are in the gunner's charge, the gunnery-lieutenant, or torpedo officer where one is borne, is to consider it an important part of his duty to ascertain that the whole of these articles are kept in a thoroughly serviceable and efficient state. These stores are only to be used for the purposes for which they are supplied. Every case of failure, when using any of the torpedo stores or electric firing gear supplied, is to be reported in the half-yearly report of torpedo practice, together with the probable cause of such failure. Captains are to satisfy themselves, before their ships leave the port where they are commissioned, that the stores provided for electric firing and for torpedo purposes are efficient; the spare batteries are not, however, to be charged, nor the boxes of tubes and detonators opened, unless there is reason to believe that they are not efficient. On all occasions of inspections by commanders-in-chief or senior officers, the state of efficiency of the electric firing gear, and of all apparatus in connection with torpedoes, is to be ascertained and inserted in the report of inspection. Circular No. 4 S., of Feb. 24, 1876, is cancelled.

A ball was given on Wednesday night at the Portland Hall, Southsea, by the chief and first-class petty officers of the whole of her Majesty's ships at Portsmouth. The hall made a capital ball-room, and the decorations were profuse and effective. Invitations had been addressed to and accepted by Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief, and the whole of his staff, together with Capt. Culme-Seymour and officers of the Duke of Wellington, Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley, Admiral Superintendent, Capt. Richard Wells and officers of the Asia, Capt. J. O. Hopkins and officers of the Excellent, Capt. Gordon and officers of the Vernon, Com. R. F. Britten and officers of the St. Vincent, and the principal officers of other ships in port, a large number of whom were present. The invitations to the sister-Service were distributed in the proportion of six to the serjeants' mess of the Royal Marine Artillery, six to the serjeants' mess of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, and two each to the serjeants' messes of the Royal Engineers, Royal Artillery, and regiments of the Line stationed in the Portsmouth and Gosport Garrisons. Dancing commenced at nine o'clock, and the National Anthem, which brought to a conclusion one of the most enjoyable entertainments of the kind ever given in Portsmouth, was played about three o'clock on the following morning

WELLINGTON COLLEGE.

"A Parent" writes:—"The 'breaking-up' for holidays of a public school is an interesting scene for paterfamilias, and repays a long journey. The joyous faces, the bustle and excitement, the variety of vehicles and animals chartered for the occasion, all amuse; but above all, the opportunity of studying the masters and boys his son or sons associate with should not be lost. If he has time, the anxious parent can renew inquiries into the character of the neighbourhood, as to health, morality, and what is said of the administration of the school. Wellington College is now upon its trial before a Royal Commission, and a few observations on that institution may not be uninteresting to the public. I noted that the tone and general style of the boys continue satisfactory, but I regret that some defects in the management are too apparent, and shall briefly detail some of these, in the hope that you will draw the attention of the Commission to the same, as follows, viz.:—1. The absence of any superintendence at the railway embarkation of the boys, evinced especially by the ruthless manner in which their luggage is treated at the station, the van-men throwing heavy packages from a height in the most reckless fashion, to the serious damage of property. An inclined plane and supervision would correct this. 2nd. I submit that an inspection of the ditches would furnish the Commission with another proof of bad management and absence of sanitary precaution. These and the fences are in a state which would be considered disgraceful even in Ireland, and may account for the recent outbreak of measles in the preparatory school and village of Crowthorne. Who is responsible for the filthy state of the College ditches nearly opposite the Crowthorne chemist's shop, and also below the residence of the medical officer? I apprehend that the College authorities are, and no time should be lost in purifying those fetid places, as in hot weather they will be dangerous, if left in their present condition. 3rd. Permit me next to refer to another blot on Wellington—at all events, in my humble opinion—i.e. that junior masters exercise the power of corporal punishment, and frequently so chastise without taking time to reflect or refer to superior authority. In the Royal Navy, even in olden days, junior officers had no such authority delegated to them; and the captain, with whom alone this power rested, was required to sign a warrant and pause for twenty-four hours before carrying out his sentence. Surely if a youth fresh from Oxford or Cambridge has such a power assigned to him, a similar check to temper and impulse might advantageously be placed upon him. Finally, many persons allege that reform in the interior economy and general management of Wellington College is absolutely necessary (the amount of labour obtained from outdoor employés being a subject of ridicule). And this cannot be wondered at, if the administration is conducted, as I was informed, by a Treasury clerk at Whitehall, who rarely visits the place."

A meeting was held on Monday evening, for the purpose of making the preliminary arrangements for the Portsmouth Royal Dockyard Annual Regatta. It was decided to hold it this year on July 19, and the committee hope to make the regatta still more successful than that of last year. There will be several extra prizes. At the close of the meeting, Mr. Edward Allen, the indefatigable secretary, was presented by the committee with a handsome marble timepiece, in recognition of his services. The timepiece bore the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. Edward Allen, by the Portsmouth Royal Dockyard Regatta Committee, in appreciation of his successful efforts as honorary secretary of their first annual regatta, held on Aug. 25, 1879."

Mr. W. Quigley, chief officer of Coastguard at Exmouth, has been promoted to the command of the Dingle Division, county Kerry. Mr. Quigley has been stationed at Exmouth for nine and a half years, and during that time has filled the office of honorary secretary of the local branch of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, in which capacity he has rendered efficient service, which the parent society suitably acknowledged last year by the presentation of a testimonial.

THE ARMY DISCIPLINE ACT.

It is notified in a General Order that under the Army Discipline and Regulation Act, 1879, every description of court-martial has jurisdiction to try every description of offence, but in the disposal of a charge against a soldier of having committed an offence, commanding and other officers will be guided by the following rules:—1. A commanding officer may, without reference to superior authority, dispose summarily of, or try by regimental court-martial, a charge of an offence under Sections 11, 15 (excepting absence without leave exceeding 21 days), 19, 24, and 40. A charge for any other offence will, excepting as provided for in para. 3, be referred to a superior officer. 2. A superior officer to whom a case is referred may deal with it as follows:—(a) He may refer the case to a superior officer, or (b) he may direct the disposal of the case summarily, or by regimental court-martial; or (c) if he has power to convene a district court-martial, he may convene a district court-martial to try it; or (d) if he has power to convene a general court-martial, he may convene either a general or district court-martial to try it. But an offence punishable with death or penal servitude should not be disposed of summarily, or by a regimental or district court-martial, excepting under the orders of an officer who has power to convene a general court-martial, or as provided for in par. 3. 3. In any case where a commanding officer or a superior officer is of opinion that delay is inexpedient, he may dispose of the case without any reference to a superior officer; but in such case he must immediately report his action, and his reasons for it, to the officer to whom otherwise he would have referred the case. 4. The proper authority to convene a regimental court-martial is the commanding officer of the person charged, and although an officer who is authorised to convene a general court-martial, or to convene a district court-martial, has power to convene a regimental court-martial, he should, when he orders a case to be disposed of by regimental court-martial, direct the commanding officer to convene the court, instead of convening it himself, unless the commanding officer is unable to form an adequate court from the officers under his command.

A ship canal across the neck of Cape Cod, which was projected more than 200 years ago, has at last been commenced. It is estimated to cost between £600,000 and £700,000, and expected to improve the harbours at either mouth. The proposed canal from Kiel, on the Baltic, to the estuary of the Elbe is still under discussion. At a recent meeting of the Central Association for the Promotion of German River and Canal Navigation, held at Berlin, Count Moltke rather threw cold-water on the project, observing that, in his opinion, it would be wiser to spend the money required on the national fleet than on a canal. At the same time, if the money could be found without State help, he, for one, should not oppose the scheme. The capital required will be about three millions sterling, and the canal can be completed in six years. A short-cut across Holstein, as proposed, would save the passage through the Sound and the Sound dues, and be of service, not only to the Germans, but to all the neighbouring nations.—Iron.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

Amusements.

The event of the week in the theatrical calendar has been the successful production of the new melodramatic opera, by Messrs. Arthur Sullivan and W. S. Gilbert, at the OPERA COMIQUE. There has been quite as hearty a welcome given to "The Pirates of Penzance" in the metropolis as was bestowed in New York, when the novelty was introduced last New-Year's Eve to an American audience at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. That the "Pirates" will rival in popularity the "Pinafore" can hardly be expected, but the droll incongruities of the librettist, and the pretty and playful melodies of the composer, will certainly ensure for the production a prolonged career. There is an exceedingly effective overture, and the music, especially of the second act, is of a higher order of composition than might be anticipated. This whimsical operetta receives admirable support from its interpreters. Miss Marian Hood, a young soprano possessing a fresh, well-trained voice, has made a brilliant début as the heroine Mabel, and Mr. G. Power as her lover, Mr. R. Temple as the Pirate King, Mr. George Grossmith as the Major-General with the accusing conscience, and Mr. Rutland Barrington as the timorous Serjeant of Police, sing and act with equal spirit. Miss Everard, having been unfortunately disabled by an accident during rehearsal, when some portion of the scenery fell upon her head, has been compelled to resign her part of the nurse, Ruth, to Miss Emily Cross. An exquisite love-duet, "Oh, leave me not!" will be recognised as one of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's most charming compositions. The comic opera has been brought out with the utmost attention to completeness in every department, and the two scenes respectively representing a rocky sea-shore on the coast of Cornwall and the chapel ruins adjacent have been most artistically painted.

Mr. Byron's new comedy of "The Upper Crust," with one scene ingeniously sufficing for the story, unfolded in three acts, has proved a substantial success at the FOLLY, and Mr. J. L. Toole, as the retired tradesman who has made a fortune out of the sale of his patented diaphanous soap, has added a new character of undoubted value to his repertory. His peculiar power of humorous expression has never been developed to greater advantage, and two hours of continuous merriment form the result. Mr. John Billington and Miss Thorne, Miss Lilian Cavalier and Mr. E. D. Ward, sustain with good effect the other prominent characters, and a sporting baronet, acted by Mr. Garden, is most adroitly portrayed.

Under the title of "Themis," a version of "Les Pommes du Voison," written by Victorien Sardou, and brought out at the Palais Royal in 1864, has been successfully produced at the ROYALTY. The odd adventures of the two principal personages are amusingly illustrated by Miss Rose Cullen and Mr. Charles Groves, and considerable cleverness of contrivance is shown in the change of a house from an interior to the exterior, where there is an exciting chase of everybody over the roof.

A novel and interesting experiment is about to be tried at the GAIETY, where Mr. Hollingshead will shortly revive some of those old plays which attracted considerable attention during the earlier part of the century, but which are scarcely known to the present generation of playgoers. The series will commence on Wednesday week with George Lills's tragedy of "George Barnwell," not acted in London for nearly forty years.

"The Shaughraun" will be revived at the ADELPHI on Saturday, April 24, when Mr. Dion Boucicault will make his reappearance in London.

Mr. H. J. Byron is writing for the OLYMPIC a new burlesque, which will be produced at the end of the month. The subject is the popular opera of "Il Trovatore," which has been treated before in travestied fashion.

The brief career of Cobwebs is now brought to a close at the VAUDEVILLE, and Mr. Buckstone's comedy of Married Life, originally brought out at the Haymarket, in August, 1834, will be acted till another novelty is ready for production.

The ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA season will commence next Tuesday. HER MAJESTY'S OPERA will not open till the middle of May.

Mr. Edward Ledger has received a silver dessert service, of the value of £600, as a testimonial of the zeal he has displayed, as editor of the Era, in the defence of the interests of the Dramatic profession. The presentation took place on Wednesday afternoon at the Lyceum Theatre, with Mr. Henry Irving as president.

One of the latest acts of the Admiralty has been to order £50 worth of half-worn ships' library books to be presented to the Seamen's and Marines' Orphans' Home and Schools at Portsmouth.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The Irish Times hears that arrangements are at present being made for a concentration of troops at the Curragh for the drill season of the current year, and that all arms intended to participate will be moved to the camp by the end of next month.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to confer on Augusta Mary Elizabeth Bentinck, widow of the late Lieut.-Gen. Arthur Cavendish-Bentinck, the honour of a peerage of the United Kingdom, by the style and title of "Baroness of Bolsover, of Bolsover Castle, in the county of Derby."

The second annual Malta rifle meeting, open to the men of the Navy and Army stationed in Malta, has been fixed for Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Monday, April 1, 2, 3, and 5, at Pembroke Camp ranges, under the patronage of his Excellency Gen. THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, and Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, &c.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a-dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

THE ONLY COD LIVER OIL WHICH PRODUCES THE FULL CURATIVE EFFECTS IN

CONSUMPTION and DISEASES of the CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN, RICKETS, and ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surgeon Army, Professor of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

Sold ONLY in Capsuled Imperial Half-Pints, 2s 6d; Pints, 4s 9d; Quarts, 9s; by all Chemists.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' 'Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

THE Army is full of anxiety as to the fate of the recommendations of Lord Airey's Committee. That they will be substantially adopted we fear is out of the question, and that no steps at all in connection with military reform will be taken this year seems pretty certain next year. Some changes, however, can hardly be avoided, for Lord Cardwell himself has tacitly admitted that his system was not a complete success. That such is the case is, indeed—pace Sir Garnet Wolseley—obvious to all, save such doctrinaires as Mr. Holms. The expedient of making up regiments to their established strength, for active or even ordinary colonial service, by inviting volunteers from the rest of the Army, is palpably vicious, and has led to many bad results. It is bad alike for the regiment which gives and the regiment which receives the volunteers. It is admittedly only an expedient, but has been so frequent as to take rank as a system. Lord Cardwell's idea was that the home battalion would be able to supply all the men needed by the foreign battalion; but that plan could only be realised on condition that to each battalion abroad was linked a battalion at home, and it has been found impossible to carry out that arrangement. Another indispensable condition is also wanting,—namely, that the home battalion, acting as a feeder to its linked battalion abroad, should be always sufficiently strong in trained soldiers to supply the necessary drafts. In order to fulfil that function, the home battalion should have a higher establishment than its linked battalion, for the waste of the latter is the greater. The principle adopted has, however, been the very reverse of this, the home battalion being, as a rule, the weaker of the two. Even, therefore, a Liberal Secretary of War can hardly deny that, at all events, an important modification of the present system is needed. It is no uncommon thing, upon a sudden emergency in the colonies, for half a dozen battalions to be sent abroad at a moment's notice. At least half a dozen, therefore, should be kept in readiness for such demands. By this, we mean that not only should the paper-strength of each of these battalions be the field establishment, but that every man borne on the rolls of the head-quarters should be fit, as regards health and training, to embark. To carry out this scheme, it would be necessary either to have supernumeraries with the head-quarters, or to bear on the strength of the depôt all recruits, weakly men, and men whose period of service is about to expire. Even, however, with this arrangement, it would always be found at the last moment that at the head-quarters of the regiment there were some thirty or forty men who would fail to pass the doctor. It would be necessary, therefore, either to raise the strength of each of the first six battalions on the roster to about thirty or forty above the field establishment, or to fill up the vacancies suddenly made by inviting men of the First-Class Reserve to rejoin. It might be as well to supplement this arrangement by instituting some two or three general depôts, from which trained men could be taken to supply the defects of the ordinary system. As to the recommendation of Lord Airey's Committee, that the length of service with the colours should be extended to eight and a half years, we have grave doubts as to its adoption. It would be regarded by a large section of those Liberals who ignorantly dabble in military matters as a retrograde step. Indeed, Mr. Holms has long been clamouring for a reduction of service with the colours to three years. As we have repeatedly pointed out, he ignores the important distinction between drill and training. That even the six years' system—however good in theory—has produced most lamentable results, is admitted by those who best understand the subject,—namely, regimental officers. We therefore are in great hopes that Mr. Holms's proposals will not be adopted. That, however, the six will be extended to eight and a half years, is not, we regret to say, to be expected. The principle that regiments should during peace be merely training-schools would be all very well, were there never any necessity for employing those establishments in colonial wars. As it is, the notion is simply puerile; but the shorter the service with the colours, the closer the resemblance of a regiment to a mere school. There is little or no chance of the abolition of the present costly and useless Brigade Depôts; too much money has been spent upon them. On the other hand, it is just possible that the pay of non-commissioned officers will be increased, for even the most rabid Radical must admit that the younger the soldier, the greater the necessity for securing the services of first-rate serjeants and corporals. These, at all events, must be induced to make the Army their profession, and they can best be induced to do so by paying them at least as much as they would get in civil life. On one subject alone do we feel at all sanguine, and that is promotion. We really do entertain some hopes that a sincere effort will be made to stimulate zeal and talent among our officers, and that promotion by selection will henceforth cease to be the delusion that it has hitherto been. It is, however, unsatisfactory work to try and forecast the military policy of the Liberals, for they will not be their own masters, and the pernicious vagaries of the Radicals are beyond all calculation.

A fortnight ago we endeavoured to allay the growing apprehension as to the fate of the Atalanta, by pointing out that as her original orders were for her to return to England during the first week in April, she was not actually over-due when the rumour of her loss was circulated. Last week we did not venture to touch on the subject, as allusion to the alarming rumour, without giving additional hope, would, we felt, only tend to strengthen the doubts entertained as to the safety of the vessel. Further, it had meanwhile transpired that Captain Stirling and others had written home from Bermuda on January 30, saying that the ship was then about to sail for England, and would probably be at Spithead before the Bermuda mail arrived in England. It thus became only too apparent that some serious mishap, how serious it was impossible to say, had happened to this sailing training-ship, for even had the Captain decided to remain out to the full extent of his original sailing orders (although he had informed the Admiralty that he was making the best of his way homewards from the West Indies, owing to the appearance of a case or two of yellow fever), it was beyond all probability that he would remain out voluntarily one day after April 4, when he was due, under any circumstances, at Spithead. Added to the certainty that the Atalanta sailed from Bermuda, intending to make direct for England, on January 31, a circumstantial account of the discovery of a large copper-bottomed ship of about a thousand tons, bottom up, by a Brazil mail steamer, seemed to make it worse than idle to attempt to explain away the feeling of anxiety which has taken hold of the public mind, and which at this moment prevails at the ports. Happily, an authoritative contradiction has since been given by the captain of the mail steamer as to the reported sighting of a capsized ship; and on Tuesday the Admiralty issued a statement of their view of the possible causes which may have kept the Atalanta from reaching home. In that statement, the Admiralty point out that her orders were to return home on April 4, but in consequence of two cases of yellow fever occurring on board, Captain Stirling determined to proceed at once to Bermuda, where he arrived on January 29, and left on January 31 for England, the crew being then in good health, since which date no intelligence of the Atalanta has been received. Until last week, it was hoped that the non-arrival of the ship was caused by Captain Stirling, after leaving Bermuda, deciding to prolong his cruise in accordance with the original orders. That time having passed without any news of the ship, orders were given for the Salamis to proceed from Gibraltar to the Azores, and make inquiries at each of the islands for any traces of the Atalanta. The ships of the Channel Squadron also received orders on the 10th inst. to proceed from Gibraltar to the Azores, and cruise home on the track from Bermuda. The Bacchante is now on passage home from Bermuda. It is therefore hoped that, if the Atalanta has been dismasted, she may be fallen in with. When the Atalanta left Bermuda there were 109 tons of water on board, and an ample supply of provisions. The ship was in all respects sound, possessed of unusual stability, and commanded by an officer of good judgment and high professional qualifications; but the Admiralty remarks, "the unexpected delay in her arrival affords cause for anxiety for her safety, bearing in mind the many disasters which have occurred during the past two months, consequent on the very severe weather which has been experienced in the Atlantic. There is, however, still ground for hope that she may be only dismasted, and may yet arrive in safety." Such was the official view of the case on Tuesday, and now the ship has been 76 days out from Bermuda, and not one word has been heard of her. Little wonder, then, that as many as 200 personal calls have been made at the Admiralty, and 150 inquiring telegrams have been received there in one day, and the Admirals' offices at the ports have been almost thronged with anxious relatives. True, there is yet hope that the ship may have been dismasted, and having thus become little better than a helpless log on the waters, has been buffeted about by the prevailing gales, and has been carried far from our shores by adverse winds. There is this hope, and we fervently trust that it may be realised, and that the country may be spared the deep sorrow of the loss, in two years, of two training-ships, with picked officers and crews, and with a complement of young seamen just starting on their career in her Majesty's Navy. The gloomy prognostications of evil which were made when the ship became due and failed to put in an appearance have been, in a measure, an outcome of the remembrance of the loss of the Eurydice. But that the Atalanta can have turned turtle in the Atlantic by being overtaken by a heavy and unseen squall, is too improbable. That she has experienced very heavy weather, in common with all ships which have been making the homeward passage during the past two months, there can be no doubt; but she must have been as prepared for bad weather as it was possible to make her, and owing to the great care that was taken to ensure her stability and to prevent any suspicion of overmasting, those who fitted out the ship or saw her when rigged cannot bring themselves to believe that she can have capsized. Such was the confidence felt as to her actual safety, though making a very bad passage, that it was not until last Saturday that the Admiralty ordered any search to be made for her, and although the Wye and Salamis started almost at once, the Channel Squadron did not get away from Gibraltar until Wednesday. As is usual, uneasiness was felt at the ports long before it was at Whitehall, and even in the second week in March many a wife and mother was asking why the ship had not come in, knowing that six weeks was too long a passage from Bermuda. But now that twelve weeks have elapsed the anxiety is general, and the suspense which has for so long been suffered by relatives has become almost unbearable. Some tidings of the ship are sorely needed. God grant that they may be good tidings.

Up to the hour of going to press, nothing was known at the War Office as to who will be the incoming War Minister. Five names are mentioned, viz., those of Lord Hartington, Sir Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Grant Duff, and Mr. G. O. Trevelyan; and it is generally believed that one of these will be called upon to relieve Colonel Stanley. There is no doubt as to which appointment would be most acceptable to the Army. Lord Hartington was at the War Office before, and he would, therefore, the more readily fall in to the routine work of the office. Mr. Goschen, again, gained for himself a high reputation at the Admiralty, and should his views on the question of the county franchise not be considered to disqualify him for a seat in the Cabinet, he would doubtless stand a fair chance of being chosen to watch over the interests of one of the Services. For our own part, we question the probability of Sir Vernon Harcourt's appearance in Pall Mall, as there are other offices which will be open to him where he will find work more congenial. For the Financial Secretaryship, Mr. John Holms is spoken of, whilst the Surveyor-Generalship of the Ordnance will, no doubt, be filled, as it certainly should be, by a soldier, or, at any rate, by one who has had experience of the Army. Two names present themselves, those of General Sir Alexander Hamilton-Gordon and Major-General Sir Henry Havelock-Allan, and it is no secret that the respective claims of these two officers are being considered. Of the two there is no questioning which the Army would prefer. Sir Alexander Gordon is a man with a grievance against the Horse Guards, which he is never tired of ventilating, and his appointment would, it is to be feared, result in constant petty misunderstandings between the two departments, besides which he is possessed of an uneven temper, which he cannot at all times control, as he has more than once shown. Sir H. Havelock-Allan, on the other hand, extreme as are his political views, has the interests of the Service at heart, is thoroughly conscientious, and would do his utmost, we believe, to maintain the Army in an efficient condition. He has had large experience, both as a regimental and Staff officer, has served through several campaigns, is a good speaker, and has on more than one occasion stood up manfully to resist proposals which he felt would produce an injurious effect. His services could not fail to prove most valuable to the Government.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of the Naval Reserves, arrived in Dublin on the 9th inst. from Galway, on duty connected with the relief of distress in the West of Ireland. His Royal Highness, who is the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, at the Viceregal Lodge, has had an interview with Mr. Hepworth, representing the New York Herald Fund Committee, and Mr. W. Lane Joynt, representing the Mansion House Committee, and joint action was arranged for the relief of the islanders on the western coast. At the request of Mr. Hepworth, the Duke took charge of the distribution of the supplies for the western islands which are coming from New York in the U.S. ship Constellation. His Royal Highness reports that the Valorous was to leave Galway on the 9th inst., taking 37 tons seed potatoes, 80 tons meal, and 5 tons rice, also clothing and clothing materials, to Kilkierran Bay. Captain Morant had orders to visit Westport, and to proceed in the Hawk to Belmullet (Blacksod Bay), returning to Galway. The Hawk, on arrival at Galway, was to convey 12 tons seed potatoes from Ballyvaughan to Boffin Islands. His Royal Highness has visited north Isle of Arran in the Lively, and was to proceed to Kilkierran Bay on Tuesday. The Goshawk conveyed 8 tons seed potatoes from Sligo to Killala Bay, and returned on the 10th inst.

A telegram from Larnaca on Thursday states that heavy gales prevail round Cyprus, and the Cygnet has arrived from Limassol with her fore-topmast carried away. The Rupert and Tyne were at Larnaca.

Captain Ernest Rice, who was for some time Assistant-Director of Naval Ordnance at the Admiralty, has been selected to relieve Captain Nicholson, as British Naval Attaché at the Maritime Courts of Europe.

The First Lord of the Admiralty has returned to his official residence from Torquay. Probably the question of moving furniture is now uppermost in the mind of Mr. Smith and some of his colleagues, and the Navy must take care of itself until the members of a new Board have got well into their seats.

Commander Hubert Grenfell, who was recently employed as additional Naval Attaché for Europe, will commission the Phœnix at Devonport on the 20th inst., for service on the North America station.

The Royal yacht Victoria and Albert will embark her Majesty at Flushing to-day, and will sail immediately, accompanied by the Osborne, Alberta, and the Trinity House yacht Syren, and may be expected to arrive at Queenborough about four o'clock this afternoon. This is the first time her Majesty has returned from the Continent viâ Flushing and Queenborough.

The Iris, after many delays, owing chiefly to her failing in attaining the speed expected of her, is shortly to be commissioned by Captain Edward H. Seymour. As the first of our new type of swift steel despatch-vessels, with engines developing two horse-power for each ton of displacement, her performances will be watched with interest.

Rear-Admiral Hood, C.B., with his flag flying in the Minotaur, left Gibraltar on Wednesday, with the Agincourt, Achilles, and Northumberland, for the Azores, whence they will cruise homewards on the track from Bermuda, in search of the Atalanta.

Commodore Wilson was in the Tamar River, North Tasmania, on March 1, in the Wolverene, and would arrange to return to Sydney in time to meet the Raleigh.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., was at Bombay, as usual, on March 27, awaiting the return of his flag-ship from Malta.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., arrived at Hong Kong on March 10, having visited Borneo and Manila in the Vigilant. The Admiral was about to leave in the Iron Duke for Amoy and Foochow, and will then go to Shanghai in the Vigilant.

From Plymouth we hear that some anxiety is felt at no news having been received of the arrival of the Fantôme at Port Royal, for which place she sailed from Devonport on January 27. She arrived at Madeira, all well, on February 7, and left for Jamaica on the 10th of that month. As no dispatch was required in reaching the West Indies, Commander Karslake would use his judgment in the consumption of coal, and not incur a large expenditure in pushing on against head winds. The next mail from the West Indies, which was due at Plymouth last Sunday, but which has been spoken at sea disabled, will probably bring news of the Fantôme's arrival at Port Royal. The Fantôme, having only just been commissioned, has a large amount of provisions on board.

The series of competitive trials of machine-guns at Shoeburyness will not be resumed for some time, as we are glad to hear that the Boxer cartridge, which we have so persistently condemned, has at last been abandoned by those in authority. The result is that the guns, which were formerly specially fitted, at the request of the Government, with barrels suited for the Boxer cartridge, will now be returned to the manufacturers to allow of their being replaced by barrels chambered to receive the solid-drawn cartridge-case. We also understand that this cartridge will ultimately be generally adopted throughout both Services for the Martini-Henry rifle.

The question of the formation of a Canadian Naval Reserve has, we are glad to hear, been brought to the notice of the Royal Commission on Colonial Defence by an officer late of the Royal Navy, and now settled in Canada. In acknowledging the suggestions of this officer, the secretary of the Commission admits the great importance of the question, and states that it will undoubtedly occupy the attention of the Commission. We hope that something may result from this movement, for Canada should certainly have a Naval Reserve of such proportions as to hold a considerable place in the defensive force of the Colony.

Captain J. O. Hopkins has been spoken of as a likely private secretary to replace Captain Codrington on the retirement of the First Lord from office. If this arrangement be carried out, it will probably be with the view of finding Captain Codrington one of the best-paid commands on the Home station, while Captain Hopkins will be kept on the move, he having already had two appointments in as many months. Surely a more ardent and advanced Liberal than Captain Edmund Hope Verney is not to be found, and if the new First Lord intends to look out for the friends of party, Captain Verney might be remembered. He has a ready pen, and an almost too ready tongue, and his views are scarcely popular with the Navy. But what of that so long as a place can be found for a thorough-going Liberal, who was even ready to sacrifice his prospects in the Service, if need be, for the sake of his new colours, having given up true blue for a kind of bilious chrome. Few Naval officers have elected to serve under those colours (a kind of quarantine flag, suited to "a policy of decomposition"), and those who have set the example may certainly look for office as the price of their devotion.

By Order in Council, it has been made compulsory on all Captains of Royal Marines promoted to that rank subsequent to October, 1871, to pass an examination similar to that in force for the Army, and to obtain a certificate of qualification, before they can be promoted to the substantive rank of Major. Captains serving afloat may be promoted provisionally, the rank to be confirmed only on their obtaining the necessary qualifying certificate within twelve months after disembarkation.

The promotion of captains to flag rank has been remarkably rapid during the present year, and out of the seven steps which are available annually, five have been already filled. It therefore remains only for Captains the Hon. W. J. Ward and Henry Wratislaw to become flag officers between this and December 31.

Two Naval breech-loading guns of the new pattern are now in course of construction. The heaviest is a 12-inch, 43-ton gun, and the other a 25-ton gun. It is anticipated that the trials of these guns will be made at Shoeburyness about September next.

Should a vacancy occur in the representation of Portsmouth, by the appointment of Sir H. Drummond Wolff as Ambassador at Constantinople, we hear that it is not improbable that Commander Lord Charles Beresford will be invited to come forward to represent the port, where he is so well known and so popular with all classes.

Under the new rearrangement of the Admiralty Office and Departments, the Director of Stores is to have the advantage of the services of an assistant-director, and it has been decided to confer that appointment upon Mr. Desprez, Naval storekeeper at Portsmouth Yard. The former services of Mr. Desprez at the Store Department of the Admiralty have been remembered, and a better choice could not have been made.

The Forester, which did such good surveying work at Port Durnford, has had the misfortune to bump rather heavily on the bar at Opobo, whither she had been despatched to make inquiries as to the loss of two merchant vessels.. The Forester was in charge of a pilot at the time, so that blame cannot attach to the commanding or navigating officer of the ship.

The movement of the Russian Fleet in the East, to which we alluded last week, appears to be becoming more and more important, and it is now asserted that some ten additional ships will be added to the Siberian command. Among them is the Duke of Edinburgh, on board which will be the second son of the Archduke Constantine. The fleet will be commanded by Admiral Butakoff.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., was at the Piræus, with his flag flying in the Helicon, on the 7th inst., en route to Constantinople. The Admiral will arrive in Cyprus on the 25th inst.

Rear-Admiral Henry Phillimore, C.B., who has been promoted to flag rank this week, has gained that step some months earlier than might have been anticipated, owing to the voluntary retirement of Rear-Admiral Montgomerie, C.B. Rear-Admiral Phillimore is fortunate in reaching the Flag List at an age below the average, and the Service will consequently have the benefit of this officer's services for many years to come, as he will reach the highest active flag rank before being retired.

The total loss of the Portuguese gunboat Don Carlos, off the east coast of Africa, a rumour of which was published some time since, has been confirmed by a telegram received from Mozambique.

Sir Charles Dilke is the nominee of the Daily News for the post of First Lord of the Admiralty. The Navy has been compelled to have at its head a successful colonist, a financier, and a successful man of business, but let us hope that while there is a Goschen, England's pride may be spared the rule of a Dilke of Sir Charles's type. The Navy would be glad once again to see a Peer given the post of First Lord, for the Navy has during the last ten years been managed rather too much like a business concern.

We stated some time since that the Admiralty had under consideration the question of placing retired Rear-Admirals, who had been barred from rising another step in consequence of the restriction as to service, on an equal footing with those who had been promoted since the removal of the said restrictions. The Order in Council embodying their Lordships' views has now been issued, and it is laid down that (1) Captains who have been or may be retired from that rank (unless retired on account of non-service) are to be allowed to rise to the rank of Vice-Admiral on the Retired List, if before retirement they have or shall have served the time necessary to qualify a Captain for promotion to the rank of Rear-Admiral on the Active List. 2. Such advancement to be conferred according to seniority, any officer hereby qualified for Vice-Admiral's rank, and who had been debarred from rising above the rank of Rear-Admiral by the restrictions of the Order in Council of February 22, 1870, to date his promotion to Vice-Admiral from the day on which he would have been promoted had such restrictions not been in operation. 3. Promotion not to confer claim to increase of retired pay.

As the possibility of Japan being called upon to enter upon a war with China with reference to the Loo Choo question has recently been frequently commented upon, it may not be uninteresting to give the following statement of the state of the Navy of Japan, as gathered from an official source :—

We notice by Friday's Gazette that Major Warner has retired from the 41st Regiment. Major Warner's case is a very hard one, and we will explain it for the benefit of our readers, who may be guided by it. Major Warner entered the Army February 1, 1856, at the age of about 17 years, and was promoted captain July 7, 1866. On the Royal Warrant of August 31, 1877, appearing, he applied for permission to retire upon pension, but was informed that he was not eligible until November, 1878. The senior major of the 41st, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Wavell, was appointed to the Intelligence Department some two years ago, and was seconded on May 8, 1878, when Major Warner, as senior captain, received his step. On completing his 20 years' service in November, 1878, Major Warner applied again for his pension, but was refused, as he had been promoted major beyond six months from October, 1877. He then asked to be antedated to such date as would bring him within six months of October 1, 1877. This request was refused. He then applied to have his promotion cancelled, and be allowed to retire on the pension of a Purchase captain. This he was told he could not do, as he had done duty as major. He now has retired, being obliged to do so from family reasons, on a pension of £215.

The Government of India, having called for eighty subaltern officers from the Line to fill vacancies existing in the local Staff Corps, it is desirable that the War Office should make due provision for filling the gaps which will thus be created on the British Establishment. The list of unsuccessful candidates at the recent examination for entrance to the Royal Military College might be turned to again, and a selection made from among those who have taken the highest places.

The Rev. Robert Foster, A.B., late curate of St. Peter's, Athlone, has been appointed to the chaplaincy of the Royal Hibernian Military School.

Is nothing to be done for the unfortunate brevet majors who obtained that rank on July 5, 1872, to place them in a fair position as regards the first captains of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, promoted on that date to substantive majorities? The first officer promoted from the List to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel was Colonel W. Paterson, of the Sandhurst Staff. This was in December, 1878. There still remain between fifty and sixty officers to be promoted, and these are daily suffering the mortification of seeing the officers of the Ordnance Corps promoted over their heads.

Combatants and non-combatants alike are at a loss to understand on what principle the War Office Authorities have acted in their selection of officers to receive commissions in the new Commissariat and Transport Staff and Ordnance Store Departments. It was naturally supposed that the best men would be kept, and the indifferent ones sent to the right-about, but there is too much reason to fear that the opportunity has been taken advantage of by some one in office to get rid of officers who have made enemies solely by reason of their high ability. We are sorry to have to think this, but in two cases, which are being referred to in all military garrisons, this is the only explanation which it is possible to give. There is no occasion to suppress names. The two officers referred to are Commissary C. B. Knapp, of the Commissariat, and Deputy-Commissary W. C. Gordon, of the Ordnance. Mr. Knapp's character is well-known, every General and Staff officer with whom he has been brought in contact admitting him to be the most hard-working, efficient, and reliable Commissariat officer in the whole Service. Yet he has been shelved to satisfy the petty spite of some one in office, who has doubtless felt some measure of jealousy at finding an ex-purveyor so constantly brought to notice. The only reason that the War-Office officials can give for overlooking Mr. Knapp's claims is that they do not consider that he is "the stamp of man to make a good assistant-commissary-general," a view with which General Hamilton and the entire staff of the Cork District—who certainly must know what the officer's capabilities are—disagree entirely, as the representations now being made to the War Office are sufficient to show. Mr. Gordon's case is even more inexplicable than that of Mr. Knapp, Mr. Gordon having only lately returned from active service at the Cape. Immediately upon arriving in Natal, Mr. Gordon was sent up to the front with the column for the relief of Ekowe. From this time, he was on General Crealock's staff until that officer left the field. He formed the Ordnance Store Depôts at Chelmsford, Port Durnford, and St. Paul's, and as the senior Ordnance officer of the column caused the duties of his department, under exceptional difficulties, to be carried on at three stations, and also at Fort Pearson, and in fact, all stations coming within the district of General Crealock's command, with the greatest efficiency. After the fall of Ulundi, he remained in Zululand until the whole of the stores which had been collected in the country were taken back to Natal. He was the senior Ordnance Store officer in the field in Zululand. This, coupled with the universal expression of satisfaction at the ability and promptitude with which he carried on his duties, might well have warranted him in supposing that some mark of approbation would have been shown him as a reward for his services; but the War Office seems to have overlooked him entirely, for while other junior officers who have been engaged in the war have obtained their promotion, he has not only been neglected, but has been compulsorily retired, to the regret of every member of his department, by all of whom he was regarded as an officer whose ability and perseverance were bound to carry him on to the highest positions which he was well qualified in all respects to fill. What are we to say when the Service is robbed of such men as these? Their loss, we hope and trust, will be but temporary, for we cannot think that any Secretary of State for War, having the interests of the Army at heart, would allow personal feelings to militate against the future prospects of officers, whose one and only fault, from all accounts, seems to have been that they have worked too well, and have thus incurred the grave displeasure of persons less able than themselves. Both cases are being represented, and are backed up by the highest testimonials, and we feel certain that one of the first acts of the in-coming Secretary of State for War will be to reverse a decision which it is only too plain has been given by his predecessor in ignorance of facts.

In spite of much that has been done to raise the standard of the technical knowledge of officers of the Cavalry and Infantry, it cannot be denied that much remains to be done. The successful candidate for a commission is sent to Sandhurst or to a garrison class, where he undergoes a very good, but short, practical course in the scientific part of his profession, which, combined with the administrative knowledge he acquires on joining his regiment, is sufficient for the rank of a 2nd Lieutenant. So far, so good. But what follows? Until an officer aspires to field rank, he is not required to pass an examination in anything but in administration and drill, yet it cannot be maintained that the scientific knowledge requisite in a junior subaltern ought to be sufficient for a Captain of some standing. Indeed, as a matter of fact, many an officer fresh from Sandhurst has a greater knowledge of the theoretical and scientific part of his profession at that time than he has ten or fifteen years afterwards. In the interval he has had, perhaps, little inclination to study this part of his profession, and there has been no necessity to do so; he has forgotten much of what he learnt at the College, and what he still recollects has become partially obsolete. The remedy for this state of affairs would not, we think, be difficult to find. The examinations for promotion to the successive ranks should be more searching and of wider range. Greater facilities should be offered to officers to prepare for these examinations by developing still further the system of garrison instructors, or by a course of study and an examination.

The scheme for the consolidation of the administrative brigades and battalions of Volunteers throughout the country, in accordance with the recommendations of Lord Bury's Committee, is now being so rapidly carried out, that there is reason to believe before the inevitable change of Administration takes place it will be completely effected. Ten Artillery brigades and 59 rifle battalions have already changed their designations. The (late) 1st Administrative Brigades—Cinque Ports, Devonshire, Forfarshire, Glamorganshire, Gloucestershire, Orkney, and Worcestershire retain their numerical designations in those counties, but, omitting the "administrative," are for the future to be known as "Artillery Volunteer Corps," as other consolidated corps were, or should have been, previously, for there are plenty of cases, in our knowledge, where corps have dubbed themselves "brigades" with no right to the title. It will be seen by the Army List that a good number of regiments have still to undergo the change, which will be beneficial in many ways. We have not yet heard of any actual cases of amalgamation in the case of small consolidated corps, but we understand that a list has been prepared of those regiments which are likely to be affected by the War-Office proposals. This matter of amalgamation, it is apparent, must be dealt with delicately, for apart from the always vexed question of seniority of officers, there are also the local and other interests of each corps to be considered. Colonel Stanley has already assured the Volunteers that it will not be attempted hurriedly, and as much correspondence is going on between the commanding officers and the authorities in Pall Mall on the subject, it is evident that he is fully aware of the difficulties which stand in the way. At the same time, we should not be surprised if some active measures were taken before the reins of office are handed over to the new War Minister.

The case of the unfortunate Purchase captains promoted to majorities beyond six months from October 1, 1877, would appear to call for consideration, for it must be admitted that the Regulations, as they stand at present, press very severely. It will be found, on reference to the Royal Warrant of February 5 last, that "boys' service" is allowed to count from the age of 18; but at the age of 41, the Purchase captain promoted to a majority beyond six months from October, 1877, only receives a pension of £215 per annum, the commutation of which is about £2,815. The Purchase captain at the age of 40 can, however, retire on a pension of about £242 per annum, and commute for £3,200.

We fear that that most deserving body of officers, the Quartermasters, may find that the elections and consequent change of Government will delay for some time the issue of the warrant which is to confer upon them benefits they well merit, and which they have hitherto asked for in vain. However, they may console themselves by a knowledge of the fact that they are not without friends in Pall Mall, and that their case is in good hands.

Colonel Sir G. P. Colley, K.C.S.I., has arrived in England from India, and will leave next month for the Cape, to assume the duties of his new appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Natal.

One of the Military features of the forthcoming Exhibition of the Royal Academy will be from the studio of Mr. C. B. Birch, whose noble work, the "Last Call," attracted general admiration last year. Mr. Birch sends this year a life-size statue of the late Lieutenant W. R. P. Hamilton, V.C., killed at Cabul in September last. The statue represents the gallant young officer in uniform, engaged in combat with the assailers of the British Embassy.

Colonel J. P. Cox, half-pay, late Royal Engineers, who resigned his Inspectorship under the Local Government Board last year, in order to accept the Military Secretaryship to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, has been appointed Chairman of the Bombay Port Trust; and Brevet Major E. S. Rivett-Carnac, 11th Hussars, Military Secretary to Sir Richard Temple, succeeds him as Military Secretary to General Warre.

It is admitted by universal consent that for the British Army the establishment of an efficient system of transport is a problem which urgently demands solution. The suggestion, therefore, of any practical device which may tend in any degree to facilitate the solution of this question can hardly fail to be of use. This being so, we are glad to hear that during last month Lieutenant-Colonel F. Chenevix-Trench, 20th Hussars, exhibited to Sir Thomas Steele, commanding the troops at Aldershot, and also to Lord William Seymour, the Assistant-Quartermaster-General, a portable transport cart, which he has designed and built with the special object of endeavouring to show how to supply the long-felt want of a vehicle which, in addition to being strong and serviceable, can readily be taken to pieces, and which, being therefore really portable, can be taken with British troops wherever they may be sent,—i.e., of course, wherever any wheeled vehicles can be used at all. Hitherto, in all our petty wars, the want of vehicles which could be packed in a convenient size and compass, which could be shipped or sent by rail or in boats, and at once be put together on disembarkation, for the use of the troops, has very often entailed the necessity of our having recourse in a most extravagant degree to that most wasteful and unsatisfactory system of transport,—viz., pack transport. The following advantages are claimed by the inventor for his portable transport cart, viz. :—"Firstly, strength and simplicity of construction. The cart can be put together or taken to pieces in a few minutes by any two or three men who have once been shown its construction; there is nothing in it which is likely to get out of order; there are no bolts, nuts, or screws, which have to be adjusted or taken off in either process. Consequently, no skilled labour or tools, not even a 'spanner,' are required either for putting the cart together or for taking it to pieces and packing it for transport. In packing the cart the sides and ends fold inwards and shut down flat upon the bottom. The body of the cart is detached from and made so as to lift off from the axle-tree bed. This improvement enables the cart to be packed in a far smaller compass than is possible when the axle-tree bed is, with the projecting axle-irons, a fixture to the body of the cart. When taken to pieces, the component parts of this vehicle are seven in number. Secondly, great economy of bulk when packed for carriage by rail or sea. The cart can be packed, when taken to pieces, in so small and convenient a compass, that it is calculated that in a couple of ordinary railway trucks, putting the wheels in one truck and the other component parts in the other, from eighteen to twenty of these carts might be packed. They can also be easily packed in boats or on board ship. Thirdly, facility of repair in case of accident or breakage. Fourthly, great ėconomy in storage room. Fifthly, a considerable reduction on the weight of the cart, viz., more than 1¼ cwt., as compared with the latest pattern of the general service cart as manufactured at Woolwich, while its cubic capacity is nearly the same." When the cart was exhibited at Aldershot, Sir Thomas Steele, Lord William Seymour, and several other officers who saw it, expressed themselves much pleased with its portability, its simplicity of construction, and the rapidity with which it was taken to pieces and put together again by three men of the Army Service Corps, who had never seen it before, and were unanimously of opinion that, provided the vehicle was found to stand the necessary practical tests of fair wear-and-tear, it would supply a want which has long been felt in the Service. About a fortnight ago, Colonel Chenevix-Trench received instructions from the War Office to hand over the cart to the Ordnance Store Department at Aldershot, for transmission to Woolwich, where it will be subjected to the usual inspection and trial. The weight of the cart is only 7 cwt. 20 lbs.

THE NAVAL MACHINE-GUN.

The Nordenfeldt gun adopted by the Admiralty for the defence of ships against the attacks of torpedo boats, has undergone several important alterations at the hands of the inventor, who has successfully overcome the defects alluded to in these columns as existing in the loading and cocking device in the guns first supplied to the Navy. The projecting trigger-comb at the rear of the gun has been removed, and locked while the lever is loading, so as to render impossible further accidents from the gun being inadvertently fired, as on board the Comus, and the guides serving to direct the cartridges into the chambers of the barrels have been altered. Previously, should a miss-fire take place and the extractor break, or from any other cause fail to act, the point of the advancing steel shot would strike fair in the centre of the cap of the non-extracted live cartridge. This would naturally fire the cartridge and cause an explosion, such as the one which took place on board the Northampton. Now, however, the point of the advancing steel shot can no longer strike the cap of the cartridge in front of it, and an explosion is, therefore, out of the question. A jamb while loading from the cartridge feed-case never occurs in the heavy calibre machine-guns. It is only in the small-bore mitrailleuse that any danger is to be feared from cartridges being crushed and exploded by friction and concussion, and it is for this reason that we hope soon to see the use of the Boxer cartridge discontinued in these rapid-firing weapons. We understand that Naval officers are satisfied that the Nordenfeldt gun, as improved, may be pronounced safe to handle, and the above-mentioned improvements are to be forthwith applied to all the guns of this pattern in the Service. The Nordenfeldt gun, as now being manufactured, will not necessarily require specially-trained men to work them, provided ordinary care is taken in its manipulation. There is no necessity to work the lever roughly when firing. On the contrary, when a check is felt, it is at once overcome by drawing the lever backward a distance not exceeding the length of a cartridge, when the extractor, acting upon the obstruction, allows it to drop to the ground or deck. Drawing back the lever in this manner only disturbs the jambed cartridge, and the others remaining in position, can forthwith be rammed home and fired, the gun firing nine instead of ten shots in each volley when one barrel is choked. This action answers to that of extracting one or more locks in the Gatling gun. There is no corresponding mode of overcoming such a difficulty in the Hotchkiss revolving cannon, in which, should one barrel be choked, the whole of the others are rendered useless. As we have already stated in these columns, the choking of one or more barrels did not materially interfere with the rapidity of the fire delivered either by the Nordenfeldt or Gatling mitrailleuses during the Shoeburyness trials. To place untrained men to fire a machine-gun, as was done on board the Northampton, is somewhat similar to allowing children to play with firearms. The danger to life and limb in either case is the same, however safe the weapon may be in trained hands. As yet, however, no "machine-gun drill" has been issued, but this omission will, we are informed, be shortly rectified. Foreign Governments seem to consider shell more efficacious in repelling torpedo-boats than the solid steel shot adopted in the Nordenfeldt mitrailleuse. It is therefore satisfactory to know that our own Naval Authorities are now giving the matter serious attention, and that the trials between the Hotchkiss revolving cannon and the Nordenfeldt are soon to be begun at Spithead, the guns being fired at floating targets representing the deck of a vessel and a model of a torpedo-boat, in order to test the relative merit of the Hotchkiss shell and the Nordenfeldt solid shot. In the event of the Hotchkiss 1½-inch shell doing more execution than the Nordenfelt 1-inch solid shot, the 1½-inch Nordenfelt will be tried, and shell can be substituted for solid shot in this calibre, if necessary. The trials are certain to be most exhaustive, and we do not doubt that the Navy will find itself armed with as effective a weapon for repelling torpedo-boat attacks as are those of other Maritime Powers. From two to six Nordenfeldt 1-inch guns have been allotted to each ship, according to her size, for repelling torpedo-boat attacks, while from one to four Gatlings of small calibre, for service with landing parties and clearing an enemy's decks from the tops, are also to be supplied to the ships of the Royal Navy.

THE BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

The Court of Appeal at Lincoln's Inn (consisting of Lords Justices James, Bramwell, and Baggallay) had before it, on April 13, the appeal ("Kinlock v. the Secretary of State for India in Council") on behalf of the Secretary of State for India against a decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall, overruling a demurrer to the plaintiff's statement of claim. The plaintiff, who is a retired chaplain in the Army, and brought this action "on behalf of himself and all other persons who, under the Royal grant of November 22, 1866, are entitled to share in the Banda and Kirwee Booty," was attached to Sir George Whitlock's column during the operations in the year 1858 against the two Mahratta Princes, Narrain Rao and Madho Rao, and the town of Kirwee, in the course of which a large quantity of treasure and booty was captured by our forces. By his statement of claim the plaintiff stated that after the capture Sir G. Whitlock and other officers applied to her Majesty for a grant of the captured property among the troops forming the column, to which her Majesty was pleased to assent, that disputes having arisen as to whether other forces were not entitled to share in the captured property, which was estimated to be of the value of £700,000, all claims to share were, by Order in Council, referred to the judge of the Admiralty Court, who was ordered to make a decree as to the persons who and the proportions in which they were entitled to share. That in June, 1866, the Court of Admiralty decided that the only persons entitled to share were the personal representatives of Lord Clyde and his staff in the field at the time of the capture and the officers and troops under Sir George Whitlock; and that, in Nov. 1866, by a further Royal order and proclamation, her Majesty granted to the Secretary of State for India in Council the captured property "in trust" to distribute the same among the persons who, by the judgment of the Court of Admiralty, were entitled to share. The plaintiff then averred that part (about £500,000) of this property had been distributed, but that the defendant still had in his hands a large amount (about £200,000) which he refused to distribute or account for, although repeatedly applied to do so. To this statement of claim the Secretary of State for India demurred on the ground that it did not show any title in the plaintiff to the relief which he sought. After hearing Mr. W. Pearson, Q.C., and Mr. W. Bund, counsel for the plaintiff, the Vice-Chancellor held that the grant to the defendant was in such a form as to create a trust in the grantee, and that the case of "Alexander v. the Duke of Wellington" did not stand in the way of the Court overruling the demurrer, because there was merely a scheme for distribution which it was competent to vary, and not, as here, a final grant. Their lordships were of opinion that in this case no trust was created by the Crown, and therefore they allowed the appeal, but without costs.

THE CURRAGH DRILL SEASON.

We (Irish Times) have reason to believe that the War Office has sanctioned the formation of a division this year at the Curragh for drill. The drills will take place during the months of June and July. The division will consist of a brigade of Cavalry, and two batteries of Royal Horse Artillery, three batteries of Field Artillery, one company of Royal Engineers, one company of Army Service Corps, with two brigades of Infantry, the whole being under the command of Major-Gen. J. Glynn, C.B., who will proceed to the Curragh for the purpose. The Cavalry Brigade will be under the command of Major-Gen. Fraser, C.B., V.C., and the Infantry Brigades will be most probably commanded by Col. G. Clerk, Rifle Brigade, and Col. Davis, 20th Regiment. Owing to the uncertainty as to the reliefs between regiments in England and Ireland, it would be premature to state confidently of what regiments the two Infantry Brigades will be formed. We fancy, however, that they (seven in number) will be selected from the following:—1st Batn. 22nd Foot, 2nd Batn. 20th, 28th, 38th, 47th, 64th, 104th, 105th, 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade. The Cavalry Brigade will probably be found to be formed by the 2nd Dragoons and 19th and 20th Hussars. Besides the two brigadiers, there will be several temporary staff appointments to be filled. It consequence of the general depression in trade, &c., only three Militia regiments will be trained at the Curragh this year. We believe these are the Kildare Rifles and the Dublin City and Dublin County Militia—the Kildares training in June, and the others in July. The time is short for training Militia regiments, and there is so much to learn that an occasional day with the Regulars in brigade will be as much as they will be able to afford. Should the weather be favourable, we may anticipate a very pleasant two months for the troops on the Curragh of Kildare.

SURGEONS FOR THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—It is rumoured that a new Warrant for the Medical Service of the Navy is in contemplation; might I be permitted to suggest that the clause affecting the age of candidates for the Service should be reconsidered? Why should the age-limit be fixed so early as 28? Is it not possible that by this regulation the Service may shut out many desirable surgeons, and if so, why do we retain it? A number of apparently good reasons can, no doubt, be given in its support, but I cannot help thinking that these may be shown to be invalid. It will be said that there is a certain amount of rough, trying work to be done, in small ships or in unhealthy climates, for which the robust health of strong, young men is essential. True, but while still questioning whether a man is better fitted for gunboats and African or West Indian stations at 28 or at 32, I would point out that by allowing men to join up to a later age we do not deprive ourselves of the young men who are at our disposal as things are now. Why should the young candidates enter the less because the age-limit is longer? We should simply widen our field for selection, including more men of experience than at present. Again, it will be said that if a man enters later in life he must necessarily serve a shorter time, and, therefore, the country will lose by him, as compared with one who begins sooner. True, but such a reason carries little weight. How few doctors remain in the Service until compelled to retire, and if we adhered, as we ought, to the rule compelling them to retire at 65, then the men who had joined when older, having been promoted no faster than their younger colleagues, would not have attained to so high a rank on reaching that age, and their pensions would cost the country no more than do those of the numerous staff and fleet surgeons, who retire now long before they are obliged. This consideration also would induce men to join as early as possible, wherever the limit of age were fixed. Indeed, I am confident that doctors would serve longer if they joined when a little older, and after more mature consideration, for we see to-day how very many retire after a few years in the Service, having no doubt joined young, and soon becoming tired of it, not realising how much pleasanter it is than civil practice, of which perchance they know little or nothing. There exists, too, it would seem, to induce us to retain the regulation, a sort of undefined feeling that we do not want to have a lot of old men in the Service who are a little past their work, &c. But this vague feeling rests on no rational ground. And lastly, the age-limit is said to be "a safeguard to the Service against the admission of those who may have been the failures and rolling-stones of civil practice." This is no tenable objection. The best safeguard against the admission of unsuitable men is the examination by the very efficient staff of the Department, who would not fail to reject such as are professionally incapable; while a man who is professionally competent may have failed in civil practice, through a lack of some personal qualities which might not prevent him being a good Naval doctor and a good shipmate; but it is not by simply drawing a hard line at 28, that we can hope to secure as candidates none but men of the best tone. It can thus be shown that by lengthening the limit of age to 32, or even more, we lose nothing, and distinctly increase our opportunities of selection; while we throw open the Service to a number of men who have tried civil practice (gaining thereby valuable experience), and finding it very different from the golden ideas cherished by the lately-qualified student, who, looking upon an easy thousand a year and a neat brougham as things of the immediate future, turns his back contemptuously upon the "Services," enter it with a full appreciation of its advantages, and a will to remain in it. The newly-qualified students, with plenty of boyish folly, talk pretty tall about "the doctor's position on board," &c.; but the older and more sensible men will recognise the solid advantages, as well as the pleasure, of cruising under the white ensign, honoured and respected everywhere, wearing the blue uniform, and enjoying continually charming society; while his well-assured fees are easily earned by attendance on patients under the same roof as himself, as contrasted with the thousand vexations and miseries of a country or small town practice ashore. Having abundant opportunities of observing the attitude of students towards the Service in a large medical school, I feel confident that an extension of the age-limit would produce a larger and better supply of candidates, and as one who entered the profession solely with a view of joining the Navy, I naturally write with the best of intentions and wishes towards it.—I am, Sir, &c.,

Medical Student.

A FUSILIER BRIGADE.

"Digamma" writes:—"I was interested in seeing in a recent number of your paper a paragraph on the brigading of regiments, with a special reference to the difficulties in the way of applying the system to the Highland regiments. Some months ago I had the honour of pointing out in your columns the facilities for and advisability of brigading those Fusilier regiments who are intimately connected with and recruited in Ireland. They are the following:—87th Royal Irish Fusiliers, recruited at Galway; 101st Royal Bengal Fusiliers, recruited at Tralee; 102nd Royal Madras Fusiliers, recruited at Naas; 103rd Royal Bombay Fusiliers, recruited at Naas; 104th Bengal Fusiliers, recruited at Tralee. Why should these five regiments not be formed into an Irish Fusilier brigade,—say two battalions at home, two abroad, and always one stationed in Dublin, so as to form, in fact, a kind of Irish Guards? The regiments are almost entirely composed of Irishmen, and the only objection is that the 87th is linked with another regiment, and has not those associations linked with the others that they have, being all old company's regiments, and among the oldest in the Service. But, even leaving out the 87th, why should the others not be formed into a Fusilier brigade?"

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). A massive brass tablet to the memory of the late Sir Charles Fitzgerald Rushout, Bart., has just been placed in Holy Trinity Church, Windsor. This handsome and well-merited tribute has been subscribed for by the officers of the regiment, in which the late baronet served. It is mounted on black marble, and measures 6 ft. 6 in. by 3 ft. 3 in. The entire work has been executed by Messrs. E. Matthews and Sons, 377 Oxford Street, London, W.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The regiment has been made the subject of so many and such virulent attacks since it left England for Zululand, that it must be gratifying to all ranks to know how highly its services are spoken of by all officers who have returned from the seat of war. Gen. Marshall has placed on record his sense of its admirable conduct, and Sir Garnet Wolseley also speaks in the highest terms of the regiment.

2nd Dragoon Guards will move from Dublin to the Belfast district about the end of this month or the first week in May. The head-quarters will proceed to Dundalk, two troops to Belfast, one to Belturbet, and one to Longford.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. Bellwood has assumed duty as Adjutant of the Nottinghamshire Yeomanry Cavalry at Worksop, pending appointment.

4th Dragoon Guards proceed from York to Aldershot for the drill season.

5th Dragoon Guards are to be moved from Aldershot after the drill season.

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers). On Jan. 13 a squadron turned out with two guns of C-3, R.A., the whole under the command of Lieut.-Col. Fryer, and proceeded to near Ali Boghan, where a large body of Mohmunds were attempting to cross the river. The enemy were successfully shelled and driven back, some of their leaders being killed. On the 15th Capt. Burnley's squadron from Basawul formed part of Col. Boisragon's force, at the defeat of the Mohmunds, near Dakka. A squadron of the regiment took part in the Lughmann Valley expedition, which left Jellalabad on Jan. 27, and explored the country as far as Buddiabad, returning to Jellalabad on March 5. The whole regiment is at present at Jellalabad, with the exception of Capt. Calvert's troop, which is at Barikhab. It is expected that the regiment will be stationed for the hot weather at Jellalabad, with one squadron at Gundamuck.

7th Dragoon Guards will, according to existing arrangements, winter at Aldershot.

5th Lancers. The Times' correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta on the 11th inst. :—"Gen. Massy has had an interview with the Commander-in-Chief at Umballa. It is reported that Sir F. Haines has acquitted him of disobedience of orders, but holds that he was wrong in his tactics. It is said, however, that several cavalry and artillery officers who were present at the action of Dec. 11 have made statements in writing which entirely exculpate Gen. Massy. The matter now awaits the Viceroy's arrival at Simla for final decision." The Pioneer defends Brigdr.-Gen. Massy in regard to the Military points which have been raised in connection with his recall. It says :—"He was obliged to fight. The noise of his firing informed General Macpherson of his whereabouts, and enabled the 200 men of the 72nd to run up and bar the way to Sherpur, which otherwise was open to the enemy. General Massy's attack also held the enemy in check at a period when every moment of time was of value in re-establishing the safety of Sherpur, left almost denuded of troops by the absence of the three brigades, which were wandering about, independent of each other, in search of an enemy of which the Intelligence Department had no news." "This," says the Times of India, "is probably as favourable a view of the matter as can be taken, but it is far from a satisfactory one. Even granting that he was obliged to fight, he was not obliged to advance his guns after they had first opened fire upon the enemy. Moreover, he had no line of retreat ready for the guns, although he had advanced them—contrary to instructions—over exceptionally unfavourable ground. It was not his 'firing' which enabled the 200 men of the 72nd to run up and bar the way to Sherpur, nor was it the attack which he made, but the operations conducted under the immediate orders of Gen. Roberts, which held the enemy temporarily in check. From the first moment that the enemy discovered themselves to Gen. Massy they maintained a steady advance, and his obvious course under the circumstances was to maintain a steady retreat, a course which would have multiplied the resisting power of his small force." The Civil and Military Gazette joins with the Allahabad paper in questioning Gen. Roberts's freedom from blame in the matter. It says :—"Gen. Massy appears to have been left not only without infantry to get him out of a scrape in the event of his falling in with the enemy, but without information of the enemy's movements, without any instructions except those very indefinite ones which we have already noticed, and without even guides. Told to gain the Ghuzni road, he seems to have attempted to carry out his orders; but why was he not furnished with a route and guides to take him the way intended by Gen. Roberts, if indeed that officer knew his own mind as to the route Gen. Massy was to take?" "These," again says the Times of India, "may be very pertinent questions as affecting the Commander-in-Chief, but Gen. Massy knew the nature and capabilities of the force he commanded, and his action has therefore to be judged of wholly apart from anything for which his chief may be blameworthy."

6th Dragoons march from Edinburgh for Colchester, on being relieved by the 21st Hussars from Leeds early in May.

11th Hussars leave Aldershot after the drill season. Brevet Major Rivett-Carnac, late military secretary to Sir Richard Temple at Bombay, has been appointed military secretary to Lieut.-Gen. Warre, Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army.

20th Hussars. Capt. Lloyd is about to join the intelligence branch of the Quartermaster-General's office at Dublin.

21st Hussars. The regiment commences its march from Leeds to Edinburgh to-day, and will arrive at its destination about the 1st prox. Lieut.-Col. Wake is about to retire upon a pension.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A numerous company assembled on Tuesday afternoon, in the daintily-appointed theatre attached to the Royal Artillery Barracks, Woolwich, when the annual assault-of-arms in aid of the Garrison Charities took place, under the patronage of Major-Gen. Turner, C.B., which, principally through the energetic exertions of Capt. Anstruther, R.A., who has always been the very life-blood of the movement, Lieut. Barker, R.A., superintendent of the Gymnasium, and Serjt.-Major Bryan, Royal Gymnasium, resulted in a most well-deserved and thoroughly expected success.

The Director of Naval Transports (Vice-Admiral Sir W. Mends, K.C.B.), who is on a visit of inspection at Portsmouth, has approved of the following round of artillery troop-service for H.M.S. Assistance :—To leave on Friday, April 16 (yesterday), for Dublin, with 7th Baty., 4th Brig.; Dublin for Avonmouth on 20th, with 6th Baty. 2nd Brig.; Avonmouth for Cork on the 22nd, with C Baty. The day previous to her departure for Zululand, the Empress Eugénie was conveyed over in her carriage from Chislehurst to Woolwich, and presented to the Royal Artillery officers' mess a very large and handsome shield; and the same mess has also received an addition to its large stock of ornamental plate in the shape of a very elegant centre-piece from a distinguished officer, who occupies an exalted position in the Army.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The following Government gazette extraordinary has been issued in India :—"Lieut.-Gen. Sir M. K. Kennedy, K.C.S.I., R.E., having resigned his appointment as Secretary to Government Public Works and the Railway Departments in this Presidency, the Governor in Council desires to avail himself of this opportunity of placing on record his sense of the exemplary zeal and the conspicuous ability displayed by this officer at all times, in the discharge of his duties in the Bombay Public Works Department. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Michael Kennedy joined the Department on June 23, 1843, and served in Khandesh, Surat, Aden, and Satara until April 29, 1861, when he was appointed Superintending Engineer, Southern Division; which post he held till July 18, 1863, when he was nominated Secretary to Government Public Works and Railway Departments. His general acquaintance with the greater part of the Bombay Presidency, combined with his conscientious zeal, excellent judgment, and remarkable ability, render his services particularly valuable to Government at all times in disposing of important questions relating to Public Works of every description; but especially so during the famine of 1876 and 1877, when he rendered Government devoted and able assistance in its efforts to organise a system of relief suitable to the circumstances which then existed, adapting them to the professional and non-professional resources of the State; developing suitable projects of public works; obtaining an adequate return for expenditure on relief; ensuring village inspection being carried out for the prevention of mortality among the poorer classes; securing on the one hand the safety of the people, and on the other hand economy of the public expenditure; and in all these respects showing a tenacity of purpose and a capacity for administration which proved most valuable to the Government he served. The Governor in Council, while congratulating him on the great results of his past labours in this Presidency, desires to express his best wishes for Sir Michael Kennedy's future welfare."

27th Inniskillings. On Feb. 25 a handsome and massive silver five-branched candelabra was presented to the Rev J. Henderson, garrison chaplain at Hong Kong. It is supported by three sphinxes; on the sides of the pedestal are the Castle of Inniskilling, with St. George's colours, and the inscription; and on the plinth are three horses, the white horse being one of the emblems of the regiment. The design is taken from a centre-piece belonging to the regiment, and is elegant and chaste. The inscription was as follows :—"Presented to the Rev. John Henderson, by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates, 27th Inniskillings, February, 1880." The presentation was made by Lieut.-Col. Geddes, in a very flattering speech.

29th Regiment. Lieut. Conyngham and 2nd Lieut. Begbie have passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

35th Regiment. Lieut. Cafe is named for the vacant company.

40th Regiment. An officer is, it is said, to be brought in to fill the company vacant by the retirement of Capt. Kelly.

ROYAL MARINES.

The following promotions, dated April 5, 1880, have taken place in the Royal Marine Artillery, viz. :—Major F. E. Halliday to be Lieut-Col., vice Poore, deceased; and Capt. (Supernumerary) F. A. Ogle to be Major, vice Halliday; Capt. Ogle, consequent on his promotion, will vacate the appointment he holds as adjutant of the Antrim Artillery Militia.

Lieut. J. C. R. Scott, R.M.L.I., H.M.S. Audacious, will, on the expiration of three weeks' leave of absence which has been granted him, be relieved by Lieut. C. H. Edge, R.M.L.I.

With reference to Article 1,096, page 345, of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, under which it is necessary that if a non-commissioned officer of Royal Marines serving afloat is reduced for misconduct, he must be reduced to the ranks, and to the provisions of the Army Discipline and Regulation Acts, 1879, under which Marines serving on shore may be reduced either to a lower grade of non-commissioned officer, or to the ranks, the Admiralty, with a view of assimilating the practice afloat and on shore, are pleased to direct, by Circular No. 9 L of April 7, 1880, that non-commissioned officers of Royal Marines serving on board her Majesty's ships shall no longer, when reduced, necessarily revert to the ranks, but may be reduced to a lower grade, or to the ranks. This decision modifies Article 1,096, page 345, and that part of Appendix VI., page 685, of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, which has reference to the reduction of Royal Marines.

51st Light Infantry. Lieut. Preston, having passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee, has been appointed interpreter, vice Capt. Smyth.

53rd Regiment. Mr. J. G. Scott, late lieut., died in Alfred Place West, S.W., on the 10th inst., aged 37 years. He entered the Army, June 30, 1863; became lieut., May 8, 1866; and retired ten years ago by sale of his commission.

54th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Hughes succeeds Col. Ralston, 70th Regt., in the command of the Darjeeling Convalescent Depôt.

57th Regiment. The Standard says:—Lord Gifford, V.C., has not accepted the Colonial Secretaryship of Ceylon, but a similar appointment in another of her Majesty's Colonies. Before leaving England, Lord Gifford is to be married to Miss Street, the daughter of Gen. Street. The marriage is fixed for the 22nd inst. 2nd Lieut. James is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and is about to embark for India to join a native regiment on probation.

59th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Lacy, commanding the regiment, writes to us from Candahar:—"The following paragraph appeared in your issue of Dec. 20 last:—'We always thought that a lieutenant-colonel was compelled to retire on attaining the age of 60 years? Then, why allow exceptions to the rule? In the case of one officer commanding a British regiment at Candahar, the limit was reached some time ago, and the officer still continues in the performance of his duties. The matter must necessarily be of importance to the officers of the regiment, as we find the junior captain has 27 years' service, and it would be rather unfair to deny him promotion, when all the time he has been held back in consequence of the retention of a senior who is over age.' As the only two British regiments at Candahar for some time previous to the date of your paper were the 59th and the 2nd Batn. 60th, and as Lieut.-Col. Collins (who commands the latter) is comparatively a young man, I am led to suppose that the paragraph in question refers to me. If so, I beg to inform you it is perfectly untrue, as at the time of the insertion, instead of having reached the limit of age therein stated, I had over two years to run. If your informant happens to be an officer who is at present in the regiment, or one who has been in it, it is quite inexcusable of him giving you the wrong information, as he could, by referring to the officers' records, which are kept in the orderly-room, and are open to the inspection of any of the officers, have ascertained that the information he gave you was incorrect."

60th Rifles. Lieut.-Col. Ashburnham joins the 3rd from the 2nd Batn. on promotion, and Major Crosbie the 2nd from the 1st Batn. Capts. Howden remains with the 1st Batn.; Capt. Michell is transferred from the 3rd to the 2nd Batn.; Capt. Ward from the 4th to the 1st Batn. Capt. Carpenter, 1st Batn., returns to regimental duty on the 1st prox., on the completion of his term of service as a superintendent of gymnasia.

70th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Ralston is about to be relieved in command of the Darjeeling convalescent depôt.

72nd Highlanders. Lieut.-Col. Clarke is announced by telegram from India to have died at Allahabad on the 10th inst., from illness contracted at Cabul. Col. Clarke served with the 53rd Regt. in the Indian campaign of 1857-9, including the actions of Chutra, Gopalgunge, Khodagunge, and entry into Futtehghur, the storming and capture of Meangunge, the siege and capture of Lucknow, the affair of Koorsie, the passage of the Gogra, at Fyzabad, the action of Toolsepore, and minor affairs (mentioned in despatches, and medal and clasp). He entered the Army, Aug. 19, 1851; became lieut., Dec. 2, 1853; capt., Aug. 9, 1860; major, June 14, 1872; and brevet lieut.-col., Nov. 11, 1878. By Col. Clarke's death, Capt. Guinness and Lieut.-Kane will obtain promotion.

81st Regiment. Brevet Major Jones, who has been employed with the Kurum column as brigade-major, has been invalided from Afghanistan.

84th Regiment. Capt. Newbigging is about to retire on a pension of £200 a year, with the honorary rank of major. Major Lees is ordered to proceed to Pontefract, to relieve Major Simpson at the depôt.

87th Fusiliers. Capt. Ferguson will retire on full pay during the present year, on the completion of the prescribed term of service.

88th Regiment. Serjt.-Major Morrison has been recommended for the quartermastership, vice Cousins, transferred to the Roscommon Militia.

94th Regiment. We learn from the Transvaal that two companies have been moved from Fort Albert to Marabastadt. A company has proceeded from Lydenburg to form the garrison of Middleburgh. In consequence of the prevalence of fever among the troops at Sekukuni's Town, it has been decided that they will be removed at an early date.

95th Regiment is held in readiness for removal to Aldershot during the early part of next month. Capt. Sparkes is a candidate for an appointment in the Army Pay Department.

102nd Fusiliers. Lieut. Way acts as musketry-instructor to the Carlow Rifles Militia during this year's training.

103rd Fusiliers. The South Australian Register has the following:—"The popularity of Major Godwin with the Volunteers of South Australia was pretty conclusively proved by the way the men mustered voluntarily to bid him farewell on Sunday, Feb. 22, on the occasion of his departure by the mail steamer Assam for Southampton. When it became known that the Major intended to leave for England, and had sent in his resignation as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General of the S.A.V.M.F., officers and men vied with each other to show their sense of his worth and their regret at his departure. By the officers he was banquetted and presented with a splendid album containing the portraits of the officers, cabinet-size (coloured), and the men showed their esteem for him by requesting to be allowed to bid him farewell with military honours. Accordingly on Sunday, Feb. 22, all branches of the force—cavalry, artillery, and infantry,—paraded to the number of nearly 500 at North Terrace, and proceeded to Glenelg by the morning train. Nearly all the officers were present. The Volunteers were drawn up in order under command of Lieut.-Col. Mathews, and led by the band, marched down the jetty, where they drew up in line on both sides of the pier. Major Godwin came down the jetty about three o'clock, and was saluted, the band playing 'Auld Lang Syne.' Col. Mathews then conveyed to the Major an expression of the cordial feeling with which he was regarded by the whole force, and their thorough appreciation of his qualities as as officer and a gentleman. He added that he had never known an officer of the Volunteer Force of South Australia accorded a more earnest and flattering farewell, and he was sure Major Godwin would be much missed by those who knew how zealously he had striven to promote the interests and discipline of the Volunteers. Major Godwin, having briefly returned thanks, remarked that in all probability he should visit South Australia again. Three hearty cheers were given by the Volunteers, and the Major, accompanied by Mrs. Godwin and several immediate friends, left in the Fairy for the mail steamer."

106th Light Infantry. Capt. Whitby is a candidate for admission to the Staff College, and will go up for the entrance examination in June. Capt. James has been appointed superintendent of gymnasia in the Chatham District, from the 30th inst. Capt. Berwick has been selected for the adjutancy of the 1st Durham Militia.

Rifle Brigade. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales visited Aldershot yesterday, and inspected the 1st Batn., which, under command of Lieut.-Col. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, was drawn up on the Queen's Parade, North Camp. The inspection over, the Prince proceeded to the saluting point and saw the battalion march past. A few movements having been precisely and steadily executed, his Royal Highness expressed his approbation of the clean, smart, and soldier-like appearance of the battalion. The Prince of Wales was afterwards conducted by the Duke of Connaught and Lord E. Clinton to the officers' mess, where he partook of luncheon. The 3rd Batn., stationed at Richmond Barracks, Dublin, will be moved to the Curragh early next month for the drill season. Brevet Major Buller, 3rd Batn., has joined the depôt at Winchester for two years.

Ordnance Store Department. Deputy-Assist.-Comy.-Gen. R. T. Stainforth is ordered from Athlone to Chester, to relieve Assist.-Comy.-Gen. W. B. Le Geyt.

Medical Department. The Pioneer has the following:—"After a service of 38 years, Surg.-Gen. J. H. Ker Innes, C.B., is about to retire from the Army, having made over charge of his important duties to Surg.-Gen. Crawford, Dr. Innes, having been transferred from Malta to India in March, 1876, has filled the position of principal medical officer of the British Forces in India since that date, has conducted the entire medical arrangements of both the late Afghan wars, and was present at the attack on and capture of Ali Musjid. Under his arrangements, the new system of general hospitals has been introduced into the field, thus leading to greatly increased efficiency and diminished expenditure. In taking leave of Dr. Innes, we may declare with confidence that he carries with him the respect and good-wishes of his important department, which he has always administered with justice and firmness, tempered by kindness to his officers and sympathy for the sick; and, while wishing him farewell, we can only regret that his services should have been so badly requited, and that an officer who has done so much, and has been for 20 years a Companion of the Bath, should be allowed to leave the Army without having been advanced to the knighthood he so well deserves." The following appointments have been made to the Administrative Medical circles in the Bengal Presidency from the 1st inst.:—Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. Gibbons, C.B., to the Allahabad Division; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. E. I. Franklyn, M.D., to the Meerut Division; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. T. E. Clutterbuck, M.D., to the Oudh Division; and Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Surg.-Major J. Hannon, to officiate, with temporary rank, as Deputy-Surg.-Gen., British Medical Service, Sirhind Division, during the absence on field service of Deputy-Surg.-Gen. H. B. Hassard. Surg.-Major J. R. Croker has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee.

Royal Aberdeenshire Highlanders. Capt. Oxley, 92nd Foot, has been appointed adjt.

The Indian Army.

14th Bengal Cavalry. Lieut.-Col. T. G. Ross, Bengal S.C., has been confirmed in his appointment as commandant.

13th Bengal N.I. Major G. B. Stevens, wing-commander, has been appointed second-in-command, vice Lieut.-Col. W. Playfair; and Capt. E. H. Bingham, to be wing-commander.

18th Bengal N.I. Lieut.-Col. W. Winson, commandant, has been granted leave to England for two years, on private affairs.

44th Bengal N.I. In his despatch on the capture of Konoma, Naga Hills, Brigdr.-Gen. Nation writes:—"Where all behaved with such extreme gallantry and self-devotion, it would be almost invidious to make distinctions, but I cannot help particularly mentioning the brave Col. Nuttall, who was always the first to lead, and the last to withdraw when an assault had been made." Lieut. Ridgeway also behaved most gallantly. "We (Lahore paper) greatly regret to hear that the regiment is to remain broken up in small detachments in the Naga hills during the ensuing summer. A more efficient plan for injuring in every possible way one of the finest native regiments in the Service could hardly be devised. The gallant little Goorkhas who compose the regiment have already lost fifty men killed in action, fifteen more are about to be invalided from wounds, and a great number are going on sick-leave. Reduced in strength and charged with the task of keeping order in a very extended line of operations, frittered away in small bodies and harassed by continued exposure, the regiment is not receiving fair-play, to say nothing of suitable recognition for its recent distinguished services. The troubles in the Naga country are far from over, and in neglecting to provide the necessary reinforcements, and in not relieving troops already overworked, the Government of India, in its military department, is deliberately inviting disaster." Major T. N. Walker, second-in-command, has been appointed commandant, vice Nuttall, retired; Lieut.-Col. D. Robertson, second-in-command; and Capt. R. K. Ridgeway, wing-commander.

1st Hyderabad Cavalry. The following appointment has been made:—Lieut. G. Adye, officiating squadron-officer, 2nd Cavalry, to be squadron-officer (supernumerary) and adjt., vice Major J. G. D. Walker, who vacates on promotion.

3rd Hyderabad Cavalry. We (Bombay Gazette) learn that the acting command, vacant by the absence of Col. Dowker, on two years' furlough, has been given to Major Oswald FitzGerald, the second in command. The appointment was closely contested, both by Major FitzGerald and Col. Hill, of the 4th Cavalry. Col. Hill, although senior in rank, has not been so long in the Contingent as Major FitzGerald, and as the latter officer belongs to the same regiment, it was but fit that he should get the vacant command. Major FitzGerald is a gallant officer, and was present during a part of the Franco-German war. He is very popular with both Europeans and natives, and the men of his cavalry almost venerate him. We need not say that Major FitzGerald's recent appointment has been received with much approval and satisfaction by the men of his corps and by his many friends.

4th Punjab Infantry. The following appointments have been made:—Lieut. O. C. Radford, wing-officer and quartermaster, to be adjutant, vice Lieut. T. J. O'D. Renny, died of wounds received in action near Zawa, in the Zaimucht country; Lieut. A. Daniell, wing-officer, to be quartermaster, vice Lieut. Radford; Lieut. H. D. Gerrard, officiating wing-officer, 3rd Punjab Infantry, to be wing-officer, vice Lieut. Renny.

Bengal Medical Service. The following appointments have been made to the Administrative Medical Circle, Bengal Presidency, from the 1st inst.:—Deputy-Surg.-Gen. W. B. Beatson, M.D., to the Lahore Division; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. J. Clarke, M.D., to the Eastern Frontier District; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. J. E. Tuson, M.D., to the Presidency District; Deputy-Surg.-Gen. R. H. Perkins, to the Gwalior and Saugor Districts; and Deputy-Surg.-Gen. A. C. C. De-Renzy, to the Punjab Frontier District.

Central India Horse. Capt. H. A. Vincent has passed the high proficiency examination in the Urdu language.

3rd Bombay N.I. Lieut.-Col. J. R. Strutt has returned to duty as wing-commander, from leave in England.

19th Bombay N.I. Major W. Jacob has resumed duty as second-in-command, from leave in England.

30th Bombay N.I. Lieut. D. Cole, officiating wing-officer and quartermaster, 14th Bengal N.I., has been appointed wing-officer.

1st Madras N.I. The Bombay Gazette has the following:—"Officers of the Bengal Army now serving in the Khyber and at Jellalabad, are somewhat exercised to find that the healthiest troops in that unhealthy region belong to the despised Madras Army. In Bengal they look down upon the regiments from the dark Presidency with the most supreme disdain, and the aspirations of the latter to have a share in the batta and other rewards that are being showered so plentifully upon the Northern army have been treated with scarcely concealed contempt. To send the wretched Madras sepoy to the snows and frosts of Afghanistan was to send him, according to Bengal, to certain death; and however useful he might be in taking over Bengal and Punjab stations, and so liberating the regiments there for service at the front, it was confidently assumed that he was not fitted to cope with Afghans on their native hills. So far as appearance goes, it is a fact, we believe, that a Madras sepoy, in his ridiculous dress, does look a somewhat miserable object on a cold morning in the Khyber, but for some mysterious reason these miserable-looking men contrive to bear up against the hardships of campaigning far more successfully than do the dashing-looking Sikh or Poorbia of the Bengal corps. We learn that a short time ago the 4th Madras Infantry at Jellalabad had only one man in hospital, while Punjab regiments at the same station had from 70 to 80 men unfit for duty. At Dakka—considered the most unhealthy station on the line—the 1st Madras N.I. have only a dozen men on the sick-list, although the regiment has seen some hard marching and bivouacking in the open, during which the sepoys had a capital opportunity of testing their constitutions, by a slight error in commissariat arrangements which deprived the corps of rations or food for three days. Possibly the serviceable condition of the corps above referred to, coupled with the fact that, unlike Bengal sepoys, Madrasees never desert in the field, may induce the authorities at home to pause before carrying into effect the sweeping reduction of the old coast army recommended by the recent Simla Commission."

4TH MADRAS N.I. (See 1st Madras N.I.)

THE VICTORIA CROSS.

WAR OFFICE, April 12, 1880.

The Queen has signified her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross upon Trooper Peter Brown, Cape Mounted Rifles, whose claim has been submitted for approval, for his meritorious conduct at Moirosi's Mountain on April, 8, 1879. During the assault on Moirosi's Mountain on April 8, 1879, whilst lying under cover waiting for the order to recommence the advance, Trooper Brown heard two men, who had been wounded some time before, crying out for water. He carried a water-bottle to these men, under a heavy fire, to an adjacent rock to which they had crept for shelter. Whilst giving the first man water he was wounded severely in the right thigh, and immediately afterwards a bullet shattered his right arm, the use of which he has never recovered.

INDIA.

The Government of India have recently established a fund for the benefit of the families of native soldiers killed in Afghanistan, and the subscription list is headed with a donation of 400 rupees from Thakur Protab Kudr Sing, Talukdar of Rampur Mathura in the Sitapur district.

The reduced "Simla allowances" are to be applied mutatis mutandis to officers required to accompany the several local governments to hill stations and other sanataria.

Cols. H. F. Disbrowe, Bombay S.C., and O. Wilkinson, C.B., Bengal Cavalry, have been permitted to retire from the Service.

Gen. J. Ross, C.B., formerly of the Rifle Brigade, is to succeed Major-Gen. R. O. Bright, C.B., in command of the 2nd Division, Khyber Field Force. Gen. Bright is to be inspector-general of communications between Cabul and Peshawur, under the immediate orders of the Commander-in-Chief, and is not in any way subordinated to Gen. Roberts. Brig.-Gen. Hankin is to command the Peshawur district on Gen. Ross's departure. Gen. Hill is to command the second brigade of the Reserve Division, with his head-quarters at Gundamuck.

In view of the publication of the official Quarterly Army List now in preparation at the War Office, the Secretary of State as Editor-in-Chief has called for statements of the Staff and War Services of officers of the Indian Army. Every officer of the Bengal Staff Corps and Indian Army, combatant or non-combatant, is required to prepare and transmit to the Adjutant-General at Simla, as soon as possible, a statement of his staff service (i.e., service in appointments equivalent to appointments on the General Staff of the Army,) and the campaigns, &c., in which he may have been engaged, the decorations and rewards he may have received, and any mention that may have been made concerning him in published despatches."

The Lahore paper has the following:—"As we long ago predicted would certainly come to be the case, our reserve of European officers for service in any of the numerous capacities which war creates, is completely exhausted. We have no young gentlemen to fill the vacancies of subalterns in native regiments, nor older and more experienced officers for the departments which, under the strain of campaigning, demand constant replenishing. As the war drags along and men get sick and worn out, this pressure will increase; when the work suffers, Government will awake to the mischief effected by successive incompetent heads of nearly all the Simla bureaux during a series of years; but the task of the reconstruction of an army is not easy, and by no possibility can it be brief. We yet await any sign of preparation for a new organisation such as will give us men, not boys, for British soldiers; such as will give us a native army numerically equal to its work, and with a sufficient complement of English officers to lead it. But these two simple desiderata are as far from official discernment as ever, and schemes for retrenchment of army expenditure are alone capable of obtaining a hearing. How long this dangerous system can last without catastrophe is the problem we appear to be practically working out."

The Government of India has conferred a boon on all officers, by having decided to publish monthly, like the War Office, instead of in the Gazette of India, such instructions and regulations relating to financial and administrative subjects connected with the Army as may be thought fit. The first monthly number has been issued.

The following consolidated sums have been admitted by the Controller of Military Accounts for the medical charge of field and base hospitals in Afghanistan:—For a surgeon-major over 20 years' service, Rs. 1,250 per mensem; for a surgeon-major under 20 years' service, Rs. 1,050; for a surgeon above five years' service, Rs. 850; for a surgeon under five years', Rs. 450.

ARMY TRANSPORT.

At the Royal United Service Institution, yesterday afternoon, Major Wilkinson Shaw, garrison instructor at Aldershot, delivered a lecture on "Army Transport; the Organisation and Tactics of Military Convoys in War." Lieut.-Gen. Walker, C.B., Director-General of Military Education, presided. The lecturer said the subject was directly connected with one of the burning Military questions of the day. Up to the present time, we had always consistently waited for the outbreak of hostilities before we organised our war transports, and the results had been inextricable confusion, extravagant outlay, and inefficient establishments. What was indispensable to meet the true requirements of the case was a carefully considered system, based upon recognised principles. Some efforts in the right direction had lately been made, but as yet the immediate subject of the lecture had not received official attention. He described the duties of the transport officers, baggage-masters, and advocated the principle of sub-divisions of about 25 carriages under one transport officer, which he spoke of as "the tactical unit of the convoy." In considering the general possibilities of attack on the convoy, the commander should not disguise from himself that there were many advantages on the part of the attackers, who were able to choose the time and place of attack. The composition of the force by which the convoy was assailed became an important consideration in the defence. By the aid of a model representing a convoy of 100 waggons, the lecturer pointed out, in case of threatened attack, the disposition of the troops and guns, the packing of waggons, and so forth, showing how a force of attackers should be resisted by the smaller party forming the convoy. He attached great importance to careful reconnaissances on the part of advanced scouts, remarking that in these days of arms of precision these reconnaissances must be of an extended character. The lecturer also dwelt at length upon convoys by water and by railway, and then proceeded to consider the inseparable connection between the tactics of convoys and the economy of the transport service. Were we before long, as might not be impossible, to find ourselves confronted with an enemy skilled in the art of war, he could not but believe that those who had the power would, after all the warnings we had had, act with ordinary common-sense in the matter, and not wait to be aroused from their inaction by the pertinacious sound of the first shot fired in anger on the continent of Europe. He would, therefore, assume that the future organisation of our Transport Corps would be exclusively military, and they could not fail to purceive that the nearer the status and duties of transport officers approached those of officers of the general Staff, the more completely would the new organisation work in connection with the Army. The highest praise that could be bestowed upon the Army was to say that it could go anywhere and do anything; but without transport, an army could go nowhere and do nothing. If it was admitted that an efficient army transport was indispensable to the success of military operations in the field, it would not be denied that its organisation, discipline, and tactics were of great importance to those of the fighting branches. In the discussion which ensued, Lieut.-Col. Hale pointed out that a convoy on the march was greatly extended, and he asked the lecturer how he would defend his convoy from an attack by 600 mounted infantry, firing with long-range rifles. Mr. de Fonblanque urged that the department responsible for supply must have the control of the transport. Sir E. Strickland, K.C.B., who said he had seen a great deal of rough campaigning in New Zealand and Zululand, referred to the transport organised by Sir Evelyn Wood as most efficient in the face of enormous difficulties, standing out in strong contrast to the transport of other divisions. As a commissary-general of her Majesty's Army, he would not undertake the commissariat charge of any troops in the field, if any attempt was made to take from him the thorough command of his transport. He wished to see a school for transport duties established. The discussion was continued by Capt. Cockburn, Deputy-Comy.-Gen. Irvine, and Capt. Pratt, R.A. Major Shaw briefly replied. The Chairman, in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, mentioned that Sir M. Biddulph had told him that in the Afghan war he drilled his transport, and practised attacks from varying directions on the transport when in movement.

Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1880.

UNPOPULARITY in a greater or less degree is the portion of every Military Secretary at head-quarters. As the adviser of the Commander-in-Chief in all matters of patronage, the holder of that office has to say "No" to many, while he can say "Yes" to few. Men are naturally apt to handicap themselves highly in the race for professional advancement, and when the Military Secretary's estimate of their merits falls short of their own, their discontent often blossoms into a feeling of resentment more or less subdued. Of Sir Alfred Horsford, who has just relinquished the appointment, we may in all honesty say that during his five and a half years' tenure, he has earned—and what is more, has obtained—the very minimum of ungrateful feeling throughout the officers of the Army. On the many occasions upon which he has had to dissipate fond hopes and aspirations, he has done so with the courtesy of a high-bred gentleman and the kindliness of a sympathising comrade-in-arms. If, on the one hand, this description be not universally correct, if there be one or two—we do not think there are more—exceptions to it, it must, on the other hand, be borne in mind that there are certain men with an overweening estimate of their own claims, or even without such estimate, a determination to achieve by persistence what they have no right to by service. Patience, not excepting official patience, has its limits, and a peremptory refusal is sometimes inevitable. We are rather too well in the way of hearing complaints in this respect, but in the case of Sir Alfred Horsford, our "Lion's mouth" has been very much like a pillar-post in an uninhabited island. No doubt during his tenure of office there has been a feeling in the Army that certain corps have enjoyed an exceptional amount of official favour. It is hardly to be denied that those whose regimental career was associated with the green jacket obtained a large number of Staff appointments. But of none of the officers thus favoured can it be said that he was not well up to the work for which he was selected, or that in their case the public was not well served. The Military Secretary put forward those whom he personally knew to be fit, when probably there were others known to him only indirectly who were equally fit. But when we have said this, we have said all that could be urged by the best instructed and most zealous advocatus diaboli; and Sir Alfred Horsford retires from a peculiarly difficult and trying position with the cordial respect and good-feeling of those over whose professional fortunes he has for more than five years exercised the most powerful influence.

Her Majesty has confirmed the appointment of Major-General R. G. A. Luard as General officer commanding the Canadian Militia, vice Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., whose period of service in the appointment has expired. General Luard, who held previous to his promotion the appointment of Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Northern District, was for many years an Assistant-Inspector of Volunteers.

No fewer than seven regiments—viz., the 1st Dragoons, 3rd Hussars, 5th Lancers, 12th Lancers, 16th Lancers, 17th Lancers, and 21st Hussars—are now without veterinary surgeons, and some of them have been so for some months past. We trust pressure is not being brought on the head of the Veterinary Department by the War Office, to compel him to introduce the miserable departmental organisation which has had the effect of damaging so seriously a sister-Service. We know that the tendency at the War Office just now is to put a nail in the coffin of the regimental system, whenever an opportunity offers; but, in the case of the Veterinary Department, there is no reason, that we can see, why the old lines should be broken through. Yet it must be admitted that the delay which has taken place in filling vacancies has an ominous look.

The appointment of Commandant of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, has become vacant, Colonel R. C. Stewart, C.B., half-pay, late 2nd Foot, having accepted the offer of a brigade command on the Staff of the Madras Army. Colonel Stewart was Adjutant-General in Madras for some years previous to receiving the Netley appointment.

Major-General Campbell, C.B., will complete his period of service in his appointment as Director of Artillery and Stores in August next, but it has been decided to extend the officer's term of service for two years, his great experience as an artillerist being all-important, now that the question of large guns is again in a transitional state. General Campbell's continuance in office will be particularly acceptable to the officers of the Ordnance Store Department, for although they would naturally desire to have a permanent direction, yet of all past administrators of the Department, not one has so signally interested himself in its welfare. This is well known, and it would be a source of regret to the officers, as well as a misfortune to her Majesty's Service at large, for this Staff appointment to be handed over to another Artillery officer, when the present holder has shown such ability and knowledge, combined with tact and will, in his multifarious and difficult duties. We think there is matter for congratulation all round, save to the one who was waiting to step into vacant shoes.

Writing from Indian Head-quarters, a correspondent, who is behind the scenes, says:—"It is a matter of some regret that the Commander-in-Chief and the Viceroy do not rub along very amicably. Throughout the recent operations in Afghanistan, the Commander-in-Chief's opinions and advice have been practically set at naught. Sir Frederick Haines is regarded as a somewhat old-fashioned soldier, and it is possible that he may be so, but it is equally probable that he knows as much about soldiering as a man who has spent his life in composing verses in the bureaux of minor diplomatic posts. Long since Sir Frederic recommended most strongly that a strong division in reserve should be posted at Peshawur, ready to act in any emergency. This advice was deemed a too expensive precautionary measure by the Government of India, and General Roberts is now, in consequence, left with insufficient forces in the Sherpur cantonment, and the reserve division has, after all, to be raised, when the time for its effective action may, perhaps, be passing. At the same time, the Government of India issue a memorandum of their intentions with regard to the movement of troops, and the poor Commander-in-Chief has been absolutely ignored. At the Viceroy's levées, the Commander-in-Chief is observed to be very much out of spirits, and it is not much to be wondered at. He has, however, as far as it is possible for him, had his slap at the Government. Shortly before the late crisis at Cabul, Sir Peter Lumsden, the late chief of the Staff and Adjutant-General, went home on furlough, and Sir Frederic issued a farewell order, which it is acknowledged could not have been more elaborate had it been an obituary notice. In it all the successes in Afghanistan Sir Frederic ascribed to himself, as the result of the ability and omniscience of his Chief of the Staff, and the order is in consequence regarded throughout the service in India as a manifesto against the Viceregal appropriation of the conduct of military affairs. It really would seem that the time has come for a stand to be made against this universal domination of the civilian in India. A distinguished public servant not long ago made the remark that "the day had gone by for the rough-and-ready soldier administration of India." That is quite possible, and the army do not in the least desire to interfere in any way with the functions of the civilian. At the same time, it would be desirable that in military matters the civil element should be equally entirely unknown. The present disturbances in the Naga Hills are a case in point. At the first outbreak of the storm, Mr. Damant, a civilian, requested that the settlement of affairs might be left in his hands. Troops were sent forward, but Mr. Damant would have none of them, and did all he knew to keep them off the scene. The result was that on Mr. Damant's taking the matter into his own hands, and showing himself bodily and personally to the insurgents, they took his head off; and now the military have not only to quiet affairs in that district, but also to avenge a totally unnecessary murder."

Brevet Major C. L. Harvey, 71st Highland Light Infantry, has been appointed Garrison Instructor in North Britain from the 8th inst., in succession to Captain J. A. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, who, as we stated some weeks ago, has resigned the appointment, in order to proceed to South Australia as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General to the local forces. Major Harvey held the appointment of Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General at Army Head-quarters, Ireland, when he was sent on special service to South Africa in May, 1878. He was employed as Staff Officer during the Secocoeni campaign, 1878, and throughout the Zulu campaign, 1879. No officer who served in South Africa did more useful work and earned more thoroughly official recognition.

The distinguished-service reward vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General W. C. Forrest, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 8th Hussars, has been awarded to Major-General W. F. Macbean. General Macbean entered the Service July 7, 1837, and became Major-General October 1, 1877.

The step of unattached promotion granted to Lieutenant Middleton, 15th Hussars, is an act of justice to an old subaltern of Cavalry who has been disappointed in his promotion by the retention of his regiment in India. The course adopted by the Horse Guards cannot fail to meet with approval, and is a further evidence of the desire of that department to do what lays in its power to meet cases of personal hardship produced by the exigencies of the Service.

The Honorary Secretary of the Army Inter-Regimental Rifle-Match writes to say that the entries up to date, and not including those from regiments serving abroad—the list being open to the end of the month in their case—are as follows:—Officers, 116; non-commissioned officers and men, 344; battalions with entries exceeding seven of all ranks, and therefore qualified to compete for the team prizes, 33. These numbers are very satisfactory, considering the high entrances which were purposely imposed, in order that none but the best and most confident rifle-shots might be induced to come forward; and it is expected they will be considerably increased by entries from Bermuda and the West Indies, the Mediterranean, and South Africa.

We understand that Captain J. T. Bowers, late of the 6th and 59th Regiments—in the former, he was for some years adjutant of the 1st Battalion—has been offered and has accepted the adjutancy of the Left Wing, Cape Mounted Riflemen. Captain Bowers obtained his commission May 18, 1855; and retired from the 59th eight years ago.

An official communiqué to the daily papers confirms the announcement we were able to make about six weeks ago as to the retirement of General Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B., from his appointment as chief of the Army Purchase Commission, which position he accepted in 1871. The pay attached to the office was £1,500 per annum. General Lugard, as we stated, is to be succeeded by an unpaid official.

The army corps which will take part in this year's autumn manœuvres of the German Army will be the Corps of Guards and the Third Army Corps. Time and place of the movements remain yet to be determined. The other German army corps will confine themselves to brigade and divisional manœuvres, as well as to regimental drill. Cavalry operations will also, as usual, take place this year on an extensive scale. Prolonged pontoonier exercises, lasting six weeks, will be undertaken on the Elbe, near Harburg.

The Chief Constableship of Norfolk is vacant, Colonel Black having resigned the office on the grounds of advancing years and failing health. There are 300 candidates for the appointment, which is worth about £700 a year.

Brevet Major R. B. Lane, Rifle Brigade, who was aide-de-camp to Major-General Newdigate at Chatham, and afterwards in Zululand, has rejoined that officer's staff at Dover in a similar capacity.

Only quite recently statistical data have been published of the losses suffered by the Russians during the campaign in Asia Minor. They are officially stated as follows:—Officers: killed, 453 (4·3 per cent.); wounded, 1,650 (15·8 per cent.); missing, 18 (0·17 per cent.); total, 2,139. Rank and file: killed, 14,493 (3·02 per cent.); wounded, 51,066 (10·5 per cent.); missing, 4,450 (0·9 per cent.); total, 70,478. The army, as we know, was divided into two portions, of which the active force, under General Melikoff, operated against Erzeroum; the so-called frontier army had to suppress the insurrection in the Caucasus, and was to have taken Batoum. In the former army, 355 officers were killed, 1,232 wounded, and 15 reported as missing; of its rank and file, 11,458 were killed, 38,969 wounded, and the large number of 3,847 described as missing. The frontier army lost, in officers, 98 killed, 418 wounded, and 3 missing; in rank and file, 3,035 killed, 12,097 wounded, and 603 missing. It has not yet been exactly determined what are the numbers of those that succumbed to disease after the war. Those losses, however, were frightful; though the lists sent in account for only 50,000, the total of mortality from the latter cause will probably amount to double that figure.

A distinguished-service reward has fallen vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General the Hon. R. Rollo, C.B., to the colonelcy of the 109th Regiment; and a second, by the death of Lieutenant-General J. W. Armstrong, C.B.

The Service has suffered a great loss in General J. W. Armstrong, whose death it is our painful duty to record this week. General Armstrong had been connected with the Horse Guards ever since November, 1871, when he was transferred from Ireland to fill the position of Deputy-Adjutant-General, which had become vacant by the late General Egerton's appointment as Military Secretary. Since then he has done much useful work, and his death creates a blank which it will be difficult to fill.

As a first step towards the reform of the corps of officers, and the reduction of the number of officers in the Spanish Army, the recent order of the War Minister deserves notice. Formerly the Captain-Generals (commanders of provinces) appointed half-pay officers to the higher and lower grades in the active army. This privilege was abolished by the Royal Order of July 4, 1846, which laid down the rule that occurring vacancies should be filled up by officers of the active army. Yet, notwithstanding this royal Order, and from various causes, the old practice continued, appointments thus made being sanctioned by the War Minister. It has now been ordered that officers of this category now in active service are to retire, and in future no such appointment will be permitted.

An amusing cause of objection to the establishment of an Intelligence Department in India, held, strange to say, by many of those in high command, is that the "Intelligence officers" are intended to wander into wild countries, and thus provoke war. This was actually given not long ago by a lieutenant-general commanding a division, as his reason for being adverse to the proposal for the establishment of an Indian Intelligence Bureau.

The following particulars respecting the Zulu carrier corps, which was raised at the latter end of the campaign, will be found interesting, especially to those who advocated the formation of a carrier corps when first the war broke out. There were 4 officers from European regiments, 3 interpreters, 20 indunas, and 2,000 men originally recruited from the Natal Border Guard; but these were afterwards disbanded, and replaced by Zulus who had surrendered to the coast column, as it advanced into the country. They performed the following amount of work during the period they were embodied:—85,000 lb. were carried from Fort Pearson to Fort Chelmsford, distance 19 miles; 442,000 lb. were carried from Durnford to St. Paul's, 35 miles; 12,000 lb. were carried from Durnford to Hinza, 40 miles; 40,000 lb. were carried from St. Paul's to Hinza, 17 miles; 25,000 lb. were carried from Durnford to Half-way House, 16 miles; total weight carried, 604,000 lb; total number of miles, 127. With the Transport in its then attenuated condition, it would have been quite impossible to have removed this quantity of food, which was required for the use of the troops at the various stations on their return from Ulundi, and during the search after Cetewayo. Cost:—Carriers at 1s. per diem, and indunas at 1s. 8d. per diem, £4,403; European officers' extra pay, £443; rations, £5,153; total, £9,996. Ox-transport, even if obtainable, would have cost at least £13,000, computing a team of oxen with waggon at £90 per mensem, and making good losses by disease. Major Schwabe, of the 16th Lancers, organised and commanded the corps, and it is not yet too late to recognise the service rendered by this officer.

Before leaving Portsmouth, the following men were sent to Haslar Hospital:—A. Cotton, quartermaster; P. Burk, ship's corporal; Sidney Burroco, tailor; William Edwards, A.B.; William Monk, ordinary seaman. Should either of the vessels which have been sent in search of the Atalanta come across any traces of the missing vessel she will make for the nearest port with all despatch, and the intelligence she may bring will be instantly circulated by the Admiralty. The Malabar arrived at Portsmouth from Bombay this morning. It was the Malabar which was reported to have taken in tow the Atalanta, but those on board neither sighted nor spoke the vessel. Com. B. H. Key has sent a letter to the Hampshire Post, giving an account of his experience of the Atalanta, which was his first ship. He says:—"I cannot understand how an accident could have happened to her in ordinary sailing. She is a 'stiff' ship, carrying her ports well above the water for a sailing frigate, and these would invariably be closed at night. Her masts, too, are 6 ft. shorter than when she was the Juno. She may possibly have been caught in a heavy squall in the night, with more than her usual sail; but even in such a case, there is, I think, no record of a frigate capsizing and foundering except in the case of the Eurydice, a ship known to be inferior to the Atalanta, while the squall, which was of peculiar force and concentration, caught her under full sail with her ports open." A report received at Lloyd's states that the steamer Para, the delay in whose arrival at Plymouth it was supposed might have arisen from her having fallen in with the missing Atalanta, had been spoken with by an Italian steamer with her shaft broken. The captain of the Para reported all well on board, and declined assistance.

Salmond and officers and crew of H.M.S. Midge (excepting the chief engineer, Mr. Fawcett, who remains behind in charge of Kestrel and Midge's engines temporarily until arrival of new crew and officers for the Midge, coming out in the Wivern); Com. Edwards, officers, and crew of the Kestrel, paid off on the 23rd inst.; one lieutenant (Mr. Broadly) from the Fly; a Dr. Armstrong, returning to his ship, the Encounter, at Singapore, who had been lent from her to the Fly in the absence of their own doctor, invalided home two months ago; the Rev. J. Henderson, chaplain to the Forces at Hong Kong; and Staff Com. Heather, late master-attendant of the yard there; so you see we have quite a large party. Of course time-expired men and invalids from the 27th, under Capt. Coffee, a Mr. Young, and Capt. Michaelson, from the same regiment, must not be forgotten to make our complement complete. We have had a splendid trip down with fair winds, and have been, this being the 5th, only six days or a little less in the trip of 1,470 miles. The weather has been glorious; the ship is a splendid one for comfort and accommodation, and captain and officers vie with each other apparently in kindness to the passengers. There are no orders yet about our going to Plymouth, but we hope for a telegram between this and Malta."

Valorous, Capt. G. D. Morant, employed on the Galway coast for services connected with the Irish relief, has received orders to visit Westport, returning to Galway.

Victoria and Albert, Capt. F. Thomson, will embark her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and suite, at Flushing, to-day, and proceed to Queenborough.

Volage has been taken in hand at Portsmouth, and is having preliminary work carried out, preparatory to undergoing a refit.

Woodlark, Com. P. C. Johnstone, was taken outside Plymouth Breakwater on Monday for a six-hours' steam trial, which proved very satisfactory. She sailed for the East Indies on Tuesday.

AN ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.

We spoke recently of a project set on foot in Italy for an expedition to the South Pole, and now learn that Lieut. Bove has presented his project to the Minister of Marine, by whom it has been favourably received, although the question of financial aid is reserved until the result of private subscriptions is known. The Pungolo now announces a work in which Lieut. Bove and the Commendatore Negri have explained their project of "an Italian Antarctic expedition, undertaken with a view to explore the Southern lands and seas to the lowest latitude which it is possible to attain." The sum required is 600,000 lire, which is to be collected by private subscription; and to effect this committees are to be appointed in every town of Italy and in her colonies, the committee of Genoa being the centre of communication. Into details of construction of the vessel to be provided, the crew, and scientific instruments, it is unnecessary to enter. They will be in all respects such as have been suggested by the experience of former Arctic voyagers. The expedition will take its departure "possibly" about the end of May, 1881, arriving about the beginning of August at Montevideo, where it will make such changes in the material provision of the vessel and in the crew as experience may have shown to be desirable. On the Plata a vessel will be engaged to carry supplies of coal to Tierra del Fuego, and at the end of September the expedition will again start on its course between Patagonia and the Falkland Isles, tending always to the South Shetland Isles. The promoters of the expedition speak of the certainty of the existence of land around a great part of the Antarctic circle, if not of the whole of it. At the South Shetland Islands, which are well known, and are now the resort of many whalers, French especially, they hope that some day or other Italian whalers will be found. From the Shetlands the expedition will steer to the south-west, and endeavour to penetrate a line of land which was observed by Dallman, a Hamburg whaler, some few years since. Thence a movement will be made towards the land where Bellinghausen marked the lofty capes of Alexander and Peter, and the western lands observed by Wilkes in 1839. At this point a serious discussion must arise as to future movements. It would be desirable to coast along the land of Bellinghausen, if there were any appearance of a "continued mass," steam for the back of the islands which Wilkes believed to exist, and thus enter on the south of Ross's Sea, where the winter might be spent. Should, however, expectation be disappointed, the winter might be passed on the Bellinghausen land, and preparations might be made for entering Ross's Sea. The intrepid voyagers think that with a strong vessel it would not be impossible to penetrate beyond Ross's Sea, and complete the studies which were made of the flora, the fauna, and the mineralogy of the Antarctic region. Having examined these lands and sea, it is proposed to move towards Adele, discovered by D'Orville in 1840, and here it is thought it might be possible to land and winter. Continuing their course to the west, they intend running along by the Southern Continent, where the existence of land is certain, and endeavour to penetrate through the ice, as did D'Orville, Wilkes, and Rossel. The hope is that canals in the ice might be found through which they might attain a remote latitude, or, running along them when massed into a continent, arrive at Kemp or Endermet, where they could pass the second winter. Before returning to Italy it would be necessary to find some port to refit, and Hobart Town is suggested. "Such," says the Pungolo, "are the chief points of the project of Commendatore Negri and Lieut. Bove, which, so far from regarding as rash, they consider to be secure, with a strong, well-provided vessel." In some respects it may require modification, but, as a whole, it has been pronounced by good authorities to be practicable. The time employed on this voyage will be about three years.

THE PROTECTION OF WAR SHIPS.

At the Royal United Service Institution, on the 9th inst., Major A. Parnell, R.E., read a paper on the application of iron-plating to the protection of men-of-war, with suggestions regarding the employment of unarmoured ships in European squadrons. Admiral Sir F. Nicholson presided. Major A. Parnell reviewed the discussions which have been raised at various periods by competent authorities, on various points connected with the unsettled subject of armour-plating on ships-of-war and the classing of ships, and summed up the result of the discussions as showing that in 1873 the opinion of authority, both in England and France, was practically that armour-plating was not essential for the protection of the guns and gunners; while in 1878 the opinion of authority in England was that armour-plating was not essential for the protection of the ship from being sunk. He held that it would be necessary to have armour-plated ships for attacks on well-armed European fortresses; but he thought that there should be a type of unarmoured ship to be devoted solely to operations against ships in the open sea and blockading an enemy's ports. He submitted that our ships for European war should be divided into two great classes, designed respectively for fortress and squadron warfare, as one kind of fighting was different from the other. The attack of fortresses would seldom involve the use of rams, Whitehead torpedoes, light guns, or musketry. The essential characteristics of fortress-attack ships should be great powers of battering and of resisting battering, and light draught of water. These ships should be armed with the heaviest guns, and be protected by armour of immense strength. In addition they and their tenders should be thoroughly equipped for breaking booms, clearing away mines, and guarding against the attacks of torpedo craft. If we could see our way to the disuse of armour in the ships intended to compose European fleets and squadrons, our active Navy would gradually resolve itself into three classes, viz.:—1. Battering or fortress-attack ships, consisting of ironclads without sails, including most of our present turret-ships, but consisting in future of ships specially designed for this warfare and reserved for attacking European fortresses. 2. Fighting, squadron, or battle-ships, unarmoured, yet with their vital parts protected, without sails, of comparatively small size, and reserved for European squadrons. 3. Cruisers, comprising all existing sailing broadside ironclads, as well as all unarmoured frigates, corvettes, and sloops specially built for cruising. He entered into speculations as to the construction of class 2, and he proposed to use in this class two bow and stern 10-inch (18-ton) guns, two beam centre-pivoted 12·5-inch (38-ton) guns, mounted en barbette, four bow and stern front-pivoted 7-inch (90 cwt.) guns, firing through ports, eight 64-pounders, and a complement of boat guns and Nordenfeldt's or other bullet machines. Each ship, too, would be built as a ram of 4,000 tons, with twin screws and two independent sets of engines. Capt. Long, R.N., Com. Curtis, R.N., and Capt. Cameron were among the speakers on the paper, and their criticisms were directed to points of detail, upon which Major Parnell admitted he had had no experience, adding that he had given suggestions merely for others to work out.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The letter from "Calpe," published in your issue of Feb. 28, on the present and probable future position of the corps of Royal Marines in connection with the Royal Navy, deserves much consideration, for there can be no doubt there exists throughout the whole of that Service a feeling of uncertainty and distrust, which, sooner or later, will destroy the esprit de corps and efficiency which has hitherto been unequalled by any body of men in her Majesty's Service. This feeling is increased by the official secrecy and whisperings of the Select Committee now sitting with closed doors to adjudicate on matters submitted by the Board of Admiralty of possible vital importance to their future interest and welfare, made all the more suspicious by the First Lord's persistent refusal in the House to divulge the questions at issue. Many officers of the corps are quite alive to the fact that the special duties for which their service was created have passed away, the whole personnel and matériel of the Navy has been so entirely changed, the morale and discipline of the British seaman so much improved and "militarised," if it may be so termed, that the Royal Marine as a mere military element is, perhaps, no longer required in any large force on board ship; and taking into consideration the unsatisfactory status of the Marine officer when embarked, the constant friction with the Naval Executive, kept alive by enforced restraint and consequent forced inactivity on the one part, and by jealousy and an assumed superiority on the other, it is only natural that unless their service and rank is not more generously recognised afloat, and more responsible freedom of action as regards their own men accorded them, they would view with small regret the abolition of their corps. Your correspondent "Calpe" has ably remarked on the antagonism that undoubtedly exists in the Royal Navy to the Royal Marines, more especially to the employment of its officers afloat; and I quite agree with him in saying, "far, far better abolition, than permit mismanagement and petty jealousy to produce the gangrene of mistrust, loss of prestige, and consequent lowering of the character of "the corps." But has the time yet arrived for the doing away entirely with the Marine afloat? How many captains of the Navy are prepared to sail on a lengthened foreign cruise with a crew composed exclusively of Blue-jackets? Is there one of any experience that would willingly do so? No; however much the Naval Executive might like to dispense with the Marine officer on board ship, he would still cling to the rank and file, as not only adding to the "pomp and circumstance" of his command, but also to his sense of security. Let the Navy by all means, then, continue to have such a force as a part complement of a ship's company, but let no fresh officers be appointed; let those now serving in the old corps die out, and as far as the rank and file are concerned, let them dwindle down to such numbers as would be actually required for embarkation as a Marine police, in charge of a non-commissioned officer, with rank of a warrant officer, their future training to be carried out in the several naval barracks, under the supervision of naval officers. There must be something "rotten in the state of Denmark," when old officers of the corps refrain from putting their sons into it; and when there is a difficulty in getting volunteers for commissions from candidates who have barely qualified for Sandhurst,—in itself tending to lower the status of the corps, in being reduced to accept an evidently inferior educational efficiency to that required by the other Services. As a land force of her Majesty's Service, the corps is now rarely or ever utilised, and then only in a moment of extremity—the last to be employed, and the first to be dispensed with. Witness the late battalion sent to South Africa, the last force out, the first home. The Marine officers, however, themselves well understand the feeling that prevails generally with General officers against the employment of that force with the Army proper. Mark the reticence of the First Lord of the Admiralty as to the corps, in his speech, when lately bringing the Navy Estimates before the House! Though all other branches of the Navy were more or less brought prominently into notice, he never once alluded to this fine body of men—once so valuable and prized an auxiliary of England's Navy. Their name only once passed his lips, —the very last word, in fact, of his speech,—when he moved for the first vote "to provide for 58,800 men and boys, including 13,000 Marines."—I am, &c., Othello.

The Anglo-Brazilian Times, in giving an account of the attack upon Arica, says:—"It has been the luck of the Huascar and the Manco Capac to exchange fire in the waters of Arica. The Huascar seems to have carried with it fatality against its commander since the death of the unfortunate Grau, its commander having died in the fight. On Feb. 27 the Chilian monitor Huascar approached the Morro of Arica and was received with a steady artillery fire by the land forts and the monitor Manco Capac. The Huascar replied at once, as did also the Chilian corvette Magellanes, which was with her, to maintain the blockade of the port and assist her. Soon after the engagement commenced the Huascar received a ball in the hull. As the Chilian vessels observed trains leaving Arica with troops, they directed their fire upon them, and the engagement became more and more obstinate. While the Huascar was keeping up fire on the trains, the land batteries killed seven and wounded nine men aboard her. The Chilian vessels then retired to the anchorage outside, whence they maintained their blockade, and as they observed the Manco Capac coming towards them the Huascar went to meet her, firing all her guns at the Peruvian monitor when 200 métres off. The Huascar then prepared to ram the Manco Capac, but desisted on discovering that the Peruvian had a torpedo launch. While the Huascar was discharging her cannon and circling about the Manco Capac, she received a shell, which carried away the mizen-mast and killed instantly her commander, Captain D. Manoel M. Thompson, one of the most distinguished and popular officers of the Chilian Navy, and who was second commander of the Esmeralda when the Covadonga was captured from the Spaniards, and was afterwards in command of her. The second commander of the Huascar, Señor Valverde, took command and kept up the engagement an hour longer. Meanwhile the Magellanes maintained a fire on the town, but received three shots in her hull. The fight terminated with the return of the Chilian vessels to their anchorage, and it is undeniable that they received a rough repulse, although the telegrams do not say so. Captain Condell, of the Magellanes, has taken command of the Huascar. Nothing is known in Chili of what the despatches say relating to the Peruvian losses." The Buenos Ayres Standard says:—"The attack on Arica has revived the interest in the West Coast war. The Peruvians, it appears, have thrown fresh troops into that town, the capture of which may cost the Chilians more than they expect. It is impossible at the present stage of this campaign to offer any opinion as to its length, or even its results. The Chilians, notwithstanding their preponderating strength both by sea and land, fight under such great disadvantages that the Peruvians, if they resolutely defend their country against the invader, may in the end exhaust his strength and repel his advance."

At the Cronstadt Navy Club on Tuesday, Professor Martens gave a lecture on the Central Asian question. He denied that Russian dominion in Central Asia was a source of danger to the British possessions in India, and asserted that the idea of an invasion of India was absurd. It had been said that Russian influence in Asia diminished that of England in India. Professor Martens maintained that this was impossible in the case of a nation possessing the resources of the British Empire, and that the rivalry between the two countries must, on the contrary, be a benefit to civilisation, instead of leading to war and bloodshed.

The U.S. Navy Department, at Washington, has received information that United States men-of-war have established coaling stations on both sides of the Isthmus of Panama.

THE TREATMENT OF GENERALS MACPHERSON AND MASSY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your leading article of January 17, you pay a just tribute to General Massy for his splendid conduct near Sherpur on December 11. No one at Cabul, no impartial judge doubts for a moment that he and General Macpherson saved Sherpur, and with Sherpur the whole of our stores and ammunition. General Roberts, carrying out that narrow-minded policy by which he has all along sought to cry up himself and the Viceroy's Secretary, General Baker, at the expense of men better than himself, attempted, in his now notorious telegram, to fasten the blame of his own incapacity on the man who had justly earned the gratitude and admiration of the whole force. It is satisfactory to military men in India and Afghanistan to learn from your admirable article that more accurate intelligence has reached you. Will you give me permission to recount a few of the facts of that surprising day? First of all, it cannot be repeated too often that Macpherson and Massy saved Sherpur. In Sherpur, almost denuded of defenders, were all our stores, ammunition, our sick and wounded, and our followers. If once the enemy had reached Sherpur before the scattered brigades had been recollected, a second Isandlhwana must inevitably have ensued. But Gen. Macpherson, acting on his instincts as a tried soldier, most fortunately disobeyed orders. He was on his way to Argandeh, sixteen miles from Cabul—Argandeh, the appointed rendezvous of himself and Massy—when the sound of Massy's guns arrested his attention. He instantly made for the direction of the sound, and thus foiled the plans of Mahommed Jan, though at the same time he had left his road in the very face of his orders. No wonder Macpherson, on a calm review of the actual situation, glories in his action. Massy, too, is said to have disobeyed orders in engaging the enemy; but this was really not the case. Yet there are times when foolish orders are not to be regarded, and if General Massy had disobeyed his, we may feel quite sure he would have had ample reason to do so. The fact is, if he had not gallantly opened fire on the advancing hosts of the enemy, Macpherson would have continued his march to Argandeh, and Sherpur would have been lost. That a couple of hundred lancers were over-matched by 15,000 infantry ought not to be regarded as a misfortune, but rather that unmatched courage which animated their hearts when, like the heroes of Thermopylæ, they offered themselves freely as a check to the advance of the enemy, should be not only lauded, but amply rewarded. Various were the surmises in English papers, which were induced by General Roberts's misleading and disingenuous telegram. Those who said Massy had fallen into a trap were mistaken. He saw the enemy long before his action began. It was not until after they had been advancing some time, that he opened fire at a distance of 2,900 yards. I have this from a gunner, an eye-witness of the whole affair. Did this look like falling into a trap? It is true Massy had no idea of the tremendous numbers of the enemy. But who was to blame for that? General Roberts, most assuredly, who believed there were perhaps 2,000 men somewhere about,—he did not know where. Other papers imagined that Massy had been advancing over-confidently with no advanced guard. The exact truth is this,—that he had a strong advanced guard more than a mile ahead of him, and that in a country where the view was pretty open, so that he himself could discern an advancing enemy at a much greater distance. No. As I said in a former letter, every possible precaution was taken consistently with the information possessed by General Roberts, and indeed, if anything, much greater precaution than otherwise. Before the cavalry had a man or a horse hit, General Roberts arrived, and virtually took over the command. After his absurd orders, in obedience to which, like another Balaclava Six Hundred, Massy and his lancers hurled themselves against overwhelming numbers, two guns fell into a ditch, and had to be abandoned. But now, to show what rhodomontade gets talked by correspondents in the field, let me end by giving the precise facts in connection with the recovery of these guns. Colonel Macgregor, Chief of the Staff, a most excellent officer, and brave as steel, had left the village where the guns had fallen some time before Massy and the cavalry did so. Macgregor, with a few stragglers, took the nearest road to Sherpur, that by which the cavalry had come out. Massy accompanied General Roberts by order by a different road towards Sherpur. Both these roads led over kotals or passes. Macgregor halted on his kotal, as did Roberts and the cavalry on theirs, which two kotals were separated by a ridge about two miles in length. It soon became evident that Macpherson, in his counter-march towards Chardeh and Sherpur, was driving Mahommed Jan away from his position at the villages where the guns had been left, and Massy, it is averred, then suggested to Roberts that some spare artillery teams should be brought out from Sherpur, and that he should be permitted to take them back for the guns. This advice was acted upon, and on the arrival of the teams, Massy started for the village, where he found that Macgregor had already extricated the guns from the ditch, and set them once more on the road. Macgregor, in fact, had stopped the guards of Macpherson's baggage, which was returning to Sherpur by the road on which he was stationed, and extending them in skirmishing order, had returned, having first sent on a mounted Afghan to ascertain the position of the enemy. This Afghan reported the villages to be clear, and no enemy to be within four miles. So that it will be seen that the recovery of the guns was no such great matter, after all. It was not an occasion for the display of daring, or even judgment, though at the same time Macgregor is just the man to display both when circumstances require it. The rest of the story has, I believe, been fairly reported. On the 14th, our infantry were defeated, and Roberts compelled to shut himself up in Sherpur, outside of which none of our men dared to venture for ten days. The "glorious victory" of the 23rd has still to be told by impartial lips. In conclusion, I do not think any praise can be too extravagant for General Massy and his brave gunners and lancers, whose noble spirit and magnificent courage, assisted by the calm, excellent judgment of Macpherson in returning, and by the steady behaviour of a few of the 92nd, who had issued from Sherpur, saved our whole Army from a frightful disaster, and excepting in the telegrams of General Roberts, won for themselves immortal renown.—I am, &c.,

THE REVISED ARMY ESTABLISHMENTS.

With the commencement of the financial year, a re-arrangement of the regimental establishments of the Army has been made, principally having regard to the position of each corps for home or foreign service. In the Cavalry of the Line the regiments that stood next after the King's Dragoon Guards for service in India, according to the date of their last return from that country, were the Inniskilling Dragoons, 7th Dragoon Guards, 3rd Dragoon Guards, and Queen's Bays. Of these, the Inniskilling Dragoons and 7th Dragoon Guards had been placed on the higher establishment, preparatory to a tour of Indian service. The latter regiment has been taken off the roster, and the 3rd Dragoon Guards and Queen's Bays have not been placed upon it, three light Cavalry regiments, the 7th, 19th, and 20th Hussars taking the place of the heavier corps. The four Cavalry regiments now standing next for foreign service in order are therefore (1) the Inniskilling Dragoons, (2) 19th Hussars, (3) 7th Hussars, and (4) 20th Hussars. Their period of embarkation must, however, be regarded as very uncertain. It will depend upon the ability of the authorities in South Africa to dispense with the King's Dragoon Guards and send them to India, and also upon the embodiment of the recommendation of the Indian Army Commission reducing the number of British Cavalry regiments in India from nine to six. Should that recommendation be at once carried out, the 15th, 10th, and 13th Hussars would return to England, most probably without relief, and no cavalry regiment at home would be required for India until the relief of the 9th Lancers. In the Infantry of the Line several modifications have been made in the arrangements of the last financial year, some regiments being placed on the higher and others on the lower establishments indicating their liability to service abroad. Under the new programme, they are thus classed:—The first six at a strength of 800 rank and file each are the 1st Batn. 23rd Fusiliers, 38th, 41st, 47th, 77th, and 1st Batn. Rifle Brigade, all of which, except the 47th, are designated for embarkation for India during the next relief season. The second batch of six, at a strength of 720 rank and file, consists of the 26th, 84th, 86th, 95th, 96th, and 3rd Batn. Rifle Brigade. The third batch—640 rank and file each—is made up of the 2nd Batn. 18th, 31st, 49th, 52nd, 1st Batn. 60th Rifles, and 75th; and the fourth—560 rank and file each—of the 2nd Batn. 20th, 45th, 53rd, 56th, 64th, and 82nd. All the other batns. at home are placed upon an establishment of 480 rank and file each. The 80th Regt., on its way to Ireland from Natal, will be placed upon the same strength, its supernumeraries being transferred to the linked Batn. (the 38th), in order to bring it up to the Indian Establishment. The battalions officially noted to come home from India next season are the 2nd Batn. 1st Royal Scots, 1st Batn. 5th Fusiliers, 59th, 73rd, and 80th, to which the 1st Batn. of the 6th, at Aden, will be added in the ordinary course. But in the event of the report of the Indian Army Commission being at once acted upon, some 11 more battalions will necessarily be brought to England.

We learn from Dublin that "the usual confirmations were held prior to the great festival of Easter. The ceremonial at Christ Church Cathedral was peculiarly impressive, when a goodly number of the fine boys of the Royal Hibernian Military School were confirmed. Their neat uniform, healthy appearance, and decorous conduct were the admiration of many."

The officers who passed out of the Staff College last December will report themselves at Aldershot on May 1, to go through a course of instruction with the several branches of the Army, in accordance with Staff College regulations.

A Reuter's telegram, dated Halifax, Nova Scotia, April 12, states that Gen. Sir P. L. Macdougall has arrived from England, and assumed the chief command of the forces in Canada.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Gen. J. W. Armstrong, C.B., Deputy-Adjutant-General for Auxiliary Forces, died at St. George's Square, S.W., on the 12th inst. Gen. Armstrong's death deprives H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief of one of the most valued and experienced members of his Staff, one who has not only proved himself a brave and gallant officer in the field, but who, by a deep study of his profession, had placed himself in the foremost rank of our Generals. Entering the Service in 1843, Gen. Armstrong ran rapidly through the junior ranks of the Army, and before he had completed 12 years' service had attained his lieutenant-colonelcy, which, together with his majority, was bestowed on him for his gallantry in the Russian war. Landing in the Crimea in September, 1854, Capt. Armstrong was nominated brigade-major in the 2nd Division. He was present at the battle of the Alma, when his conduct was brought prominently to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief by Lord Raglan, at Balaklava, and at Inkermann, where his horse was killed under him. On June 7, 1855, he commanded one of the columns of attack on the Quarries, and in this sharp affair he was twice severely wounded. For these services Col. Armstrong, besides receiving two steps in rank, gained our own war medal with four clasps for Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol, the Turkish medal, the Legion of Honour, 4th class of the Medjidie, and the Companionship of the Bath. Shortly after his return to England Col. Armstrong was appointed to the command of a depôt battalion at Canterbury, and was subsequently transferred to the Horse Guards as an Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. In 1876, when Sir Garnet Wolseley was nominated a member of the Indian Council, Gen. Armstrong was selected to succeed him as Inspector-Gen. of Reserve Forces. In this responsible post he has done not a little to draw closer the bonds which unite the Auxiliary forces with the Line; and his long experience, both as a regimental and Staff officer, has been invaluable to the Commander-in-Chief and the War-Office authorities, as well in his own department as in the broader question of army reorganisation. The Volunteers will lose in him a kind adviser and a steadfast friend, and the service will mourn the loss of one whose highest ambition was to be considered a "soldier."

Col. E. O'B. Horsford, Bengal S.C., died at Clifton on the 10th inst., aged 48 years. The deceased officer entered the Army Dec. 9, 1848, and became col. Dec. 9, 1879.

Capt. Charles Sedgwith Fitton, R.N., on the Retired (U) List, died at Brook Lawn, Arundel, on the 8th inst. He served in the Arethusa, 50, Capt. T. M. C. Symonds, employed on particular service, as mate, from Aug. 7, 1851, until Jan. 1853, when he was transferred to the Bellerophon, 78, Capt. Lord George Paulet, in the Mediterranean, and in May, 1854, removed into the Vulture, 6, Capts. F. H. H. Glasse and George Parker, in which ship, on Feb. 3, 1855, he was promoted to lieut., and served in the Baltic and Mediterranean until 1860. On June 22, 1860, he was appointed to the Edgar, fitting for service with the Channel Squadron, as the flagship of Rear-Admiral John E. Erskine, and continued in the same ship, under Capt. G. P. Mends, and the flag of Rear-Admiral S. C. Dacres, C.B., until Aug. 1862. He served in the Canopus, 8, Capt. C. H. May, at Devonport, from April 2, 1863, until Sept. 3, 1864, when he was transferred to the Brisk, 16, Capt. C. W. Hope, fitting for Australia, and was promoted to commander, April 11, 1866. He was afterwards inspecting officer in the Coastguard at Ramsgate, from Sept. 1868, until 1870, when he was appointed to the command of the Lee, gun-vessel in the Mediterranean, which he paid off in Aug. 1871. He became retired capt., Oct. 1, 1873.

Com. Charles James Fox Campbell died on the 7th inst., at the Royal Naval Hospital, Great Yarmouth. He entered the Navy in 1823 as a first-class volunteer, became midshipman in 1836, and took part in the battle of Navarino on board the Asia, the flagship of Admiral Sir Edward Codrington. He obtained his commission in 1832, and was promoted to commander on the Retired List in 1866. He had since been employed in the Royal mail service.

Several instances having occurred in which exorbitant prices have been paid in foreign ports for supplies of soft bread for her Majesty's ships, the Admiralty, taking into consideration the short time ships are at sea, do not consider it advisable or necessary that every time a port is visited for a few days, the Crown should be put to the expense of providing soft bread at exceptional prices, and therefore direct, by Fleet Circular No. 6 V. of March 24, 1880, that, with reference to Article 1,753, page 557 of the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions, 4d. per lb. is to be considered the limit, beyond which purchases are not to be made except in cases of emergency or for health reasons. When purchases are made at a higher rate than that now authorised, the purchase voucher is to be accompanied by the commanding officer's certificate explaining the ground on which they were considered to be necessary.

The St. Petersburg Viedomosti publishes a paragraph stating that, in consequence of alarms on the Chinese frontier, Vice-Admiral Aslenbegoff, the commander of the Russian Pacific Squadron, has been recalled, and that his successor, whose name the journal refrains from mentioning, will set out shortly.

MR. WEIL, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

Amusements.

The Italian Opera season commenced at COVENT GARDEN on Tuesday, with M. Massenet's "Il Re di Lahore," a noisy opera, recommended more by its spectacular accessories than its striking musical merits. The chief interest attached to the occasion was derived from the reappearance of Mdlle. Turolla as Nair, and the first appearance in England of Signor di Reszke as Indra. Both had a favourable reception, and the general rendering was satisfactory. On Thursday evening was performed Donizetti's "La Favorita," and the programme of the week includes the re-appearance of Madame Albani after an absence of two years, on which occasion "Lucia di Lammermoor" is presented. Signor Vianesi remains at his post as conductor. It is now definitely arranged that Mr. Mapleson will open HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE on Saturday, May 15th, and the prospectus of his opera season will be issued in a few days.

At the OLYMPIC, which has not been very prosperous lately, an improved attendance has accompanied a reconstituted programme, composed of Mr. H. J. Byron's lively three-act comedy of "Partners for Life," originally produced at the Globe Theatre in October, 1871; and Mr. Burnand's Gaiety burlesque of "Robbing Roy." Miss Fanny Josephs, resuming her original part in the first piece, plays Emily Mervyn with all her former grace and refinement, and both comedy and burlesque are very efficiently supported.

At the VAUDEVILLE has been brought out Mr. Buckstone's ingenious comedy of "Married Life," first produced at the Haymarket in August, 1834, and since frequently revived. Five married couples constitute the characters of the play. In the first act they are introduced, and their tempers and peculiarities are explained; in the second act, they all quarrel and separate; and in the third act, a general reconciliation takes place. The revival is exactly suited to the capabilities of the VAUDEVILLE company, and Mr. David James and Miss Marlborough, as Mr. and Mrs. Coddle, with Mr. Thomas Thorne and Miss Sophia Larkin as Mr. and Mrs. Dove, create so much merriment that the piece seems likely to be retained on the playbill for some weeks.

With this week the operatic spectacle of "Rothomago" closes its career of four months at the ALHAMBRA, and on Monday next will be produced Mr. Farnie's adaptation of "La Fille du Tambour Major," brought out last December at the Folies Dramatiques. On the following Saturday will be produced a new grand ballet of action, called "Diana, or the Statue," with novel decorative accessories designed by the accomplished artist known as Wilhelm.

French matinées will be given by Miss Geneviève Ward at the PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE on May 12 and 19. The representations will receive the personal patronage of the Prince of Wales, and at his request the play selected is "L'Aventurière," by Emile Augier, which was adapted by Mr. T. W. Robertson under the title of "Home."

Madame Helena Modjeska, a Polish actress, who has acquired some popularity in the United States as the heroine of tragic plays, will make her London début on Saturday afternoon, May 1, at the COURT THEATRE, appearing in "Heartsease," Mr. J. Mortimer's version of "Dame aux Camelias" of Alexandre Dumas.

The fiftieth representation of "As You Like It" was given at the IMPERIAL THEATRE on Wednesday evening, the character of Hymen being introduced into the last scene, in accordance with the Shakespearean text. The restoration of the mythological personage was appropriately accompanied by a wedding-chorus, expressly composed for the occasion by Mrs. Tom Taylor.

The autumnal novelty at DRURY LANE will be a sensational five-act drama by Mr. Paul Merritt, uniting strong situations with striking pictorial effects.

Mr. Charles Rice, the well-known actor and lessee of the Theatre Royal, Bradford, expired somewhat unexpectedly on Monday night. He made his first appearance in London at the Britannia Theatre in April, 1851, became afterwards a performer in burlesque at the Strand, and for three consecutive seasons rented Covent Garden at Christmas for the production of pantomimes.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

The PUREST. The MOST PALATABLE. The MOST DIGESTIBLE. The MOST EFFICACIOUS.

THE ONLY COD LIVER OIL WHICH PRODUCES THE FULL CURATIVE EFFECTS IN CONSUMPTION and DISEASES of the CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS,
GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN,
RICKETS, and ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surgeon Army, Professor of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

THE proposed increase of the Standing Army of Germany has naturally caused considerable surprise in political circles, principally because it was so unexpected, the German Government having kept its plans secret up to the last moment. The proposal need astonish no one who takes the trouble to look into the question. For years past, the leading military circles have been preparing for the time when, after the lapse of the septennate agreed upon in 1874, a thorough reorganisation of the German Army had to be thought of. Field-Marshal Moltke, in his two celebrated speeches of 1874 and 1877, repeatedly pointed out that the political position of Europe compels Germany to work steadily on her armaments, in order to preserve the successes obtained after enormous efforts and by heavy sacrifices. In 1877, more especially, he drew attention to the continuous military preparations of France, and the massing of large forces on the western frontiers of Germany, and insisted, at the same time, upon the necessity growing upon the latter of increasing her forces in the same degree, as a precautionary measure. By the law of 1874, the permanent peace strength of the German forces was fixed, for a term of seven years, at 1 per cent. of the population, or 401,659 men, not including the one-year volunteers. It is now proposed to increase the standing Army by 34 battalions of infantry, 40 batteries, one regiment of Foot Artillery, and one battalion of Engineers. Reckoning the peace footing of an infantry battalion at 550 men, the battery at 120 men, the regiment of Foot Artillery at 1,000 men, and the battalion of Engineers at 550 men, this gives an augmentation of the German Army in time of peace of 20,050 men and about 4,000 horses. But beyond this considerable increase in the effective of the active army, the new law contains a radical and decisive measure of great importance respecting the Ersatzreserven (supplementary reserves). Hitherto, those reserves have never been called in in time of peace, and when required in time of war, they had consequently to be drilled just like raw recruits before being available for service. By the proposed law, the Ersatzreserven are subjected to the following provisions. In the first place, the first class of those reserves may be called in for drill in time of peace, the men having undergone that drill remaining in that class during the whole term of their military liability. Secondly, the terms of drill are four in number, the two first of a length of eight weeks each, the two last of a length of two weeks each. Each calling-in to the colours counts for one drill. The advantages offered by the new provisions with respect to the greater usefulness of the called-in reserves, and their availability for speedy incorporation in the battalions of the Landsturm, formed in time of war, are consequently not inconsiderable. The additional inconvenience and burden thus imposed upon the population are certainly very onerous; but, considering the present position of Germany, they are unavoidable. The Kölnische Zeitung says that it cannot be denied that, "in order to keep on a military equality with our powerful neighbours, we must make up our minds to increase our Army. Although the times may look ever so peaceful, it is imperative that we should always be armed. If the French had been afraid of us ten years ago, they would have left us in peace!" The Heeres-Zeitung is equally forcible in its plain-speaking. Our military contemporary does not disguise the probability that in the next war Germany will have to face two ways, and that an alliance of France and Russia must be met by measures of precaution now. The causes of Russian hostility are well known. Germany gave great offence to the Russian Government by her attitude of mediator before and at the Berlin Congress. That by itself was a most unthankful part to play. But the Heeres-Zeitung exposes another cause of Russian enmity. Russian statesmen will never forgive Prussia and Germany for having emancipated themselves from the political tutelage which to a certain degree they have always claimed to exercise in the affairs of the Fatherland. Prince Bismarck, in putting an end to this somewhat humiliating position, expected the result of the step he was taking, and with his usual foresight, though not without some difficulty—for the Russophil party at the Prussian Court is a very strong one—he succeeded in obtaining the Emperor's consent to the Austrian alliance, and thus baffled his Russian opponent. The German Chancellor has thereby added another to the many claims which he has upon the gratitude of the German people, though the further sacrifices he now calls upon them to make will be severely felt by all classes. They will have this consolation, that they are inevitable. It is probable that, as in 1874, the permanent peace strength of the German Army will be voted for a term of seven years, and that constitutional scruples will be overborne by the stern fact of military necessity.

The effort made to retain in the Navy the services of men who had served their first term, has not resulted in the re-engagement of so great a number as the Admiralty anticipated; and far too many of the seaman class, who have been trained in the Service, and who have, after the expiration of their first term, become most valuable men on board ship, leave the Service, and have to be replaced by boys. It is satisfactory to find that this matter has been under the consideration of the Board, although no decision has as yet been arrived at, and that it is proposed to hold out further inducements to men to stick to the Service. The First Lord of the Admiralty even thinks of inducing men to remain after they have completed twenty years and have won their pension, and a leaven of such old hands would, doubtless, be invaluable in most ships. But by this system, should it ever become a rule rather than the exception to retain pensioners on active service, we shall run the danger of very materially reducing the Reserve of pensioned seamen and petty officers who are now bound to serve on being called out by Royal proclamation. At the present time, there are more than five thousand such pensioners in the prime of life, and an equal number who are past fifty years of age, a large per-centage of whom would be found unfit for service afloat, if called upon. To greatly reduce this, our reliable Reserve, which takes rank next to the Coastguard in time of necessity, and leave the Navy little but the Royal Naval Reserve, which would be scattered over the face of the globe in merchant ships, and would not be available when war was declared, would be unwise, and it is to be hoped that no desire to reduce the cost of the training service may prevail, and thus deprive the Navy of a portion of its already limited power of expansion. That the maintenance of the many training ships now stationed at the home ports is a source of great expense is undeniable, and any scheme by which the waste of our seamen may be averted, and the demand for new entries may be checked, is deserving of the closest attention. The idea of retaining the services of pensioned seamen in her Majesty's ships is also the more tempting, from the fact that their presence adds to the efficiency of those ships. But we would rather see twenty years' service the rule, and let our pensioned seamen take their pensions, and go on what is nothing less than a reserved list. Every encouragement should be given to men to re-engage for the second term of continuous service, for they are of more true value to the State during their second ten years than while serving as boys and young seamen. It is the young element in the first term that swells the returns of punishments, for as it is not to be expected that old heads can be placed on young shoulders, it is the first-term men who yield to the temptations of the shore, receive their punishments, and, to a certain extent, become disheartened. Thus it is that, when their ten years are up, and they have the chance of going free, they accept the chance, although they receive no reward for their past services, rather than re-enter for another ten years, on almost the same terms. It is at that moment that the inducements to stay by the Service should be held out, and many a man who had been racketty as a young Ordinary, and had failed to make much progress in the Service, would put his shoulder to the wheel, and with better pay, and the prospect of advancement and ultimate pension at the age of thirty-eight, prove himself to have been quite worth the extra allowances and pay awarded to him on account of his re-engaging. Whatever their Lordships might be pleased to offer, although they might look upon it as almost extravagant, it could never amount to the cost of the training of an efficient boy, who would be required to fill the vacancy caused by the discharge of the efficient seaman, who failed to find the Navy sufficiently attractive to re-engage for a further term of ten years.

The recent capture by the Zulus of the colours of the 24th Regiment has not only given rise to some correspondence in the Press as to the advisability or otherwise of taking colours into action, but has set many military men of experience thinking whether it is an absolute necessity that regiments, now-a-days, should be troubled with colours at all. The 60th Rifles and the Rifle Brigade have neither of them colours, and yet it needs not the presence of these ensigns to inspire these glorious old battalions with zeal and courage in the presence of an enemy. The peculiar duty in the field of these rifle regiments in former times was to skirmish, and, as a rule, to skirmish only, so that colours would have greatly incommoded them in their movements. But in these days, when the extended formation is the principal feature in the drill of our battalions, it is found that the colours are not only a great incumbrance, but a sad hindrance to a regiment in the field. Almost any day when the troops are at drill at Aldershot, small parties of officers and men in charge of colours may be seen wandering about in search of a place of shelter, or of some company under whose protection they may place themselves, whilst their regiments are skirmishing over the plains. In these days, when the scarcity of non-commissioned officers is so much felt, it is very questionable whether they should be employed in looking after colours, instead of affording assistance to the officers of their companies. The colour party of a regiment consists of two officers and five non-commissioned officers, and when this number is multiplied by the number of battalions having colours, it will be seen that 284 officers and 710 non-commissioned officers are employed in escorting the flags. We are here only taking into calculation the Infantry of our Army. The Cavalry regiments have only a standard, carried by a non-commissioned officer; and this standard is not consecrated, as are the colours of an Infantry battalion, and it is possible that no such traditions are attached to its possession as are associated with the colours of an Infantry battalion. Far be it from us to counsel the entire abolition of colours; but it is thought that if one, the regimental colour, was taken away, it would release at least one officer and three non-commissioned officers in each regiment, and these would then be available for duty with their companies, an arrangement very greatly to be desired. During the Mutiny in India, the colours of the 71st Regiment were safely stowed away on the back of a camel, and in charge of two or three men, who could be easily spared from their battalion. Another regiment in the same division always had the colours with it, and they were found to be sadly in the way when a long march had to be accomplished, or an engagement fought, as not unfrequently happened, in a hot sun. It has been said that the colours serve as a rallying-point, around which in times of emergency the soldiers might assemble; but would not one colour serve the same purpose equally well? It is the opinion of many old officers that the colours of a regiment should only be used on review or gala days, but it is certain that, under the present system of manœuvres, they should never be taken into the field. It is an old Hythe maxim that a man who cannot shoot is useless, and an encumbrance to a battalion. This is partly true only; yet what must the colours of a regiment in the field, guarded by seven officers and non-commissioned officers, be, but a very great encumbrance?

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh has had placed under his control the distribution of the provisions and stores brought for the distressed Irish from the United States by the Constellation, and the Valorous will at once take a portion of these stores to the West Coast, for distribution.

The Duke of Edinburgh has contrived, in the intervals of the relief work on which he has been engaged with characteristic energy, to enjoy a little sport in the way of salmon-fishing, and has taken some good fish in the West of Ireland. His Royal Highness is expected at Queenstown, with the Lively, Valorous, and the relief squadron of gunboats, and we hear the Duke was expected to be present at the fancy ball in Cork last night, to which Captain Potter, U.S.N., and the officers of the U.S. frigate Constellation were invited.

The Cabinet-making which has been indulged in so generally during the past week, is only equalled by the Board-making in Naval circles. That Mr. Childers will return to office is certain, but another place than the Admiralty will, probably, be found for him, as it is suggested that Admiral Sir Cooper Key could not well remain as senior Naval Lord with Mr. Childers at the head of the department, and more than that, he would not be generally popular with the Fleet. It is hoped that Lord Northbrook may be placed at the head of Naval affairs, and he is the favourite among the nominations that have been suggested. Of others who are looked upon as probable members are Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., or Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., vice Lord Clanwilliam; Rear-Admirals Sir William Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., or Rear-Admiral Carr Glyn, C.B., C.S.I., vice Sir Edmund Commerell; Lord Camperdown, vice Sir Massey Lopes; and Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P., as Parliamentary Secretary.

The first of our ironclad fleet are to be brought to the hammer. The Research, Enterprise, Favourite, and Pallas are doomed, provided a buyer can be found. They are useless as men-of-war, having been condemned when paid off after their last commissions, and now they will probably go to the ship-breaker's yard to be turned into old iron. If the price obtained should be very small in comparison to their cost, and far below the return obtained by the sale of wooden ships when worn out, we shall have another unpleasant disadvantage of the new navy over the old. The ships named have only seen about three commissions each, they were costly to build, expensive to maintain, rapidly became unserviceable, and will probably sell for a mere song, owing to the amount of labour required to take them to pieces.

Captain John Sandwith, of the Plymouth Division of the Royal Marines, is to be added to the list of those of the Services who have been called to the Bar, the honourable society of Lincoln's Inn having on Wednesday called him to the degree of barrister-at-law.

The Northumberland, in returning to the anchorage at Lagos, after target practice, managed to part her cable and lose her anchor, which was let go while the ship had too much way on. The anchor and portion of the cable were, however, recovered before the Channel Squadron left for the Azores.

We are glad to learn that the Admiralty Committee on the duties of Messengers and Storehousemen at the Naval Departments and Yards has decided that in future, in selecting men for these appointments, preference shall be given to Pensioners. No men could be better fitted for such appointments, and we hope that no attempt at effecting too great an economy at the cost of the men will be made, by taking into consideration their pension, already earned, when fixing the rates of pay to be given for the work to be performed.

Some hitch has arisen with regard to the volunteering of Marine officers for service in the Indian Staff Corps, and we believe that but a comparatively small proportion of those who have already sent in their names as candidates will be transferred to the service of the Indian Government.

Rear-Admiral Hood, with the ships of the Channel Squadron under his command, may be expected to arrive at Bantry Bay about May 8, from their search for the Atalanta. Letters for the ships of the Squadron should be addressed to Castletown, Berehaven.

The ships of the First Reserve Squadron have received orders to proceed to the different ports for overhaul and refit before proceeding to sea on the annual cruise. The Resistance has already been ordered to Devonport, and the Hector to Portsmouth. The Warrior will go to Portsmouth on the 30th inst., the Valiant to Devonport on May 1, the Hercules to Portsmouth on May 7, the Penelope to Chatham, the Belleisle to Devonport on May 8, the Lord Warden to Portsmouth on May 14, and the Audacious to Chatham at a date not yet named.

Lieutenant Burr, R.N., was on Tuesday entertained at a dinner given in his honour by the United African Company, and was presented with a handsome testimonial taking the form of a silver salver and claret jug. On the salver was inscribed, "Presented, with a silver claret jug, by the United African Company, Limited, to Lieutenant J. Leslie Burr, R.N., late commanding H.M.S. Pioneer, in recognition of the invaluable services to civilisation and commerce rendered by him in the protection of British life and property at Onitsha, River Niger, during the Expedition of 1879." There were present all the directors of the Company, together with many others, amongst whom were Rear-Admiral Sir W. N. W. Hewett, V.C., K.C.B., and also his brother, British Consul of the Bights of Benin and Biafra, who is about to take up his appointment on the West Coast of Africa; and Captain Burr, h.p., 17th Regiment. Sir William Hewett made a very complimentary speech in honour of the guest of the evening. We have on a former occasion spoken highly of the services rendered by Lieutenant Burr, and the honour done him is a fitting recognition of his gallant conduct.

Commander Racquier, the Italian Naval Attaché, and a number of Italian officers arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday, and inspected the Inflexible, Iris, Neptune, Dreadnought, and the ships in course of construction, over which they were shown by Mr. Barnaby, C.B.

Captain Sir Thomas Cuppage Bruce, R.N., packet superintendent at Dover, who has received the honour of Knighthood, entered the Navy in 1836 as a midshipman on board the Bellerophon, and served at the bombardment of St. Jean d'Acre in 1840. He was promoted to lieutenant in 1846, and was subsequently employed in the Baltic, the Mediterranean, and other stations. He became a captain on the Retired List in 1876.

Vice-Admiral Dowell, C.B., struck his flag on board the Revenge at Queenstown at sunset on Saturday, and transferred the command to Rear-Admiral R. Vesey Hamilton, C.B.

The Naval pension of £50 a year vacant by the death of Staff Commander Charles T. Tucker, on the 23rd ult., has been awarded to Staff Commander Richard O. White.

Several articles have been appearing of late in the St. Petersburg Vedomosti on Captain Colomb's work, "The Defence of Great and Greater Britain," in which the opinion is expressed that Russia ought to give up her ironclad fleet, and devote her whole attention to cruiser warfare, as being the best means of destroying the mercantile supremacy of England. The semi-official Cronstadt Vestnik, referring to these articles, observes:—"We have always been supporters of the cruiser system of warfare, but there is a tendency to carry the idea to absurd lengths just now. It should not be forgotten that an ironclad fleet is an absolute necessity, if Russia intends to defend her coast. Of course, one good cruiser would do England far more damage than ten ironclads, but we must not overlook the fact that these ironclads would be needed to protect the cruiser while proceeding through narrow seas to the open ocean."

The Celestial Empire appears to be getting into very hot water, and unless a different attitude is assumed, she will want all her new gunboats for the protection of her shores. Russia, France, Japan, Portugal, and Siam are all more or less at loggerheads with China and her dependencies, and Russia is endeavouring to induce Burmah to join the Japano-Siamese alliance, while Siam promises support to Portugal in the event of the Macao quarrel coming to blows. France, like ourselves, is not sufficiently well provided with gunboats for river work, a disadvantage she has discovered now she has a dispute with the Annamite Government.

We were right in our conjecture last week, that the next mail from the West Indies would bring us news of the Fantôme, about which Devonport, where she fitted out, was getting anxious. From February 10 to April 17 was certainly a long time to wait for news of a ship on a passage from Madeira to Port Royal. But the mail was delayed, as we pointed out, and now it appears that the Fantôme was close to Port Royal, all well, on March 12.

Rear-Admiral Robert Scott is not, we hear, quite satisfied that the Government has sufficiently rewarded him for the labour and expense incurred by him in developing certain improvements in Naval gunnery well known to the Service. He has certainly received an award, but the cost of invention is great, besides the wear of brain. The Admiralty, however, shows no inclination to reopen the case, and is desirous that the grant which was made should be the final one, and be accepted as compensation in full, for those inventions of Admiral Scott which have been adopted in the Navy.

The supplies of coal sent out to the China station were not long since cut down on the adoption of Labuan coal for use on board her Majesty's ships. But according to last accounts, Labuan can no longer be counted as a coaling-station, as the working of the coal has, for some reason, been stopped.

By an age-retirement scheme which has been promulgated by the Admiralty, it is now ruled that clerks and others who form the Civil staff of the Admiralty Departments in London and at the ports are to be retired on attaining 60 years of age, provided they have completed 40 years' service for pension. The retention of an officer after 60 will be in every case dependent upon his thorough efficiency, and the Board reserves the power of retiring civil servants at 60, even though they have not completed a service of 40 years. Retirement at 65 will be in every case compulsory.

Lieutenant Henry Chamberlain, who has been borne in the Vernon since September, 1878, for the purpose of qualifying as torpedo lieutenant, has, we regret to hear, been compelled to withdraw from the course, owing to ill-health.

The annual report of the Army and Navy Institute at Gosport is, we are glad to find, of a satisfactory nature, and looking to the advantages of these institutions to the men of the Services, Admiral Ryder has ventured to express a hope that the Admiralty may be induced to make a yearly grant to establishments of this nature. The money would certainly be well spent.

Mr. Childers has, "for political reasons," resigned his office as Chairman of the Royal West Indies Mail-steamer Company, a post which he has filled while out of office, and he is now free to accept a seat in the Cabinet.

Lieutenant Louis Palander, of the Swedish Navy, who, as commander of the Vega, was rather eclipsed by Professor Nordenskjöld at the receptions given to the returned explorers, has not been forgotten by the Royal Geographical Society, which, on Monday, resolved to award him the gold medal of the Society.

There is a point to which we desire to call the attention of Mr. Swainson, Assistant Secretary at the Admiralty, knowing his readiness to undertake reform where it may be needed. We allude to the manner in which the appointments of officers are made out for the benefit of those who go to the Admiralty to obtain this information for the Press. It is not every man who can write a fairly legible hand, although that is one of the requirements of the Civil Service Commissioners; nor is every one equal to deciphering bad writing. The result is that in the course of the year an immense number of appointments are wrongly announced, while others are omitted altogether, owing to the names, as given in the waiting-room, being little short of illegible. If only one paper failed to give the correct names of the officers and ships to which they were appointed, there would be no reason for putting the blame on the system at the Admiralty; but it is frequently noticeable that nearly the whole of the daily papers fall into the same error. For instance, last week almost every paper announced that Captain Seymour had been appointed to the Trio, that being the best that could be made out of the Iris, owing to the illegibility of the writing of the official whose duty it was to place the information in the waiting-room. If, again, the publication of this information were for the benefit of the Press only, there would not be so much room for complaint; but it is for the benefit of the public service that appointments of officers should be announced, many an officer gaining information of his appointment through the papers long before the official communication reaches him; and as this information does not appear in the Gazette, it is only right that care should be taken to have it correctly announced. This week the appointments have been most carelessly announced, no Christian names being given in some instances, and in others names not to be found in the Navy List have been announced, such as "Lieutenant Lionald Lawrence." As there are several Lieutenants named White and Wood, we have given their appointments as we have received them from the official source, and have made no attempt to decide who are the officers appointed. There are, surely, some writers at the Admiralty who can write a plain hand, even if the higher officials have no idea of attending to such minor details as Christian names and the dotting of i's and crossing of t's; and if it be impossible to have printed lists of appointments for issue to the papers, we would suggest to Mr. Swainson that someone who can write should be deputed to prepare the list of appointments for the waiting-room.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C,B., arrived at Larnaca on board the Helicon on Thursday evening, en route to Crete and Malta.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., was at Bombay on May 3. He proposed to sail in the Euryalus about the 20th inst. for Trincomalee, and, after consulting the Viceroy, would make a southern tour, visiting Mauritius, Bourbon, Zanzibar, Seychelles, and Colombo, returning to Trincomalee. Later on Admiral Jones would visit Madras, Calcutta, and Rangoon.

We regret to learn by a telegram from Nice that Mr. Alexander Luard, midshipman of the Téméraire, has been killed by a fall from aloft. The funeral of this unfortunate young officer took place on Thursday. The coffin was placed upon a gun-carriage, preceded by a band, and escorted by the officers and men of the Téméraire and Thunderer, and a detachment of Royal Marines to the Protestant cemetery.

A report has been diligently circulated that another "Thunderer accident" has only been most narrowly escaped in the Channel Squadron. It is alleged that during practice at sea, a gun on the main deck of one of the ships missed fire when an electric broadside was fired, and that the gun's crew failed to detect the non-discharge of their gun, which was then run in and double-loaded, the original battering-charge and Palliser shot being supplemented by a full charge and Palliser shot. In this case, there were no hydraulic gear, but the running in and loading was done by the crew; and this makes the story most improbable, or brings home more than a suspicion of gross carelessness. We shall be glad if a contradiction of this alleged double-loading can be given.

Captain Culme-Seymour has been named as probable successor to the command of the Britannia in August next, which will give him an opportunity of moving into even more comfortable married quarters than those which have been constructed for him, at great cost, on board the Duke of Wellington. The Commander-in-Chief will then possibly be allowed to influence the Admiralty in the selection of an officer as his flag-captain, a privilege which was denied Admiral Ryder, on his hoisting his flag in the Duke of Wellington. It is questionable, however, whether Captain Colomb would care to give up the command of the Thunderer, to take up a harbour appointment, even if their Lordships gave him the option.

Again have we been asked the cause of the delay in issuing the medal to the officers and men of the Naval force engaged in the Perak campaign of 1875-6. Her Majesty's approval to the issue of this medal was given long ago, and we believe the delay now lies with the authorities responsible for the production of the medal and clasp. Five years does seem a long time to wait for a medal, and the number of applicants must by this time have been considerably thinned by death.

There is little or nothing more to be said as to the missing Atalanta, for all inquiries are answered with the stereotyped reply, "No news." Our hopes and fears have already been fully expressed, and, until bad news is received, we must hold to the old saying that "No news is good news." There is the possibility of her having drifted by this time far away in a northerly direction, and it is not improbable that their Lordships may order the Channel Squadron to leave Bantry Bay on another search, should the ships gain no tidings of the Atalanta before their present orders have been carried out. One or two notices respecting the ship issued by the Admiralty this week, and some correspondence from those qualified to form an opinion on the fate of the ship, will be found under her name in another column.

Vice-Admiral Pothuau, Ambassador for France, has this week presented to her Majesty his letters of recall from the Court of St. James's.

A strong and at the same time a very natural feeling appears to be growing in the Naval and Military Services on the subject of wearing decorations and medals in plain clothes, or after retirement. Although there is scarcely an officer in either the Army or Navy possessed of a war decoration who has not a feeling of pride in wearing it, yet the amour-propre of most Englishmen is so strong, that few care to make themselves peculiar by exhibiting a decoration on a black coat, when they have doffed the uniform to which it was affixed, and this not because they would not readily wear it, if the custom had received general sanction, but simply that they will not take the bull by the horns, and brave public opinion by making themselves singular. It is true that here and there an officer who has retired from either of the Services has had the pluck to pin the insignia of the C.B. to his black dress-coat; but although the wish is general, the instances are few and far between. This does not obtain among officers of Continental services, for after retirement their orders and medals are as freely and as proudly paraded as before, and not put away in lavender, as a thing to be ashamed of, and doomed never again to see the light. The Service papers of late have teemed with letters on this subject; but if officers wait until a General Order appears suggesting and approving the wearing of ribbons in plain clothes, we fear they will have long to wait for what has never been prohibited; while on the other hand, if all those who write in support of the subject will only give their example by wearing their own, what is now the exception will soon become the rule, and gallant officers, although retired, will still (as they should) be distinguished from civilians, or from their undecorated brethren.

The announcement that Sir Garnet Wolseley has been sent for in all haste to come to London, and that he may be expected about May 20, seems to be well founded; but we cannot see what is the reason for urgency now in the matter, any more than that which may be presumed to have existed a month or two months ago. There is no doubt that Sir Garnet, considering his work to be done, was most anxious to come home long ago, and it was thought probable he would look for a seat in Parliament; but there may be some more important professional duties in store for him; and although in many points Sir Garnet Wolseley is a Liberal, he has, we think, very strong opinions on the necessity of a policy of dignified interference, in all matters which affect the power of the Empire and the maintenance of its interests and renown. Things are not going well in India, and it would not be quite unnatural if the incoming Government refused to carry out the arrangements at the War Office which were contemplated by the present Ministry. Should Sir Garnet Wolseley take his seat at the Horse Guards, the Airey Report may be regarded as a fiasco, and the short-service experiment will be carried out to some sort of end, but we do not think there is much chance of a harmonious whole being worked out at Pall Mall.

The decision of the War Office to hasten on the retirement of those Lieutenant-Colonels of regiments who obtained their appointments prior to the abolition of Purchase has met with the hearty approval of all well-wishers of the Service, but it will have the effect of reducing the chances of the five years' Lieutenant-Colonels of obtaining further employment. The Authorities are doing what they consider best for the interests of the general body of officers, but we trust that the claims may be kept in view of the dozen or so officers who now find themselves doomed to pass their time in enforced idleness. The numbers will go on increasing whilst the openings are limited in extent, but in filling the higher appointments on the Staff of the Army, these officers should be considered to possess a priority of claim.

It will have been noticed that Colonel W. L. Pemberton, on retiring upon half-pay from command of the 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles, has been gazetted Brevet-Colonel from March 10; whilst Colonel W. H. Welman, C.B., 99th Regiment, has obtained the rank from March 31, the dates upon which they respectively completed five years in rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. We cannot think that it is intended that these officers, who both of them commanded regiments in the Zulu campaign, are to be allowed to remain junior on the list to Colonels Rogers, of the 90th, and Bond, of the 58th, both of whom served as majors in the Zulu campaign. Colonels Rogers and Bond were very properly accorded promotion as brevet colonels; but it would only be fair to give to all officers who actually commanded regiments in the late campaign the higher rank, to place them in a proper position with regard to their juniors. As we stated some time ago, representations are being made on the subject to the Horse Guards, and that Department can scarcely refuse to entertain the application of the officers interested, seeing that their supersession is to them a matter of great importance, and that the granting of a step of rank would entail no extra expense.

Our Infantry are not good marchers. In spite of some remarkable instances to the contrary, they have never enjoyed a good reputation in that respect, and with the lower average of age, and the substitution of railway journeys for march-routes, they are not likely to improve, unless some special pains be taken. The Authorities order regiments to march out periodically during the winter, but a march-out along a good road for five miles or so, and back again, does little more than give an appetite for dinner. What should be done is to try and bring long walking-matches into fashion in the Army, and a little money granted by Government, for providing prizes to be competed for at the principal garrisons, and—by soldiers—at the chief athletic sports, would be cash judiciously expended. At the same time, an endeavour should be made to lighten the soldier's kit, and to make his dress more suitable for violent exercise. Great improvements, in both respects, have taken place during the last few years, but much remains to be done. No one, for instance, would pretend that any man would set out on a shooting expedition or pioneer journey on foot in the costume assigned to our soldiers for a campaign.

The intelligence from Afghanistan is at length interesting. On the 21st General Ross marched with his division from Cabul towards Ghuznee, in order to stretch out a hand to General Stewart, who was advancing from the opposite direction. The day previously the advance picket of General Ross's force was fired on, and compelled to retire, which proves the wisdom of attempting a diversion from Cabul. On the evening of the 22nd, or morning of the 23rd, General Ross came into communication with General Stewart by heliograph, and learnt that on the 19th that officer had had a severe encounter with the enemy about 25 miles south of Ghuznee. While on the march, General Stewart came in sight of an army of tribesmen, estimated at 15,000 men, occupying a strong position. Preparations were at once made to attack them, but before that could be completed, 3,000 Ghazis, sword in hand, rushed on our troops, surging round both flanks. Of the details of the fighting which ensued, we are told nothing, but it must have been desperate work, and a good deal of it hand-to-hand, for it lasted an hour, and when at the end of that time the enemy fled, they left behind them 1,000 dead bodies. Unfortunately, the necessity of protecting a lengthy baggage-line prevented pursuit by the cavalry, and the foe scattered all over the country without interference. After the action General Stewart resumed his march, and reached Nani, nine miles distant, that evening. On the morrow, the advanced cavalry entered Ghuznee without opposition. The loss of the British was 17 killed and 115 wounded, among the latter being Lieutenant Young, 19th Bengal Lancers, dangerously; Captain Corbett, Horse Artillery, severely; Lieutenant-Colonel Lawson, 59th Regiment; Colonel Yorke, 19th Bengal Lancers; Lieutenant Watson, 59th Regiment; and Lieutenant Stewart, 2nd Bengal Cavalry—all slightly. There were no officers among the killed. On no previous occasion have the Afghans shown so much resolution, and the steadiness of General Stewart's force under this fierce and resolute attack reflects the greatest credit on them and their able commander. With this victory, the campaign south of Cabul may be considered at an end, and our signal success will probably greatly influence the decision of those chiefs with whom Mr. Lepel Griffin is negociating for a settlement of the country.

It is not only the financial administration of the Wellington College, now being investigated by a Royal Commission, which needs looking into. The discipline evidently needs reform. We hear of boys being caned till their jackets were cut open, and the head master admits that he delegates the power of inflicting corporal punishment to his subordinates. All this is wrong, and contrary to the spirit of the age. It is evidently desirable to get Wellington College out of the hands of the clique which manages it, for whatever their good intentions, they have not succeeded in giving satisfaction to the Army,—i.e., to those for whose benefit the College was founded.

We earnestly trust that the new Secretary of War, whoever he may be, will take into his serious consideration the propriety of doing something for that hard-working, meritorious, but friendless class of officers,—Quartermasters and Ridingmasters. The position of almost all ranks, save theirs, has been improved of late years, and their grievances are very substantial. We hope to go into the matter at length on some future occasion; but we may draw attention briefly to the following points:—The Quartermaster and Ridingmaster remains a Lieutenant throughout his service, and on retirement only receives the honorary rank of Captain. Considering the responsibility, labour, and expense of his position, it would be only just to increase his pay. It should be remembered that no regiment can be either efficient or comfortable, especially in the field, unless it has a good Quartermaster. And where would a Cavalry regiment be without its Ridingmaster? Formerly Quartermasters had such valuable prizes as Paymasterships to look to. Now they have no chance of getting those much-coveted appointments. Till within a year or two, they were assigned special quarters—two rooms, and a kitchen. Now they only enjoy one room and a share of a kitchen. Formerly, they could hold with their pension the appointment of Quartermaster of Militia. This privilege has been withdrawn from them. One of their great grievances is that in the Commissariat and Ordnance Store Departments they are entered in the Army, but as members of a "subordinate branch." Now, as the term "subordinate branch" is in India applied to warrant officers and apothecaries, the Quartermasters say that their position has been lowered. It is little enough that the Quartermasters and Ridingmasters want, and surely that little might be granted, considering how great are the concessions made to the Army Doctors.

A war between Russia and Germany is not very probable, yet it is possible; and against this possibility, the Germans are wisely providing. Along the long line of frontier—a frontier, by-the-by, inviting attack, as we learn from a recent pamphlet, from the pen of a German officer, treating of its defence—they have been and still are erecting a line of formidable bulwarks, in the shape of first-class fortresses. Posen is one of them. The great works for converting it into such a fortress were commenced in 1876, and include nine detached forts and several minor intervening works. Only two of the forts are at present completely finished, but the construction of the others is proceeding so rapidly, that it is expected that by 1883 the most formidable fortress of Germany on her eastern frontier will be completed. The time consumed in effecting the transformation of a second-rate stronghold into one of the first magnitude will therefore be seven years.

Is nothing to be done for the 300 or 400 Purchase Captains who will be left without brevet rank on October 1 next? The case of these officers is a very hard one. Having entered the Army with the sure hope that, by good and long service, they would one day attain the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, they are now cut off from all possibility of doing so, through no fault of their own. Not only have they given the best years of their lives to their profession, but in many instances they have invested all the money they possessed in the purchase of their commissions, and in a great many cases they have even borrowed the money to enable them to purchase their present rank. By par. 14, clause 124, Army Circular, September 1, 1877, after January 1 next they become ineligible for promotion on completing 25 years' service. A great many cannot possibly hope to obtain regimental promotion in time to save them from the effect of this clause; so, after probably serving 23 or 24 years, they will have to take retirement as Honorary Majors, and be on an equality, as regards Army rank, with the non-purchase Captains of 20 years' service. To most of these men, the dearest wish in their lives has been to attain the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and considering the years they have spent in the Service and the sacrifices they have made to gain this object, will it not be most unfair, after what Lord Cardwell promised,—"That no officer should be in a worse position for the passing of his Warrant"—if the country allows them to be thus treated? To give them all brevet rank on October 1, and to enable them to retire with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, will cost the country nothing, will be an injustice to no branch of the Service, and will only be treating a body of devoted servants with common fairness.

General Ernrot, the newly-appointed Bulgarian Minister of War, is a Finn by birth. When a young man, he entered the Army of the Caucasus, and rose in the course of time to be commander of the Caucasian Rifle Battalion. During the Polish revolt of 1863 he held the command of the infantry in the Warsaw District, and on the outbreak of the recent Turkish war, he was appointed as chief of the 11th Infantry Division. Ernrot has the reputation of being a brave and skilful officer and a clever administrator. Under his direction, Russians anticipate that the Bulgarian army will be raised to a high degree of efficiency.

A translation of Baker Pasha's work, "The War in Bulgaria," is appearing in the Voennoi Sbornik, which serves as the mouthpiece of the Russian War Department. The translator is Captain Sologoob.

The Distinguished Service Reward, vacant by the appointment of Lieutenant-General the Hon. R. Rolls, C.B., to the Colonelcy of the 109th Regiment, has been given to Colonel S. A. Madden, C.B., commanding the Perth Brigade Depôt, and lately in command of the 51st Light Infantry in Afghanistan. Colonel Madden entered the Army July 7, 1843; served with the 51st throughout the Burmese war of 1852-53, was on board the E.I.C. steam-sloop Sesostris during the naval action and destruction of the enemy's stockades on the Rangoon river; served during the succeeding three days' operations in the vicinity (including the storming of the White House Redoubt), and at the storm and capture of Rangoon; also at the assault and capture of Bassein, May 19, and repulse of the night attack on Prom, December 8, 1852 (medal with clasp for Pegu).

An old French caricature represents a courier carrying despatches to the commander of an army in the field. In front, he carries a bag labelled "Mes Ordres;" behind, a second bag, on which is written, "Mes Contre-ordres." The British War Office of to-day is nearly as bad, as regards issuing numerous orders and counter-orders, as was the French Ministry of War in the time of Louis XIV. No sooner does a warrant, general order, or circular appear, than it is followed by explanatory, supplementary, or cancelling documents of some sort. Our readers will hardly credit it, but it is a fact that in 1878 there appeared 119 General Orders and 213 Army Circulars, and during the first nine months of 1879, 125 General Orders and 245 Circulars. Many of these inaugurated the most trifling button-and-buckle matters. Some few of them were, however, important, Now, official copies of such documents are only sent to commanders of corps and Staff officers, and other officers and non-commissioned officers can merely obtain a hasty glimpse of them in the orderly-room, for they are not to be purchased, save in a bulky form and long after issue. Officers and non-commissioned officers on detachment or on leave, indeed, are very liable to remain in ignorance of the very existence of such orders. It strikes us, therefore, that the suggestion of a correspondent is a very good one. This suggestion is that all General Orders and Circulars should be sold at cost price to officers, in a pamphlet form, at regular intervals, say, monthly, General Orders and Circulars being kept separate, so that each might be bound up at the end of the year, with a proper index.

MANUAL TRANSPORT.

At the United Service Institution on Monday last a most interesting paper on "Manual Transport" was read by Brevet Major W. L. Geddes, 53rd Regiment, who commenced by stating that his object was to examine more particularly that part of the transport question which dealt with the carriage of such necessaries as ought always to be within reach of the soldier on active service, namely, food, ammunition, and intrenching tools. He laid stress upon the necessity for troops to carry rations with them in the field, and supported his observations by a quotation from Colonel Home's "Précis on Modern Tactics." The lecturer subdivided his subject as follows:—1st. That transport should be divided broadly into two parts, viz., the train accompanying the army, and the transport drawing supplies from great magazines to fill the trains. 2nd. That the train should be a "disciplined body, with the very best plant." 3rd. That the conditions under which we usually fight do not admit of our keeping up in sufficient numbers the disciplined body which European warfare demands. 4th. That the soldier must carry rations. The watchword of the evening appeared to be "mobility." Rapidity of fire means great expenditure of ammunition, celerity of movement means plenty of rations for those who are moving; and on these points great stress was laid throughout the lecture. With reference to entrenchments, the lecturer proceeded to remark that the question how tools are to be carried has never yet been satisfactorily answered, and explained the different methods which are in vogue for carrying such implements in the Prussian, French, Russian, and American armies. Major Geddes then submitted his design for "an ammunition and entrenching-tool carrier," which is a single wheel, surrounded by a yoke, to which the several articles are attached, and which may be worked by three men on a road, or four men across country, although there is space enough for six men, if necessary. The equipment of this "carrier," subject to modifications, is 4 picks, 4 spades, 4 shovels, 2 saws, 2 felling-axes, 2 hatchets, and 4 regulation boxes of ammunition (each of 600 rounds). The idea is to have 2 "carriers" per company, and thus to enable every company of 100 men to go into action with intrenching tools for 24 men, and a reserve of ammunition at the rate of 50 rounds per man. Major Geddes most diffidently explained that he is simply a regimental officer who by chance has designed a mechanical substitute for a pack animal, and explained that his machine needed no food, could not run away when its services were required, and that the men with it could always be utilised in the fighting line, if wanted. The lecture was most attentively listened to throughout, and was followed by a discussion, during which Sir Henry Norman remarked that he thought the machine unsuitable for very mountainous regions, and a bad substitute for the ordinary train. Major-General Burroughs suggested that the machine appeared to be intended as a supplement, and not a substitute, for the train; and his view was endorsed by Colonel Clive, Grenadier Guards, the chairman. A vote of thanks, ably expressed by Colonel Clive, terminated the proceedings. And here we may remark once more upon the merits of this most worthy institution, devoted to the advancement of military learning. There are frequently very instructive lectures by day, and those in the evening are dedicated to machinery and inventions, in order that mechanics may be induced to attend. Surely, in this age of wars and rumours of wars, our United Service Institution demands a better place among us than its present cramped space, and is not only worthy of our regard, but also deserves our support.

There will be 80 vacancies for admission in September next to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, to be competed for at the examination which has already been announced to take place in July of this year.—War Office, April, 1880.

The Land and Mortgage Company of Egypt, Limited, has been incorporated under the Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1879, with limited liability, with a capital of £1,000,000, and announces its first issue of £500,000, in 25,000 shares of £20 each. The principal operations of the company will include loans on the mortgage of land, the purchase, sale, and improvement of land, and the general business of land agency in Egypt. Lists for shares will be closed on Monday, the 26th inst., at 4 o'clock, for London, and on Tuesday, the 27th, at 4 o'clock, for country subscribers.

INDIA.

The Times of India says:—"As we anticipated, Gen. Brooke, the Adjutant-General, has been appointed to the command of one of the brigades now in formation at Candahar, and Gen. Burrows, our late popular Quartermaster-General, gets the other. Our telegram from Calcutta states that Gen. Phayre is to resume command of the line of communication, and this, we imagine, will be a disappointment to the General, who has really done good work." We fancy, however, that the arrangement is merely temporary, and that the command of the 2nd Division is in reserve for him. Everybody will be glad if our surmise should prove to be correct."

Major W. E. Chambers, Bengal S.C., has been appointed transport staff officer with the Naga Field Force and commandant of the Coolie Corps, which is to be employed on the line of communication.

Lieut.-Col. H. A. Little, Bengal S.C., officiating D.Q.M.G., Intelligence Branch, has been appointed A.Q.M.G. on the permanent establishment of the general branch of Qrmr.-Gen.'s Department in India, vice Lieut.-Col. Sanford, appointed D.Q.M.G., Intelligence Branch.

We stated some time ago that the military authorities were trying to procure mules from Cyprus for the new European mountain battery, which has been formed for service in southern Afghanistan. We now learn that the application to Gen. Biddulph, the High Commissioner, has been successful, and that 180 mules have been or are about to be dispatched to India. Upon arrival in Bombay they will be sent on to Poona, where the battery is at present undergoing preliminary training.

The appointment of Col. A. G. F. Hogg, Bombay S.C., to be Quartermaster-General, Bombay, has been confirmed by Lord Cranbrook.

It is officially announced that Brigdr.-Gen. H. H. Gough, C.B., V.C., Bengal S.C., has been appointed to command the Cavalry Brigade, Cabul Field Force, vice Brigdr.-Gen. W. G. D. Massy.

It is notified in the Gazette of India that during the hot weather, the Government of India, in the Military Department, will have an officiating secretary at Calcutta, and Col. Lees is gazetted to the post. All correspondence about furlough and leave, promotion and retirement, pay and allowances, medals, clothing, and such reports and returns as are not wanted specially at Simla, are to be sent to Calcutta.

The following appointments have been made in the Quartermaster-General's Department, Bombay:—Brevet Major F. Karslake, 83rd Foot, to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G., in succession to Major Adam, proceeded on service; Capt. J. M. Heath, 26th Bombay N.I., to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G., in succession to Capt. Nicoll, Bengal S.C., on the list of lieut.-gens.; Col. C. M. Barrow, C.B., Bombay S.C., on the list of major-gens.; and Major St. G. Caulfeild, Madras S.C., on the list of lieut.-cols., in consequence of the retirement from the Service of Lieut.-Gen. J. K. Spence, Bengal S.C., on Jan. 16, 1880.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I solicit only a small space to give expression to a very general approval of the letter of "Othello" on the Royal Marines, in your impression of the 17th inst. The suggestions contained therein are welcome, and that they may take a real shape is the prayer of many of the distinguished corps, as at present administered.—I am, &c.,

RED-JACKET.

Experiments were made at Portsmouth on Tuesday with various kinds of flashing signals. Mr. Palmer, of Devonport, has been engaged for some time erecting gas apparatus as used at Devonport, and argand and other burners had been fitted. The Commander-in-Chief proceeded to Spithead in the Fire Queen at nine o'clock, to witness the experiments.

At a quarterly court of governors of the Marine Society, held at the offices, in Bishopsgate Street, the Earl of Romney (president) in the chair, the report of the committee stated that notwithstanding the difficulty experienced at the present time in finding ships for boys, the number sent to sea during the quarter had not fallen below the average of the last two years, being 29 to the Merchant Service and 15 to the Royal Navy. It was impossible to over-estimate the good that had been done by the Marine Society during the century and a half that had elapsed since it first began the work of rescuing boys from the perils of the streets, and training them to do good service for their country at sea. No less than 58,840 had now been sent to sea, and the example had of late years been followed by many other institutions. Five medals for good service at sea had been granted during the quarter, and one fine seaman produced a watch that had been presented by his owners as a mark of approbation of his conduct. On account of the defective condition of the upper and main decks of the Warspite, a heavy expense of £700 had been unavoidably incurred for repairs, which made the need of additional subscriptions more felt.

AN ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Lieut. Bove, the Italian officer who accompanied Prof. Nordenskjöld and the Swedish Arctic Expedition, has written the following interesting letter to Prince Teano, the President of the Italian Geographical Society, advocating the despatch of an Italian expedition to the Antarctic Seas:—

"The great British Association for the Advancement of Science, even in its earliest days, represented to the Government that in order to establish on a firm basis the science of marine geography, and the general physical geography of the globe, it was necessary to add to the study of the northern hemisphere—already well advanced—similar studies of the southern hemisphere. This suggestion of the Royal Society was received with acclamation by all the eminent men then existing in England, and in the world; and one result of it was the Antarctic Expedition of James Ross, the most glorious after that of Capt. Cook. From that time forth, by the continued encouragement of the above-named Society, of the Geographical Society, and of the Admiralty, there succeeded each other various English expeditions into the Arctic seas,—expeditions which form the noblest naval epic that history can boast of. Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, France applauded and envied these pacific triumphs of maritime England, which were as great as her previous triumphs in war. Nay, those countries resolved to imitate her example; and, under the patronage of thrones and parliaments and societies, assisted by private and public donations, several expeditions started from Europe and America, hotly rivalling and sharing the glory of the English mariners. Now such expeditions are becoming more frequent year by year, as general science is extending itself, and great honour is achieved by the nations who undertake them. But Italy, who can boast such great and ancient naval glories, has not yet displayed her honoured flag in either Polar circle. The opportunity for doing so may, however, soon present itself, since from the day of the Vega's arrival at Naples there has arisen in Italy a general desire to emulate the Swedish triumphs, and to despatch into the Frozen Ocean an expedition bearing the Italian flag and manned and officered by Italians, which shall serve for the increase of physical science and the honour of the nation. Such an expedition would be directed by preference to the Antarctic regions, as being those in which science desires to find the means of comparing and collating the various facts and observations already gathered in the North, in which since the days of Cook and Ross no other scientific expedition has appeared, or at least only for a brief glimpse, and in which, finally, no expedition has ever wintered beyond the fifty-sixth parallel of latitude, and where the physical phenomena have been examined but for short periods, and exclusively during the Austral summer. Thither, rather than to the North, to which already numerous scientific expeditions are annually despatched, should the Italian expedition be directed. There, during the period of three years which would be assigned to it, it could pass two winters; and there it would be enabled especially to study the problem of terrestrial magnetism, which is still very much questioned and very obscure, notwithstanding the serious studies of Ross, and the too brief ones of D'Urville and Wilkes, not to mention those made recently by astronomers in observing the passage of Venus across the disc of the sun, which studies were doubtless accurate enough, but necessarily made in haste and only in low latitudes. Moreover, the Italian expedition would pay constant attention to the possibility of opening new sources of material prosperity to Italy. We are entirely aloof and apart from the great fisheries of Newfoundland, of the Australian seas, and even from those of the Pacific, with the exception of the mere coast fisheries of California and Peru. The Italian expedition, in going to and returning from the Polar seas, would have to traverse vast tracts of ocean frequented by foreign whalers; and the members of the expedition would be attentive to gather any particulars which might stimulate our navigators to take a share in the lucrative enterprises of the French, the English, the Germans, and the Americans. It is true, indeed, that all English Admirals (sic), in recommending various expeditions to be sent to both Polar seas, have invariably placed in the chief rank the consideration that in such a hard school men and officers are trained and elevated to that high sentiment of honour from which all noble deeds are derived. At the same time, they never neglected any material advantages which might spring from such an enterprise; and in fact, they obtained copious and obvious advantages in the matter of the great fisheries. May our country also obtain such from the Italian expedition!"

LIFEBOAT WORK.

By the issue of the annual report of the National Lifeboat Institution it appears that during the past year 12 new lifeboats have been placed on different stations. During 1879, the lifeboats of the Institution rescued 637 persons. The lifeboat districts and the names of the officers who have charge of them are:—No. 1, the London district, Capt. the Hon. H. W. Chetwynd, R.N., who has charge of 34 lifeboats, stationed between Southend, Essex, and Lyme Regis, Dorset. No. 2, the Bristol district, Com. C. Laprimaudaye, R.N. This district comprises the West of England, and the whole of Wales, and extends from Sidmouth, South Devon, to Rhyl, Flintshire, the life-boats being 70 in number. No. 3, the Dublin district, Lieut. H. T. G. Tipping, R.N. The lifeboats contained in this district are 48 in number, and they comprise those on the north-west coast of England and the whole of the Irish coast. No. 4, the Edinburgh district, Lieut. H. A. Monteith, R.N. This officer has under his charge 53 lifeboats, viz., those in Northumberland and Scotland. No. 5, the Hull district, Com. St. Vincent Nepean, R.N. This district embraces the east and north-east coast of England, from Clacton-on-Sea, Essex, to Whitburn, county Durham, and it contains 64 lifeboats. By this arrangement every lifeboat station will be more frequently visited and thoroughly inspected. From the last official returns, the number of shipwrecks in a year on our shores amounted to 4,436, accompanied by the loss of 892 lives. The services of the lifeboats of the Institution during each month of the year were as follows:—January, 170 lives saved; February, 81; March, 78; April, 46; May, June, and July, 35; August, 47; September, 60; October, 6; November, 58; and December, 56. Total lives saved 637, in addition to 21 vessels, the number of lifeboat launches on service amounting to 206. In addition to the lifeboat services recorded above, 218 lives were saved from shipwreck by shore boats and other means, making a total of 855 lives preserved in 1879, for which honorary or pecuniary rewards were made by the Institution. Attention is drawn to the number of lives thus saved and reported every year, proving the absolute necessity in a great maritime country like ours of a national institution for the preservation of life from shipwreck. Hundreds of lives are saved every year by means of the rocket apparatus belonging to the Board of Trade, and worked so efficiently by the Coastguard and the rocket volunteer brigades, and by ships' boats and other means. The number of lives saved during the 56 years from the establishment of the institution to the end of the year 1879, either by lifeboats or by special exertions for which it has granted rewards, is 26,906, as clearly recorded in each successive year, commencing in 1824 and ending in 1879. The Institution has just issued a green-book containing full instructions on the management of a lifeboat station. The expenditure of the Institution last year was £36,546, against receipts, including dividends and interest, of £30,125. For more than 30 years its committee have had the satisfaction, year after year, to report that the sphere of operations of the Institution was extending, and that, in proportion to that extension, the support of the public had liberally corresponded. Happily, they are in a position to renew that statement this year.

On Saturday evening the Duke of Edinburgh gave a dinner-party on board the Lively. Amongst those present were:—Sir Valentine Blake, Mr. Pierce Joyce, D.L., Capt. O'Hara, D.L., Professor Townsend, Dr. Moffett, Henry S. Persse, Col. Bagot, and Capt. Gardiner. The Duke has become very popular in Galway, and has expressed himself well pleased with his loyal reception. An interesting anecdote is told of his visit to the islands of Arran, where, while on the island of Inishmore distributing the relief, the wife of one of the islanders gave birth to a daughter. On being informed of the event, the Duke sent Dr. Drew, the medical officer of the Lively, to visit the woman and child. He requested that the young stranger should be named Marie, after the Duchess of Edinburgh, and sent a cheque for a handsome sum to the Rev. Father Concannon, P.P. of the island, to provide necessaries and comforts for mother and child.—Morning Post.

It is stated by the Globe that the Moscow Cruiser Committee have laid before the Cesarewitch several proposals respecting a further development of the cruiser fleet. One of these is that the Government should lend the committee 10,000,000 roubles, without interest, to enable it to purchase several more steamers, establish a regular naval station in the Pacific, and effect in every respect as regards steam-boat communication in the Pacific what the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company has done for the Russian trade in the Black Sea and Mediterranean. In the event of this assistance from the Government being refused, the committee propose that a subsidised Pacific Steam Navigation company should be instituted, and affiliated with the Moscow Cruiser Association. In this case the entire commercial affairs of the Moscow committee would be handed over to the company, and the committee would only take an active interest in their steamers in the event of a war. Both fleets and steamers, however, would be mainly intended for cruiser operations, and on the outbreak of hostilities the steamers of the subsidised companies would pass under the management of the Moscow committee.

It seems that the Admiralty, mindful of the charge brought against the former Administration of leaving behind them a fleet of dummies and paper ships, have now decided to sell out of the Service three ships which have been rotting in reserve, "unappropriated." It has long been wondered what would become of our obsolete ironclads, and now a beginning of the end is to be made, by offering the smallest of them for sale. The Enterprise was launched at Deptford in 1864, and was engined by Ravenhill, the cost of hull and machinery being £60,000. But in less than ten years she was worn out, her last commission having terminated in August, 1871, and since that time she has been waiting for the sentence of death. The Pallas was launched at Woolwich a year after the Enterprise, and was engined by Humphrys and Tennant, the cost of her hull and machinery being just £200,000. The last seven years of her life were spent in the Mediterranean, on which station she remained from 1872 until she came home to pay off last July. But although she was kept going, and was patched up at Malta at considerable expense, she was quite inefficient for a long time before she was spared from the station, for while England was making a naval parade in the vicinity of Constantinople she was of some service, inasmuch as she did look like an ironclad, although she was unfit for work. The Research, which was another dummy in the Mediterranean, on which station she was employed for eight years, having left England in July, 1871, and returned in July, 1879, was built at Pembroke, and launched in 1863. She was engined by Watt, and her cost of hull and machinery was rather over £65,000. Judging by these three vessels, it would appear that the life of an ironclad for really good work cannot be reckoned on as more than ten years.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The prospectus of the Clogwyn-y-Gwin Slate Quarry Company, Limited, appears to offer a sound investment. The quality of the slate is reported to be unsurpassed, and its colour and cleave excellent. The brook which runs through the property renders steam machinery unnecessary, and the North Wales Narrow-Gauge Railway will have reached the quarry by the end of April, affording ready means of access to the shipping port.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

The Army.

1st King's Dragoon Guards. The Globe says:—"The latest reports from Sir Garnet Wolseley as to the state of affairs at the Cape are more reassuring, and should nothing unforeseen arise, the King's Dragoon Guards will probably be withdrawn and sent to India in the autumn."

3rd Dragoon Guards. Capt. W. C. J. Campbell, formerly of the regiment, died at Hastings on the 16th inst., aged 72 years.

2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys), at Dundalk, have been placed under orders to proceed to Dublin, to relieve the Queen's Bays.

5th Lancers. There is one point in which, if the Englishman is rightly informed, the action taken against Gen. Massy is open to obvious criticism. Our contemporary hears that not only was he removed from his command without having been first called upon for any explanation of his conduct, but the decision which resulted in his removal was arrived at by the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of India as the result of correspondence and deliberations carried on entirely without his knowledge. In short, we are led to infer that Gen. Massy received the order removing him before he was even aware that his conduct was called in question. Gen. Massy has with him the sympathy and admiration of the Army in Afghanistan, by whom he is styled the "Saviour of Sherpur." A correspondent writes to the Bombay Gazette regarding Massy's arrival at Peshawur:—"Immense sympathy is expressed and felt for him. His new title, the 'Saviour of Sherpur,' given to him by the Army at Cabul, had preceded him by some weeks. The voice of the Army, in fact, not only entirely exonerates him from blame, but loads him with praises. Opinions in news-rooms I listen to every day, and they are certainly unanimous. Officers from the front declare that Massy, with a soldier's instinct, realised the frightful damage with which the unexpected army of Mahommed Jan threatened Sherpur, and that he was obliged to fight to save the cantonments, inasmuch as he knew the sound of his guns would certainly arrest Macpherson's advance to Argandeh, and draw him back to the Chardeh Valley. They say this was the only means by which the cantonment could be saved, for, if Massy had retreated, the enemy in force would have pursued him into Sherpur, and there, in the absence of all three brigades, there would have been a massacre of all our sick and wounded before which Isandlwana would have paled. As to the minor points, men say that Massy did not leave the Ghazni road, as his original starting-point, Killa Anshai, was more than two miles off the road; and further, that Gen. Roberts, a distant spectator, ordered the charge of Lancers before the guns had stuck at all, and when Massy was busy in front under a heavy fire. Men here are enthusiastic about Massy's gallantry, and say Gen. Roberts never intended to compass his recall, and sympathises with him."

9th Lancers. Capt. Shearburn has been appointed to the depôt at Canterbury, in place of Capt. Apperley.

17th Lancers. Capt. Alexander is about to retire from the Service, and has arrived in England from India to make the necessary arrangements.

3rd Buffs. Mr. W. S. Cooper, late lieut., died at Hill Morton Paddox, Rugby, on the 19th inst., of congestion of the lungs, at the age of 37.

7th Fusiliers. An exchange has been sanctioned between Capts. Keyser and Daly, Capt. Keyser joining the 2nd and Capt. Daly the 1st Batn. Lieut. Woolley, 2nd Batn., a probationer, officiating squadron-officer, 16th Bengal Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal Staff Corps, with effect from Sept. 11, 1878. A telegram, dated Constantinople, April 15, says:—"Osman Pasha, the Minister of War, has dismissed Col. Coope from his command in the gendarmerie, in consequence of his refusal to proceed to Erzeroum. Col. Coope gave as the reason of his refusal that he was without money, and he had not received any pay for the last three months. Sir Henry Layard, the British Ambassador, has addressed remonstrances to the Porte on the subject." Col. Coope was formerly a Capt. in the 7th.

9th Regiment. When we heard from Cabul on the 25th ult., the 2nd Batn. was ordered to go under canvas with Gen. Gough's head-quarters at Siah Sung. The Lahore paper thinks that "His Excellency the Viceroy might do worse than send for 'Turkoman Butler,' and give him another roving commission to the Oxus territories. Capt. Butler may or may not have behaved rather indiscreetly during his last expedition, but even if he did, that would matter little in the present position of affairs; for there would no longer be any object in keeping Capt. Butler's botanising travels secret, even from the Muscovites, and it is a fact that the gallant officer was a great favourite with the chiefs whom he visited. He won their confidence much less by reason of the cheap-jack watches which he brought to them as presents, than of his genial manner, and the pains he took to coach them up in fortification, and all the other means of resisting, if not thrashing, the Russians, whom they both abhorred. If Capt. Butler has been the offender which the Government would make him out to be, why, then, in another trip to the Persian frontier he might possibly meet the just rewards of his misdeeds. If, on the other hand, and as we believe it to have been the case, he has been scurvily treated, and his mistakes exaggerated, the trip might afford Capt. Butler an opportunity of re-establishing his reputation with the public. We now see how very fully his forecast of events in the Turkoman country has been justified by the results. In opposition to the ordinary notions on the subject, he showed that the Turkoman tribes possessed a very considerable element of cohesion. And he maintained that a Russian reverse would forthwith be followed by something in the nature of a Turkoman anti-Russian federation of tribes; and that if this took place, General Kauffmann would have much harder work to go through than he possibly bargained for. Joint action began shortly after the reverse at Geok Tepe; and our readers may recollect that the telegraph lately brought the report that the Khan of Merv was taking steps to oppose the threatened invasion of his territories." Qrmr. Reeves, 2nd Batn., is about to be appointed qrmr. of the 2nd Norfolk Militia.

15th Regiment. An exchange has been sanctioned between Capts. Nagle and Dundas, Capt. Nagle joining the 1st Batn. at home, and Capt. Dundas taking his place with the 2nd Batn. in India.

16th Regiment. A correspondent, writing from the 2nd Batn., at Cannanore, says:—"Major Wetherell has proceeded home on six months' leave. Major Cholmeley has been ordered to rejoin head-quarters at Cannanore, from detachment duty at Fort St. George. Capt. Wilmot rejoins head-quarters from the convalescent depôt, Wellington. Capt. Harden and Lieut. Cowper Coles have been detailed for a year's duty at Wellington." Head-quarters and four companies are at Cannanore, two companies at Fort St. George, one company at Calicut, under Capt. Riddell, and one at Malliapoorum, under Local Major Shanly. Lieut. Lamb, a probationer, officiating wing-officer, 24th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from March 22, 1879.

17th Regiment. An exchange has been sanctioned between Capts. Webb and Anderson, Capt. Webb joining the 2nd and Capt. Anderson the 1st Batn.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Cunningham, 1st Batn., has been ordered from the Curragh to Carrick-on-Shannon, to act as adjutant of the Leitrim Rifles, till further orders.

23rd Fusiliers. Col. Mostyn, having been appointed to the command of the Brigade Depôt at Wrexham, took leave of the officers of the 2nd Batn. at Devonport last week, at a dinner given in his honour. On Tuesday he proceeded to the Millbay railway station, accompanied by the regiment, headed by its band, and on parting received an ovation, testifying unmistakably to the respect in which he was held. The non-commissioned officers of the regiment spontaneously unharnessed the horses of the carriage, and drew it into the station, amid hearty cheers.

24th Regiment. The remains of Lieut. Anstey have just been removed from Southampton for interment at Woking. The deceased fell at Isandhlwana, and his body was recovered the following September by his brother.

33rd Regiment. Lieut. Lushington, a probationer, officiating wing-officer, 6th Hyderabad Infantry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C. from Feb. 7, 1879.

35th Regiment. It appears from the Malta Times that the regiment has been rather fortunate in the second annual rifle meeting, which took place at Malta on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 5th inst., taking off two out of the three cups which were among the prizes, the Valletta Cup being won by Lieut. Donne, with 46 points out of a possible 50, at 500 yards, and the Champion Cup by Pymr.-Serjt. Currie, with 44 points out of a possible 50, at 800 yards; also the field firing, at 400 yards, in which, having tied the 20th Regt., fired off and were victorious by a number of hits. In the inter-regimental match they took third place, thereby showing an improvement on last year's competition.

39th Regiment. Lieut. Farrer is ordered home from India to join the depôt.

42nd Highlanders. Capt. Walker will complete his five years' service as adjt. of the 2nd Surrey R.V., on the 8th prox.

48th Regiment. Capt. Sedley is about to retire on pension, having been appointed Warden of Christ's Hospital.

50th Regiment. The New Zealand papers announce the death of Major W. Wily, late of the regiment, and staff officer of pensioners for the South Wales district, as having taken place on Feb. 6, at the Falls, Auckland. The deceased, who had risen from the ranks, distinguished himself as a subaltern during the Sutlej campaign in 1845-46. At the battle of Sobraon, and during the hottest part of the engagement, he succeeded to the command of the regiment, and brought it out of action; his gallantry in the hand-to-hand conflict with the enemy attracting and calling forth the marked and written approbation of Sir Harry Smith and Brigdr. Penny. Major Wily was mentioned by Lord Gough in the Sobraon despatches "as one worthy of reward for meritorious conduct in action with the enemy." He retired from the regiment in 1851, and after serving on the pension staff in Canada and in South Wales, sold out of the Army to settle in New Zealand, where he held a commission in the colonial militia.

54th Regiment. Lieut. Yeilding, a probationer, officiating wing-officer, 5th Goorkhas, is about to be admitted to the Bengal Staff Corps, from Feb. 21, 1879.

57th Regiment. The Standard says:—"Col. Clarke, C.B., 57th Regt., who was strongly recommended by Sir Garnet Wolseley, has refused the appointment of Commandant-General of the Local Forces at the Cape, preferring to retain his command of his regiment, in which position he has three years to run." On Thursday afternoon, by special licence, at St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, was solemnised the marriage of Capt. Lord Gifford, V.C., and Miss S. C. Street, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. J. A. Street, C.B. The wedding party assembled at the church at half-past two o'clock, the bridegroom arriving early, accompanied by Capt. C. W. Hume (late Rifle Brigade), and Capt. Wyndham, 83rd Foot, who acted as groomsmen. Lord and Lady Fitzhardinge, Dowager Lady Fitzhardinge, and many other friends, on leaving the church, proceeded to the Grosvenor Hotel, Belgravia, where Gen. and Mrs. Street entertained about 150 guests. Shortly before five o'clock Lord Gifford and his bride started for Cranford House, Lord Fitzhardinge's residence, near Hounslow.

Army and Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1880.

WHEN a Ministry goes out of office, it is usual, for the sake of public business, for the head of departments to leave, for the guidance of their successors, memoranda on the state of important questions, and recommendations or suggestions on abstract and on personal matters. It would be interesting if one could get at Colonel Stanley's recommendations to the new War Minister, whoever he may be, respecting Lord Airey's Report, the Army Reserve, and many other subjects which were just handled and laid aside. The last official reference to Lord Airey's Report in Parliament treated it as non-avenu, but every one knows pretty well what the recommendations are, and so far as the intentions of the incoming Government may be inferred from their words, we suppose the Report may be regarded as waste-paper. As to the Reserve, from which so much is expected, and for which, we must add, so much has been sacrificed, Colonel Stanley's last admission of its unsatisfactory state was accompanied by a promise that measures would be taken to improve its condition and efficiency, but we do not know the nature of those measures, or how far, if worked out at all, they will gain the approval of the new Minister. Colonel Stanley's administration of the War Office was not remarkable for any violent or even considerable changes, and as we think many changes are not reforms, we ought to be thankful, perhaps, that the temptation to set his mark on the Army, which seems to beset the Secretary of State for War in every Ministry, was resisted by him so successfully; but he certainly is to be credited with some useful measures, and the majority of the members of the Medical Department, at all events, have reason to feel grateful to the man who removed some of their real grievances. His official memory, however, must hang under the cloud of want of backbone in more than one difficulty, and especially in the debate on the Army Discipline Act, in which he yielded to the Irish Obstructionists, and deprived officers of the most effectual means of preventing and punishing military crime among soldiers in the field, when they are not before the enemy. An instance of a very different sort of spirit is to be placed to the other side of his account, when Sir G. Wolseley was going to the Cape. It may be remembered that Sir Garnet Wolseley had come over from Cyprus to attend the Airey Commission, and that a Cabinet Council decided to send him out to supersede Lord Chelmsford. Soon after the news of the catastrophe at Isandlhwana had unnerved the authorities, it was proposed to send out Sir Garnet to Zululand; but strenuous opposition in certain influential quarters defeated the project. Then came the months of preparation, which looked like inaction, and of caution, which looked like "funk," and the Ministry, disgusted and alarmed, pounced on Sir Garnet as their best man, and dispatched him to relieve Lord Chelmsford of his Military functions, and Sir Bartle Frere and Sir H. Bulwer of their respective administrative responsibility. It was necessary for Sir Garnet Wolseley to sail at once, and he set to work and drew up a list of a very numerous personal Staff, and of officers for special service, whom he desired to take with him. With this list he repaired to the Horse Guards; but it was the Derby week, and the day on which Sir Garnet made his way to Pall Mall was the Derby Day. "Where is the Duke?" "His Royal Highness is gone to the Derby." "I want to see Sir Charles Ellice." "The Adjutant-General is at the races." "Well, then, I wish to see Sir A. Horsford;" "The Military Secretary is gone with the Commander-in-Chief." "Where is Sir D. Lysons?" "He is at Aldershot." What was to be done? Time pressed. Next night the vessel sailed from Dartmouth, and passages must be arranged for, and kits prepared,—all in a few hours. So Sir Garnet Wolseley sought out the Secretary of State for War, list in hand, and obtained his signature to an order for their nomination to the new South African Staff, and when the Duke came back to town he was petrified at finding the whole business settled, cut and dry, without his participation in it; nay, in some instances, in direct opposition to his wishes, for there were officers named for appointment whom it was well known the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief would not have allowed to go out if he had had his way. What will happen presently it is not very easy to forecast, but the Army may be prepared for changes of considerable magnitude.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, we regret to learn, is suffering from a severe attack of gout, which confines him to his house, and prevents him from transacting business and seeing his friends.

A vacancy will be created on the List of Queen's Aides-de-Camp by the retirement of Colonel W. J. E. Grant, C.B., Royal Artillery, Colonel H. A. Welman, half-pay, late of a depôt battalion, now employed as Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Eastern District, being placed on the paid Establishment. Colonel Welman was gazetted Aide-de-Camp, December 30, 1876.

Some six or eight retirements may be anticipated shortly among the senior veterinary-surgeons, owing to the disinclination which is shown by the senior members of the department to fall in with the requirements as regards service in India. Complaints will doubtless be made of hard treatment, but it must be admitted that those juniors have really a grievance who are compelled to proceed on service after having spent but two and a half years at home, whilst seniors who have enjoyed their ease at home stations for twenty and twenty-five years persistently refuse to believe in the existence of such a thing as a roster.

Captain E. Wood, R.E., succeeds Captain C. M. Watson, R.E., as Aide-de-Camp to the Inspector-General of Fortifications.

We trust the report may prove true which certain of the evening papers published the other evening, that Colonel H. G. Deedes, the Assistant-Under-Secretary of State for War, is to be recommended by Colonel Stanley for a Companionship of the Bath. Colonel Deedes has the strongest possible claims upon the outgoing Government, he having served it now for six years, and served it well, too. The Army admits that the Conservatives have been an undoubted success at the War Office; and certainly they leave the Military Service—at any rate, so far as the officers are concerned—in a very different state to what they were when they took over the reins. But how much of their success as military legislators is due to Colonel Deedes, only those behind the scenes can form any idea, and it would be ungracious were Colonel Deedes' services to be passed over unacknowledged, when rewards are being reserved for officials in other departments who have not done more, if they have done as much as he has, to promote the interests of the retiring Ministers. It is not too much to say that a better and more popular official never held a position in Pall Mall, and it would be gratifying to the Army at large to find zeal rewarded, in the case of one whose aim it would seem to be as unofficial as possible, and always ready to get a grievance redressed, and do a kind turn for those who solicit his advice or assistance.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel C. F. Clery, half-pay, late 32nd Regiment, is, we understand, to receive an offer of qualifying Staff employment, in recognition of his services in Zululand. Colonel Clery threw up an appointment in order to proceed to the Cape.

Lieutenant M. W. Skinner, Royal Engineers, has been offered and has accepted the appointment of Superintendent of Public Works under the Government of Barbadoes.

We have reason to believe that the forthcoming retirements in the Royal Regiment of Artillery will include Major-Generals J. W. Domville, H. P. Goodenough, C. W. Younghusband, C.B., A. Thompson-E. H. Fisher, and J. R. Gibbon, C.B.; Colonels C. T. Du Plat, A. C. Hawkins, C.B., W. J. E. Grant, C.B., and G. A. Wilkinson, and four other names—probably in the Lieutenant-Colonels' list—yet to be approved. As we have already announced, they will be gazetted by the middle of next month.

So attenuated is the condition of the 107th Regiment at Guernsey and Alderney, that it is with difficulty it finds sentries and guards. As its linked battalion is at Malta and on a peace establishment, Army reformers would do well to turn their attention to its state when Parliament reassembles.

The death of Lieutenant-General Armstrong will, we hope, again raise the question as to the insufficiency of the Staff at Head-quarters. It has long been felt by those who have business transactions with the Horse Guards that the number of officers provided to carry out the duties of the several departments is altogether inadequate, and that this is the cause of the great, and what would appear to be quite unnecessary, delays which are occasioned in the despatch of official business. That the Adjutant-General's Department is under-officered there can be no doubt.

Brevet Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., 19th Hussars, has been selected for the appointment of commandant of the Yeomanry School at Aldershot, vice Captain C. W. B. Bell, 8th Hussars, transferred to the Staff College as Professor of Hindustani.

Major-General R. P. Radcliffe completes his period of service as Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Royal Artillery on the 1st prox., but no date is fixed for his retirement, as all depends upon when his successor, Colonel Arbuthnot, now commanding a Brigade in Afghanistan, arrives in England. General Radcliffe's retirement will be greatly regretted throughout the regiment of Artillery, for no man could have carried on the duties of his important position more conscientiously than he has done during the five years he has held office at the Horse Guards, and it reflects no little credit upon him that he should have been able to do what he has, considering how defective the organisation of our Artillery is.

An entire change will take place amongst the Aides-de-Camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, consequent upon the withdrawal of the Duke of Marlborough from Dublin Castle, on the resignation of the Ministry.

The rivulet of appointments to the Order of St. Michael and St. George, which was foretold some time ago, has flowed through the Gazette, and has watered some of the South Africanders who had been left stranded on the bank of expectancy. Colonel Lanyon, already a Companion of the Bath for good services elsewhere, becomes Sir Owen Lanyon, K.C.M.G., for his civil and military services in Griqualand West and the Transvaal. Colonel Baker Russell, also a C.B. for former work in the field, becomes Sir Baker Russell, K.C.M.G., for his share in the attack on Sekukuni's Mountain. Some time ago, when a gallant officer, whose friends very justly thought he was not sufficiently rewarded with the offer of the C.M.G., was told he would get nothing else, it was observed that the C.M.G. was an "inferior" Order, and the observation caused great umbrage in the highest quarter. The person who made it was informed that it was thought to be very wrong to designate an Order with which the Queen intended to reward distinguished officers by such an adjective; but nevertheless, the M.G. will, to the end of time, be considered "inferior" to the Bath, and is so considered at present. It is not easy to acquit of a certain amount of caprice and arbitrariness of decision the distribution of the M.G. and Bath respectively, and the mode in which the distinctions of service are made; but it seems to be now hardening into a rule that when a C.B is to be further rewarded, he is not to expect a K.C.B. if his services have been in a colony or in British possessions abroad; and that the K.C.M.G. is a tertium quid which ought to satisfy him—or with which, at least, he must rest contented.

Colonel J. Fulton, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, becomes major-general, vice Major-General E. W. E. Walker, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, deceased, and a step will, at the same time, be given to the senior major and captain in the Army.

We are requested to state that, in consequence of the destruction by fire of the premises occupied by Messrs. Roworth and Sons, the printers of the monthly Army List, it will be impossible to issue that publication for the ensuing month, the type of the work and all the material necessary for its construction having been destroyed.

General the Right Hon. Sir E. Lugard, G.C.B., being about to retire from the Army Purchase Commission as paid Chief Commissioner, has consented to continue the performance of the duties without salary.

The Madras Army has suffered a considerable loss lately in Captain R. H. Fawcett, 33rd Regiment, who has been obliged to take leave to England, owing to ill-health. Captain Fawcett was for some time employed on special service at Indian Head-quarters, and has been acting for the last year as a Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General on the Madras Establishment. He is an officer of exceptional ability, and one who has enjoyed most thoroughly the confidence of the highest authorities in India, and he can ill be spared at a time when there are so many pressing questions awaiting settlement which closely affect the future well-being of both the British and local forces in India.

Lieutenant-Colonel Eardley Maitland, R.A., has been appointed Superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories, vice Major-General C. W. Younghusband, C.B., who is about to retire, after having had the post since the 1st of August, 1875. Colonel Maitland was for five years Assistant-Superintendent of the Department.

Major G. C. Strahan, C.M.G., late Royal Artillery, Governor of the Windward Islands, and for some time Governor of the West African Settlements, has been appointed Governor of Tasmania.

We understand the authorities are still in labour over the vacant appointment of Colonel of Horse Artillery at Bengalore. It is probable, as we anticipated, the recent Circular laying down a roster of seniority for foreign service will be set aside, and a selection made with the well-known desire to further the interests of the country as characteristic of our military administration.

We have often had opportunity of directing attention to the various criticisms by foreign officers on the state and efficiency of our Army. Some of them have been proved to be the outpourings of captious critics, others the expositions of competent censors, well-meaning, if severe, and we have answered them according to their deserts. But it is not often that we have to reply to indiscreet friends. It appears that the London correspondent of the Vienna Presse was carried away by a very lively imagination when, in discussing the strength of England as a Military Power, he represents her as "the first Power of the world, before which all others have to humble themselves, for Great Britain can bring into the field more than eight hundred ships and several millions of soldiers!" According to our friend, "we can draw millions of the best soldiers in the world from India; with our Navy we could take them and employ them anywhere, even in our northern climes." No wonder that such exaggerated statements excite some merriment on the Continent. Herr Spiridion Gopcevicz takes the trouble, in the columns of the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, of exposing the fallacies to which the correspondent in question gives expression. Herr Gopcevicz is a military critic of no mean ability, who knows his subject both theoretically and practically, and on that account any observations he may make on such a subject are deserving of every attention. His remarks ought to be read by everybody taking an interest in the Service. As to our friend, he would have done much better to have held his peace, and the next time he takes up the cudgels in our behalf, we would advise him to consult more accurate sources of information than he appears to have made use of in this instance.

Alberta, Staff Com. Balliston, which accompanied the Queen in the Victoria and Albert to Queenborough from Flushing, has returned to Portsmouth.

Alexandra, Capt. Lord Walter Kerr, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., is on a cruise, visiting Avlono, Corfu, and Zante. Letters for the Alexandra should be sent to Malta.

Antelope, Lieut.-Com. the Hon. Walter Hylton Jolliffe, left Constantinople on Saturday, April 10, for Chanak, arriving there early the following morning, where she was shortly after joined by H.M.S. Helicon, carrying the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., who left by the Antelope the same day for Constantinople, arriving on Monday, 12th, remained until Thursday, 15th, when he again left in the Antelope, to rejoin Helicon at Chanak, and in that vessel proceeds to Mitylene, Rhodes, Cyprus, &c., fetching Malta the first week in May. Sir Beauchamp Seymour was the guest of Sir Henry Layard during his stay at Constantinople.

A Brig.; Dublin for Avonmouth on 10th prox., for B Baty. H Brig.; Avonmouth for Dublin on the 13th, with B Baty. K Brig.; and Dublin for Portsmouth on 17th, with B Baty. G Brig.

Atalanta, Capt. F. Stirling, is still being searched for by the Channel Squadron. We are requested to publish the following:—"To prevent confusion of names, it may be mentioned that the steamship Atalanta, belonging to Messrs. Smith, Sundius, and Co., is expected to arrive in the Channel very shortly, having passed Gibraltar on the 16th inst." The following has been issued by the Admiralty:—"Information having been given that a boat was washed ashore on Feb. 22 near Vianna de Castello, Portugal, having the appearance of belonging to a man-of-war, telegraphic inquiries have been made, and a report has been received from her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon stating that the words 'S.s. Navarino' were deciphered on the fragments of the boat referred to." The conviction grows stronger that no tidings relative to the Atalanta may be expected from the Azores. The Avon, Com. Keppel, which left Fayal on the 4th inst., reports that the whalers she spoke described the weather experienced during February, at which time the Atalanta would be approaching the Azores, had been worse than they ever recollected. The Avon saw in the vicinity of the Azores a large quantity of timber, but her officers do not think that it was likely to be that of the Atalanta. Admiral Sullivan writes to the Times to correct an erroneous impression respecting the Atalanta. He says:—"The Atalanta has been called 'a sister-ship to the Eurydice,' but the truth is they were totally different' except as to tonnage and armament. The Juno (Atalanta) was one of the well-known Vestal class of Sir W. Symonds, —a class known to be the broadest and shortest ships for the frigate class that were ever built; while the Eurydice was long and narrow in comparison. Like the sloop class of Sir W. Symonds, his small frigates were the stiffest vessels under a press of sail we ever possessed; so much so that he would not at first allow them more than five tons of ballast, instead of from 30 to 60 tons, which old class vessels of equal size would have had. Their stiffness prevented this being dangerous, except when the water and provisions were nearly expended, in which case the tanks had to be filled with salt water. Two or three of the brigs, and in one instance one of the small frigates, were thrown on their broadsides in a heavy sea when flying light, but righted again; and until sailing ships were nearly obsolete in the Service, the small frigate class were such favourities, both as sea-boats and for their wonderful sailing qualities, that a young captain who got one of them was considered most fortunate. Not one of them was ever lost, and additional ballast in them and the sloop class made them as safe ships as the navy of any nation possessed. In one of the brigs, in which I had increased the five tons of ballast to 35 tons, I spent four years on surveying duties south of the River Plate, more than half of the time being near the Falkland Islands. On one occasion, besides the usual heavy weather of that region, we encountered off the River Plate the celebrated storm in which her Majesty's ship Gorgon went on shore. Yet neither then nor at any time du ing the four years did she receive the slightest damage, even of hammock-netting or head-rail, and not a single defect of hull was reported either year to the senior officer, except in course of time a necessary caulking. I only mention these facts to show that in choosing a ship of that class as a training-ship, the Admiralty could not possibly have made a safer choice; and as it is stated that she had a full amount of ballast and reduced masts, she would be in all human probability as safe as any ship afloat, even if her water and provisions were nearly out. The one danger that no human care can guard against is the floating wrecks or dismasted hulls of forsaken ships, which could not be seen on dark nights, and if struck by a ship going fast the collision might be fatal."

Avon, 4, gun-vessel, Com. L. C. Keppel, arrived at Portsmouth on Sunday, from the south-east coast of America, to pay off. The Avon was commissioned at Portsmouth on the 1st of June, 1876.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, having on board Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, is expected at Spithead at the end of this month. She sailed from Bermuda on April 13.

Belleisle, Capt. Thomas Barnardiston, who was on Wednesday last appointed to succeed Rear-Admiral Phillimore, entered the Navy in February, 1847, and after serving off Lisbon and in the Mediterranean, and at the Cape of Good Hope, joined the Winchester, 50, and served with the boats in the River Irrawaddy during the Burmese war (medal), and was with Capt. Loch when he and many others were killed in action near Donabew upon the stronghold of a robber chief (gazetted), Feb. 4, 1853. He next served in the Arrogant, 46, in the Baltic (medal), where he witnessed the fall of Bomarsund. He was promoted to lieutenant, Feb. 3, 1855, and during the next two years was employed again in the Baltic and on the Mediterranean and home stations. He commanded a rocket boat at the bombardment of Sweaborg, in August, 1855, and was again gazetted. He served on the south-east coast of America from November, 1857, until advanced to commander, June 24, 1862; was employed at Sheerness Naval Barracks from February, 1863, to January, 1864, and from the last-named date until September, 1866, was successively inspecting officer in the Coastguard service at Hastings and Harwich. He served in the Lord Clyde, 23, with the Channel Squadron from September, 1866, to January, 1867, and from June 8, 1867, until posted, Aug. 14, 1868, commanded the Nymphe, 4, in the East Indies. He was next appointed, Sept. 24, 1873, to the command of the Sphinx, 5, on the North American and West Indies station, in succession to Capt. (now Rear-Admiral) Phillimore, who applied to the Admiralty to be superseded, and, after visiting the North Atlantic, Bermuda, Kingston, Port Royal, Halifax, &c., returned with her to England, and was paid off September, 1874. He afterwards commanded the Rover, 18, in the West Indies and North America, from July 2, 1875, until April, 1879. This ship is ordered from Kingston about May 8, to refit at Devonport.

Bellerophon. Orders for her repair have been suspended. Her defects are of a seriously extensive character, and are estimated to cost over £60,000 to make good. Considering the obsolete class to which she belongs, it is doubtful if any further expense will be incurred in her repair.

Comus, Capt. J. W. East, has searched the islands of St. Paul, Kerguelen, and the Crozets for the shipwrecked crews who were said to have found refuge there, but the search has been totally without success. It was hoped that the crew of the Liverpool ship Knowsley Hall would have been found on Kerguelen Island.

Cruiser, Com. F. A. Wetherall, which is on a cruise between Sicily and Corfu, will return to Malta on May 8.

Fawn, Capt. William J. L. Wharton, surveying vessel, arrived at Constantinople on Thursday, April 15, and after coaling, giving leave, &c., would, in about 10 days' time, resume her surveying in the Dardanelles.

Hecla, Capt. Morgan Singer, is being prepared at Portsmouth for some further torpedo practice, probably at Bantry Bay.

Iris. Capt. Edward Hobart Seymour, who is appointed to the command of this ship, entered the Navy in 1853, and served as mate in the Mersey, 40, and Impérieuse, 51, with the Channel Squadron, and in China from March, 1859, until promoted to lieutenant, Feb. 11, 1860. As lieutenant he served in the Chesapeake, 51; Waterman, tender to the Princess Charlotte; and Impérieuse, 51, all on the China station, from March, 1860, until 1863; and from March in that year until promoted to commander, March 5, 1866, was flag-lieutenant to Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, G.C.B., commander-in-chief at Portsmouth. He was inspecting officer in the Coastguard service at Queenstown and Plymouth from Jan. 11, 1868, until June 25, 1869; and from the latter date until June 20, 1870, commanded the Growler, 4, gun-vessel, on the Cape of Good Hope and West Coast of Africa station. His next appointment was Jan. 9, 1872, to the command of the Vigilant, despatch vessel, from which, on May 15 following, he was transferred to the Lively, with the Channel Squadron, and remained until posted, Feb. 13, 1873. During the following year he was studying at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, and from Jan., 1876, until March, 1879, commanded the Orontes, training-ship.

Lively, Lieut. C. Le Strange, flying the flag of Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, Superintendent of Naval Reserves, was expected to arrive at Queenstown yesterday.

Malabar, Capt. J. F. Grant, arrived at Portsmouth on the 16th inst. from Bombay. During the voyage, which was favourable, there were 16 deaths and 3 births. Measles having broken out among the families of the troops on board, and a similar disease being prevalent at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley, all families, with the exception of 25, were sent to the New Barracks, Gosport. Some stories lately published respecting the homeward pasage of the Malabar appear to have had no foundation. The lunatic who "jumped overboard, swam two miles after the ship, and was drowned," was not drowned. The ship was steaming 10 or 11 knots an hour at the time the man went overboard. The engines were stopped and reversed instantly, and a boat launched long before the ship had lost her momentum. The behaviour of the crew was very good, and they saved the man, for which all concerned were complimented by Capt. Grant. The statements published regarding the second-class passengers are stated to be as baseless as that respecting the lunatic.

Minotaur, Capt. H. Rawson, flag of Rear-Admiral A W. Hood, C.B., continues in search of the Atalanta.

Northumberland, Capt. H. R. Wratislaw, continues her search for the Atalanta.

Osborne, Com. Lord Charles Beresford, which accompanied the Victoria and Albert to Queenborough last Saturday, has returned to Portsmouth.

Phœnix, Com. Hubert H. Grenfell, was commissioned at Devonport on the 20th inst., for service on the North American and West Indies station.

Rapid, Capt. C. C. P. FitzGerald, remains at Constantinople as senior officer, but expects to be relieved shortly. Com. William Frederick Stanley Mann, who is appointed to the command of this ship, served as acting sub-lieutenant in the Victoria, 102, in the Mediterranean, from October, 1865, until May, 1867, when he removed into the Caledonia, 30, and remained until 1868. On April 1 of the same year he was appointed to the Prince Consort, 24, fitting at Devonport for the Mediterranean, from which ship he was paid off in October, 1871. In February, 1872, he was appointed additional of the Excellent, from which ship, in July, 1873, he was transferred to the Amethyst, 14, fitting at Devonport for the West Coast of Africa. While attached to the Amethyst, he was thus spoken of by Comdre. W. N. W. Hewett, in his despatch from Cape Coast, March 3, 1874:—"Capt. Hunt Grubbe informs me that the services of Lieut. William F. S. Mann, who acted as adjutant to the brigade, were most valuable. This officer bears a reputation of being a smart and energetic officer." He was afterwards appointed, June 11 1874, to the Osborne, Royal yacht, from which he was promoted to commander May 15, 1876, and was subsequently employed, from Aug. 11, 1876, until June 26, 1877, as second captain in the Bellerophon, 15, under the flag of Vice-Admiral Sir A. Cooper Key, in the West Indies and North America.

Rifleman, Com. J. Ingles, will pay off at Chatham on Thursday next.

Salamis, Com. FitzGeorge, which left Gibraltar on the 13th inst. for the Azores, in search of the Atalanta, has not yet made any communication to the Admiralty.

Amusements.

At the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, the re-appearance of Madame Albani has been heartily welcomed. On Tuesday evening the favourite songstress appeared as Gilda in Verdi's opera of "Rigoletto," Madame Scalchi making her first appearance this season as Maddalina. Meyerbeer's grand opera of "Le Prophète," with Signor Gayarré as John of Leyden, and Gounod's "Faust and Marguerite," have been included in the week's programme.

The only novelty has been brought out at the ALHAMBRA, where, on Monday evening, Mr. Farnie's adaptation of "La Fille du Tambour Major," produced at the Folies Dramatiques, Paris, last December, met with a very favourable reception. This is about the hundredth work of the popular composer, and the music is best described as a compound of airs selected from his ninety-nine previous compositions. The melodies, if not strikingly original, are all, however, pleasant to hear, and the story, which has a close affinity to that of the "Daughter of the Regiment," though not worth pursuing in detail, supplies some effective opportunities for musical expression. The period indicated is that of seventy years ago, when the armies of the French Republic were engaged in driving the Austrians out of Italy. The daughter of the Drum-Major is Stella, admirably embodied by Miss Constance Loseby, and the adventures through which she passes, and the various disguises assumed, are in strict accordance with the course of the original plot. Mr. Carleton, a valuable acquisition to the Alhambra company joins, as Stella's lover, Captain Robert in some tuneful duets, which are the best compositions in the opera, and an efficient cast is provided, with Miss Edith Bland as the Vivandière Claudine, Miss Fanny Edwards as the Duchess, and Miss Fanny Leslie as the little Drummer. The main recommendations of the new operatic spectacle to the general public will be found, however, in the brilliancy of the embellishments, which show a command over decorative resources not possessed by any other establishment in the metropolis. The new scenery, by Mr. Albert Callcott, is exceedingly picturesque, and the skirmish with the French vidette at the close of the second act, the spirited tarantella and tambourine dance in the third act, and the grand processional entry of the French army into Milan, which terminates the piece, are brilliant examples of the progress made in the pageantry of the modern stage.

Hardly to be classed under the heading of "amusements" is the performance at the GAIETY, on Wednesday afternoon, of Lillo's old-fashioned and lugubrious tragedy of "George Barnwell." It is announced by Mr. Hollingshead as the first of a series of revivals of a similar kind, but it is to be doubted whether the public will show sufficient interest in these attempts at dramatic resurrectionism to make it worth while often to repeat the experiment.

Mr. Clifford Harrison, the youngest son of the late William Harrison, the once popular tenor, made on Monday night a favourable first appearance as Romeo at NEW SADLERS WELLS THEATRE.

When Whitsuntide arrives the company of the Princess's Theatre will be transferred to the Standard, and the establishment will then be pulled down and rebuilt, to be opened again in the autumn under the management of Mr. Walter Gooch.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purchase and working of the "CLOGWYN-Y-GWIN" SLATE QUARRY, situate in the County of Carnarvon. It is held on a lease for 21 years (renewable) direct from G. W. D. ASSHETON SMITH, Esq., the owner in fee of the renowned Llanberris Slate Quarries.

This Quarry is situate on the north side of the valley of Bettws Garmon, at the base of Snowdon, and about nine miles from the Port of Carnarvon.

The Slate Vein is of very great extent, being some 300 yards in width, encased on each side by granite, and is the well-known "Bangor" Vein. It is of an excellent quality, possessing a good cleavage, and for colour and texture cannot be surpassed. It has been found, since the Report on the other page, that the width is upwards of 200 yards more than stated in the Report.

The Vein is sufficiently opened up to admit of at once putting on bargains for slate-making, and in fact there are some Hundreds of Pounds worth of Slate already on the ground.

The Quarry already opened can be extended the whole width of the Vein, and as it is situate on the slope of the hill, the field is practically inexhaustible, as the vein extends, and is proved to run through the whole estate, which comprises nearly 200 acres, and includes part of Glanrafon Vein (a sister Quarry), as shown in the annexed Plan.

The North Wales Narrow-Gauge Railway System will, when completed, run through the property, and be within 200 yards of the Quarry, and an incline will connect the Quarry with the same. At present there is about one mile of the Railway to be completed, and the Works are in active progress, and will, when finished, connect the Quarry with the Port of Shipment.

There is ample tip-room, a most important matter in the working of a Slate Quarry.

The opening of Galleries for the extension and proper working of the Quarry is now effected.

All motive power can be had, without the aid of steam, as there is an abundant supply of water adjoining the Quarry, for driving planes, saws, and every necessary machinery in the driest seasons.

As before mentioned, the Lease is direct from GEORGE WILLIAM DUFF ASSHETON SMITH, Esq , the owner of one of the finest Quarries in the world, and who has never granted a Lease before (except that of the sister-Quarry which adjoins), and which has very recently been sold for a large sum to residents in the neighbourhood.

The Quarry is held for twenty-one years, renewable on favourable terms. The terms of the present Lease are as follows. For dead or certain rent, £20 per annum; and royalties as follows, viz.:—

Best Slates	2/6	per Ton.
Seconds	2/-	"
Thirds	1/6	"
Slabs	1/6	"
Moss and Drawing Slates	1/-	"

Owing to the comparatively low price of labour, the present is a most opportune time for developing and further opening out the Quarry, in order to meet the rapidly-increasing demand.

As to the sale of the produce of this Quarry, the Directors have no fear, as they have been in communication with some of the leading merchants in Carnarvon, who have expressed their willingness to enter into contracts for the purchase of all the output, as they are so well acquainted with its colour, quality, and marketable value. On a careful estimate, the Directors are satisfied that, with an expenditure of £3,000 to £6,000 of Working Capital, Dividends of not less than £15 to £20 per cent. will be realised.

To prove the high opinion the Vendor has of the ultimate value of the Quarry, he has agreed to take a large portion of the purchase-money in Shares, and to join the Board of Directors.

The price to be paid for the whole of this valuable property is £20,000, of which the Vendor takes £7,000 in cash, £13,000 in Shares fully paid up, which will not rank on Dividend until the general body of Shareholders shall receive Dividend after the rate of Six per Cent. per annum.

A reference to the Reports appended will show the opinions of practical men upon this Quarry, who have from time to time inspected its operations, and carefully observed its development.

The only Contract entered into is that between RICHARD ROGERS WILLIAMS of the one part, and ROBERT BOWMAN TENNENT, on behalf of the Clogwyn-y-Gwin Slate Quarry Company, of the other part, and dated the 3rd of October, 1879.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORTS.

TALYSARN SLATE QUARRIES,
11th January, 1876.

DEAR SIR,—I visited and carefully inspected your Slate Quarry, situate on the north side of the Valley of Bettws Garmon, distance of about nine miles from the shipping port of Carnarvon.

The Slate Vein is here presented in a site highly adapted for economical quarrying operations, while it is of a very great extent, and is also of an excellent quality, and possesses a remarkably good cleavage, with a marketable light blue colour.

Although the depth attained is merely tops, the Slates produced are sound and sonorous, which is rarely the case in any other Quarry in Wales.

The magnitude of the property admits of the formation of an extensive Quarry, inasmuch as the Slate Vein is extending through the property for many hundred yards, with ample tip-room to deposit the rubbish.

The facilities for opening this valuable Slate Vein in galleries, and the advantages for clearing tops without the aid of machinery, such as steam-engines, &c., enhance its value very considerably.

I observe that you have water-power available for driving any kind of machinery.

This Slate property affords advantages for economical operations that are not surpassed by any other in Wales that are within the circle of my knowledge.

The Narrow-Gauge Railway is being brought within 200 yards of the Quarry; consequently, the item of carriage of Slates will be comparatively small.

Looking at the probable mineral wealth of the property, together with all the advantages connected to it, I believe, if a sufficient Capital was raised to develop the Quarry vigorously, and that laid out with a judicious and economical management, that the production of Slates will be such as to yield a profitable return.

I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM DAVIES,
Manager of the Talysarn Slate Quarries, Nantlle.

RICHARD R. WILLIAMS, Esq , Carnarvon.

CLOGWYN-Y-GWIN SLATE QUARRY, RHYD-DDU, NEAR CARNARVON.

I have on several occasions visited and closely inspected Clogwyn-y-Gwin, and every time found better prospects for a good Quarry. The Vein is very pure, of a light-blue colour, excellent cleavage, with very good back joints, and producing, already, Slates better in quality and more in quantity, in proportion to the depth of the Quarry, than any other in Wales. There is also a plentiful supply of water for working machinery. About 200 yards of incline will bring the Quarry into connection with the Narrow Gauge to Carnarvon. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the Clogwyn-y-Gwin Slate Quarry only requires to be developed to turn out very profitable.

WM. ROBERTS.

Penyronsedd Quarry, Nantlle, February 12, 1876.

After an interval of over two years, during which time the Quarry has been opening up, Mr. DAVIES again visits the Quarry, and reports most favourably.

And again, on March 13, 1880, he writes to the Directors:—

GENTLEMEN,—I have nothing to add to my former Reports. As I mentioned to you when you visited the Quarry, on the 16th January, this year, the sum I have named will put it in thorough working order, and I can only endorse my former Reports by saying that you have a most valuable property, and that you should lose no time in completing your works, as the demand for this class of Slate is greatly on the increase.—I remain, Gentlemen, yours respectfully,

WILLIAM DAVIES.

Since the above Reports were obtained, Mr. G. Fitzroy Cole, Assoc. Memb. Inst. of Civil Engineers, of 54 Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster, has lately visited North Wales, and spent some days in visiting the Clogwyn-y-Gwin Slate Quarry, and in making general inquiries. His Report, dated the 14th April, is most favourable and exhaustive, but being of some length, it cannot well be printed with this Prospectus; copies, however, may be obtained on application to the Secretary.

These two old-established Family Hotels, from their especially advantageous position, both overlooking the Thames Embankment, combine light, air, and perfect quiet, although in the centre of London. They are now under one management, and are conducted on the principle of a fixed charge of SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE PER DAY, which includes a good Bedroom, Breakfast of hot and cold meats, Luncheon, Dinner of six courses, and Tea and Coffee in the evening; also the use of large, well-appointed Sitting-rooms, including an ELEGANTLY-APPOINTED DRAWING-ROOM.

These Hotels, containing upwards of 200 Rooms, have been for many years largely patronised by Members of Parliament, the Clergy, and by Military and Naval Officers and their Families, by reason of their central, but retired localities, affording all the comforts and luxuries of high-class Hotels.

J. R. WILLIAMS, Proprietor.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

THE ONLY COD LIVER OIL WHICH PRODUCES THE FULL CURATIVE EFFECTS IN CONSUMPTION and DISEASES of the CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, WASTING DISEASES of CHILDREN, RICKETS, and ALL SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surgeon Army, Professor of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

CHLORODYNE.
THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.
CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, and Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.
CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms
CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, &c.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—CURE FOR INDIGESTION.—Indigestion with torpidity of the liver is the curse of thousands, who spend each day with accumulated sufferings, all of which may be avoided by taking Holloway's Pills according to their accompanying directions. They strengthen and invigorate every organ subservient to digestion. Their action is purifying, healing, and strengthening. They may be safely taken without interfering with ordinary pursuits, or requiring much restriction in diet. They quickly remove noise and giddiness in the head, and dispel low spirits and nervous fears. These balsamic Pills work the cure without debilitating or exhausting the system; on the contrary, they conserve and support the vital principle by substituting pure for impure blood.

PROSPECTUS.

The principal operations of the Company will include loans on the mortgage of land, the purchase, sale, and improvement of land, and the general business of land agency.

The highly profitable results of such undertakings, when conducted with skill and prudence, have been fully demonstrated in our own Australian Colonies and elsewhere; but the special feature which renders the formation of this Company most opportune is the fact that large portions of the land in Egypt, hitherto excluded from the market, will now, through the Commissioners of the State Domain and the Daira Loans, and by the decrees of the international tribunals, become available for purchase.

As the transfer of land must become more simple and expeditious, owing to the reforms to be effected by the Egyptian code, and by the consequent action of the international tribunals, an ample security will be created for mortgages; and as land will have to be disposed of in large quantities, this Company, by becoming the lessees or purchasers in bulk, would be able to resell it in smaller parcels, according to the wants of the buyers.

An excessive rate of interest has hitherto prevailed on such operations, and it is considered that a Company offering pecuniary facilities to proprietors and cultivators on fair and yet remunerative terms will not only be welcomed by the inhabitants, but will find means of employing capital with special advantage.

Arrangements have been made by the Anglo-Egyptian Banking Company for the immediate working of this Company through well-known and experienced agents intimately acquainted with the country, by which means much preliminary and future expense will be saved and efficiency secured.

Besides the deposit of £2 per share on application and £3 per share on allotment, two other payments of £2 10s each will be called up when required, at intervals of not less than three months, so as to make £10 paid. Beyond this it is not at present proposed to make any calls.

It is intended to issue debentures, to be secured on land and on the unpaid capital.

Application for shares to be made on the annexed form.

If no allotment is made, the deposit will be at once returned without deduction, and if a less number is allotted than applied for, the surplus portion of the deposit will go in reduction of the amount to be paid on allotment.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitors and of the Company.

Prospectuses and forms of application for the Shares can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers or Solicitors.

OBJECTIONS have repeatedly been raised in this country regarding the facilities afforded to foreign officers to acquire information as to the nature of any experiments carried out to improve the matériel of the Services, notwithstanding that foreign Governments do not fully reciprocate this courtesy; and we hope that the following may serve to bring about reform, and cause foreign officers to be denied such privileges as their own Governments may be only too ready to accept, while quite unwilling to grant. A few months ago the Attaché to the Embassy at Berlin reported that experiments were about to be made in Germany with machine-guns. The Admiralty thereon applied to the German Government for permission for Commander Grenfell to attend; but this application, like others of a similar nature, was politely but decisively refused. The Admiralty, finding it utterly useless to keep Commander Grenfell continually searching for information he could never succeed in obtaining, unless, indeed, he had had recourse to bribery, recalled him, and discontinued the appointment he held. The experiments were duly made, but in what manner, and with what weapons, the Admiralty are unaware. The generally received opinion in this country is that the Hotchkiss and Nordenfeldt guns were tried. We are now informed on good authority that the Hotchkiss gun alone was experimented with, the Nordenfeldt gun never having left the works of Herr Gruson, at Buckau, near Magdeburg, since it was first sent there, owing to the German authorities having decided that only guns of a calibre sufficiently large to fire the smallest shell admissible under the Russian Convention should be experimented with, and believing the Nordenfeldt principle admitted of no larger bullet than one of one-inch calibre or seven ounces in weight. They declined to try this gun, and proceeded on the assumption that the Hotchkiss was the only shell-firing machine-gun available. The results obtained have evidently been considered to be satisfactory, for we understand that Captain Sachs, the late Director of Naval Ordnance in Berlin, ordered the Hotchkiss machine-gun to be supplied to the six ships forming the German summer evolutionary squadron which Captain Sachs has recently vacated his post in Berlin to command. The announcement that the English Admiralty had adopted the Nordenfeldt gun has, however, taken the German Authorities by surprise. They thought this gun had no chance, basing their calculations as to the relative merits of machine-guns on the per-centage of hits in any given number of shots, regardless of the time taken to fire them, instead of on the actual number of hits in a given time, regardless of the number of shots fired. That the latter mode of computing the efficiency of a machine-gun is the correct one, will be apparent when it is remembered that these guns, on board ship, are used to destroy advancing torpedo-boats. These small craft can approach a vessel to within about three hundred yards without being perceived. Thirty seconds then brings them alongside, and their deadly torpedo explodes. The gun on board the ship has, therefore, but thirty seconds in which to sink or disable and arrest the progress of the torpedo-boat, and it is self-evident that a gun making 15 per cent. of hits in that time, as does the Nordenfeldt when firing 60 shots a minute, is of more value even than a gun which would make 100 per cent. of hits on 60 shots, but take six minutes to fire them.

The record of the trial by court-martial of Lieutenant Harward, of the 80th Regiment, is at once a melancholy and a warning document. This officer was in command of a detachment on the Utrecht side of the River Intombi when the detachment on the other side was surprised and almost entirely destroyed. On the alarm, Lieutenant Harward formed up his men promptly, and opened fire across the river. At the end of a few minutes, however, seeing that the Zulus were crossing in great strength, he mounted his horse and rode into Utrecht for reinforcements, leaving his party under the command of a serjeant, who carried out the retreat with great firmness and courage. Soon after Lieutenant Harward was invalided to England, and while at home he was given the opportunity of resigning his commission. He, however, demanded a court-martial, and as soon as his health was re-established, returned to South Africa for trial. His defence was that if he had erred, he was merely guilty of an error of judgment. It was essential to obtain reinforcements as quickly as possible. He was not aware that any man in the detachment could ride, so he went himself. The evidence was to the effect that he had shown no signs of fear or disturbance, so we are bound to accept his explanation of an act very difficult of explanation on any other ground than cowardice. The court accepted the explanation, and acquitted the prisoner; but Sir Garnet Wolseley only confirmed, but did not approve the finding. On a simple statement of the fact that an officer, when a detachment under his command is in extreme peril, and wants all the aid which his professional knowledge and personal example can give, leaves his men and rides off for assistance, carries its own condemnation with it. Nothing can excuse Lieutenant Harward's conduct. We presume the court-martial acquitted him of misbehaviour because they believed that his motive was really a desire to obtain succour for his men, and not to secure his own safety. Still, though we accept the finding, which virtually is that Lieutenant Harward was not actuated by cowardice, we cannot too strongly reprobate his conduct, too earnestly caution others against imitating it. Officers should bear in mind that the post of danger is the post of duty as well as of honour, and that nothing can excuse such an abandonment of his men as that of which Lieutenant Harward was guilty. It is difficult to conceive any man being so wrong-headed, so devoid of common-sense, as to believe that it was his duty, to quit his men at such a conjuncture. Had there been another officer present, Lieutenant Harward might have sent him for aid; but nothing would justify the commander going himself. It is most improbable that there was no man present able to ride, and it does not appear that the question was ever asked. To sum up, if Lieutenant Harward was not guilty of misbehaviour, —and we gladly accept the verdict of the court-martial —he was utterly ignorant of his duty, and sadly incompetent for even the smallest independent command. That, in future, no officer in circumstances of a similar nature may follow his example, and be forced to show that he was a fool, in order to prove that he was not a coward, a General Order on the subject ought to be published.

The Reorganisation scheme under the Admiralty and War-Office Retirement Act, does not seem to have given general satisfaction at the Admiralty. Some of the officials have been interviewing the First Lord, and there is much dissatisfaction and discontent amongst the Lower-Division Clerks, which is undoubtedly sufficiently justified. We have the Established Admiralty Writers, who were promoted (sic) to be Lower-Division Clerks. These gentlemen were, previous to the reorganisation, assured by their Lordships that the establishment of the Lower Division of Clerkships afforded means of improving their position and pay. Well, the Reorganisation Order appears, and in the first place, they are called upon, after many years' service, to work an extra hour a day for 10d., or the pay given to a copyist for the simplest mechanical work. In the next place, after an interval, they are promoted to the Lower Division, and the pay for the extra hour is then reduced (upon promotion!) to £10 a year, or 7½d. an hour, which is 25 per cent. lower than the pay of a Copyist; and even this miserable remuneration, by some manipulation too complicated to explain here, is still further reduced, until it becomes in some cases as low as 4½d. an hour, and then finally disappears. Of course, it is obvious to any impartial observer that there is no improvement so far, and the question arises,—Where is the improvement? This is difficult to answer, for it is hard to discover where the promises of improvement have been fulfilled. Certainly, these gentlemen are now entitled to progress to a maximum of £250 a year, by triennial increment of £15, instead of stopping at £160; but even on looking into this benefit, it will appear that, with one or two exceptions, several years must elapse before these gentlemen derive the slightest advantage therefrom. Moreover, owing to the large reductions which have been made in the higher Division, they are performing more responsible work than when their scale of salary was established, without any additional remuneration; for notwithstanding the promises of the Lords of the Admiralty that "duty pay" would be considered in framing the next year's Estimates, no sum is proposed to be voted for that purpose, except for one favoured Department, at all adequate to the requirements of the case, and in comparison with what is provided for other Departments of the State. In fact, duty pay is considered a delusion and a snare, and this treatment of Lower-Division Clerks in the Admiralty must produce ill-effects, especially amongst those who enter by open competition, when they compare the advantages in this respect their colleagues in other offices possess.

Lord Cardwell's promise, given in the House of Commons during the debates which preceded the Abolition of Purchase, that no officer should find himself in a worse position under the new system than he was under the old, would seem to have been entirely ignored. In some cases, at any rate, the present Regulations press most severely. Especially is this the case as regards officers whose bad-luck it was to find themselves upon half-pay on October 31, 1871. Take the case of a captain promoted to an unattached company, or one placed on half-pay in consequence of ill health. As a Purchase captain, he ought by rights to be entitled, on retirement, to a sum of £3,200. But as the Warrant stands, or as it is interpreted, an officer can demand only £1,600. Thus he becomes a loser of £1,600, and there is no appeal. And yet there are some who argue that the British officer has been handsomely treated, and that though grievances are ventilated, they are purely imaginary; that the Government has acted honourably, and that those who complain, do so needlessly. Generally speaking, the terms offered are, we think, as fair as could be expected; but instances are continually brought to light in which officers have received but scant justice, and it must be admitted that half-pay officers of all ranks—those, that is to say, who happened to be in receipt of half-pay when the new order of things came into operation—have a substantial cause of grievance, and we shall yet hope to find steps taken to put them right.

The Duke of Edinburgh left Queenstown on Wednesday evening in the Lively for Galway. Some of the relief stores from the United States' frigate Constellation were placed on board the Lively previous to her sailing, and will be distributed under the personal superintendence of his Royal Highness. The remainder of the Constellation's cargo will be forwarded to Galway by the Valorous. The Duke landed at Valentia on Thursday, and was received by the principal inhabitants and a relief deputation.

Prince Albert Victor and George of Wales are now due at Spithead in the Bacchante, having completed their first cruise in a sea-going ship. The cruise has been a success, and the young Princes have taken kindly to the life, and are much liked. The reception given them at Port Royal will not soon die out of their memories, for it was a spontaneous welcome by the coloured population.

The Earl of Northbrook was introduced to her Majesty on Wednesday, and kissed hands on taking office as First Lord of the Admiralty. The new Board will be formed almost immediately, so that business may not be delayed by the want of a properly patented Board. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre returns to his old post at the Admiralty, and as yet Mr. Thomas Brassey is not in that office to which it is generally believed he aspires, and in which he would work with a will.

It has been notified to the authorities at Pembroke Dockyard that the new armoured barbette ship which is to be constructed there is to be named the Collingwood. We congratulate the Admiralty on the choice of such a good old name.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., will shortly rehoist his flag on board the Alexandra at Malta, and will then take the Squadron under his command for a long cruise. According to the programme drawn up by the Admiral, the ships under his orders will have one of the most enjoyable cruises which has fallen to the lot of the command for a long time. Visits to the ports of the Adriatic, of Italy, France, and Spain are to be made, and the officers may expect much sight-seeing and gaiety. This will, in some measure, make up for the weary work in Besika Bay and the Sea of Marmora.

We are glad to learn that, before going out of office, the Admiralty has had under consideration the claim of Lieutenant Eardley Wilmot, of the Vernon, to some recompense for the very severe hurts received by him in the execution of his duties. The matter has been laid before her Majesty, who has been pleased to sanction a pension of £150 per annum being granted to Lieutenant Wilmot.

The Russian Minister of Marine has decided to take part in the exhibition that is to be held at Moscow next year, and has assigned the sum of 180,000 roubles towards the representation of the Russian Navy and merchant shipping.

After an experimental cruise of the Iris in the Mediterranean, it is not improbable that, should she prove in all respects satisfactory, she will go through the Canal, and join the flag of Admiral Coote. The dispatch with which she would be able to move from place to place, and the special acquirements of Captain E. H. Seymour, a former Naval Attaché, would certainly make her a valuable "Intelligence Department" for the China station, where a watchful eye is only too much wanted at the present time.

Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., is the favourite for a seat at the Board, in Lord Clanwilliam's vacancy, and his services in the Mediterranean, especially the manner in which he arranged for the occupation of Cyprus, are deserving of reward. It is not surprising that many expected to see his lordship made a K.C.B. even before the present promotions in the Order were made; but in that matter he has been overlooked.

The retiring First Lord of the Admiralty has shown his regard for the office, and the high esteem in which he holds many of the heads of departments, by the number of recommendations he made for the honourable distinction of the Bath. The services of Captain Codrington as private secretary to Mr. Smith were undoubtedly very much appreciated by the late First Lord, and he was of opinion that the four years passed by that officer at Whitehall quite entitled him to the distinction of a civil C.B. Colonel Pasley, R.E., Director of Admiralty Engineering Works, and Mr. James Wright, Engineer-in-Chief in the Controller's Department, as also Mr. James Noel, who recently retired from the Secretariat, have also been nominated to Companionships. It was anticipated that, in the distribution of these honours, the late chief clerk, Mr. Thomas Wolley, C.B., might have been remembered, and have been given a step in the most honourable Order.

Lieutenant Malcolm Drummond, who has this week been retired with the rank of Commander, has left the Active List of the Royal Navy, with the view to accepting an important appointment in the far East.

A lieutenant's Naval pension of £50 per annum has this week fallen vacant by the death of Commander William H. Moore, who was awarded the pension in December, 1870. Commander Moore obtained his commission as lieutenant in February, 1815.

We hear that the Danish Government has been requested to direct inquiries to be made on the coast of Greenland for any traces of the Atalanta.

The Queen in Council has been pleased to approve of a memorial from the Admiralty, suggesting that they be empowered to confer the Flag Officers' Good-service Pensions of £300 a year on officers, whether on the Active or the Retired List, provided in the case of retired officers that retirement has taken place after attaining flag-rank, and that the retired pay, together with the good-service pension, shall not exceed the half-pay of an Admiral of the Fleet; also that a flag officer be allowed to receive his good service pension, notwithstanding appointment to full pay or civil salary.

Lieutenant-Colonels and Colonels of Marines will in future be subject on retirement to the rule in force as regards captains of the Royal Navy, viz.:—They shall be allowed to receive in retired pay, together with good-service pension, a sum not exceeding £600 a year, but should the two together exceed that sum, they shall be retired on £600 a year, relinquishing the good-service pension.

With reference to the directions laid down in the Queen's Regulations, as to the practical examination of engineers for the rank of chief engineer, the Admiralty direct, by Fleet Circular 10, of April 15, 1880, that in future no engineer shall be allowed more than two trials to pass his practical examination, and that failure at the second examination will render him finally ineligible for the rank of chief engineer. Failure to pass a practical examination before the proper examining officers must be in every case reported for the information of the Admiralty.

A correspondent writes to thank us for the remarks in our last issue with reference to the carelessness with which notices of appointments, &c., are given at the Admiralty, and he alludes to several cases in which appointments have never appeared in any paper, causing much inconvenience in consequence. We are glad to observe that the initials, and in many cases the Christian names of officers, have been given this week.

Will they never leave Captain Hopkins alone? From a seat on an important Committee, he was sent to a ship in the Mediterranean, and ordered home by the next mail to assume command of the Excellent; and no sooner does he begin to get into the work of that exceptional command, than he is spoken of as the coming Private Secretary to Lord Northbrook.

The two Admirals of the Fleet who were but K.C.B.'s have now been given a step in the Order, and Sir George Sartorius and Sir Thomas Symonds are, like their three brother officers, honoured with the dignity of the Grand Cross. Admiral the Hon. James Drummond, on the Retired List, has also been made a G.C.B., and Admiral George Wellesley has been advanced to a Knight Commander of the Order. From these steps having been given at this moment, we may presume that the prospects of a birthday gazette are not promising.

The announcement that the Queen has been pleased to confer a Companionship of the Bath upon Commander Charles Burney, Superintendent of Greenwich Hospital School, will be received with satisfaction, for it must be admitted that it is to his zeal that the School has been brought to its present state of perfection. Successive First Lords of the Admiralty have not failed to speak in the highest possible terms of the state and condition of this Naval institution, and it is but right that the officer who has worked so hard in bringing about such satisfactory results should meet with some recognition.

It is satisfactory to find that the seaman, John Varling, who was invalided from the Atalanta and came home in the Tamar, has given a denial to the statements which were attributed to him, and published in the daily papers, as to the alleged want of stability of the Atalanta. Comment on this man's reputed partial condemnation of the sea-going qualities of the ship, his allusion to the inexperience of her officers and the inefficiency of her crew, has been made in all quarters, and the opinion drawn has not been favourable to the Admiralty. The cry of "Who's to blame?" had already been set up in the papers, and naturally enough their Lordships thought it as well to have Varling interviewed on behalf of the office, and a report is to be forwarded to the Admiralty. The too eager correspondents who first saw John Varling were evidently not prepared to take his common-place remarks that he had nothing to say against the ship, and that the officers and ship's company thought well of her. They jumped at some allusions made as to her rolling, and by an error, doubled the result. Should the ship be lost, an inquiry will, in all probability, be demanded by public opinion, and it is satisfactory to find that there are at least six men and one officer who have sailed in her this commission who will be able to give their personal experiences of her behaviour at sea.

We regret to hear of the death of Navigating-Lieutenant William B. Meade, late of the Kestrel, on board the Tyne, at sea, on April 19.

In promoting Commander Arthur Wilson to Captain's rank, their Lordships have selected a deserving officer, and one who has worked hard and well for his promotion. He has been constantly employed, and had the fortune to see service both in the Crimean and China wars. He has now passed over the heads of a goodly number of seniors, but has not been pushed forward so much by the power of selection as by his own merits and his special acquirements.

The surveying duties of the Alert in the Straits of Magellan are to be temporarily suspended, if she has not completed the work, as she was to proceed to Talcahuano and Coquimbo in April.

China appears to have begun her hostile policy towards European Powers, and Portugal is the first to be attacked, Macao being reported blockaded. Seventeen vessels are said to have been captured by the Chinese, but of what their blockading squadron consists no intelligence has yet been received. Portugal has ordered the wooden corvette Rainha de Portugal to Macao from the Mozambique; but surely something stronger than that will be wanted if China is in earnest, and means to bring her Naval forces to bear upon Macao.

The Swedish explorers have not been without honour in their own country, for Professor Nordenskjöld has been created a baron and Lieutenant Palander has received a patent of nobility, while other members have been decorated by the King with the Order of the North Star. A thanksgiving service for the return of the explorers was held on Sunday in the Castle Chapel at Stockholm.

By the quarterly return of Naval courts-martial just issued to the Fleet, it appears that during the last quarter twelve officers and fifty-seven petty officers, seamen, and marines were brought to trial. Of the officers tried, two were sub-lieutenants, two assistant-paymasters, five engineers, two boatswains, and one gunner, all of whom were found guilty of the charges brought against them, except one of the engineer officers, who was acquitted. Of the petty officers and men, forty pleaded guilty, and the rest were found guilty with one exception.

Rear-Admiral H.S.H. the Prince of Leiningen, G.C.B., desires it to be known that the statement that he was likely to accept service under the German flag is totally devoid of foundation.

We hear from Portsmouth that further trials of the Nordenfeldt and Hotchkiss guns, against moving targets to represent torpedo-boats, are to take place on board the Medway, at Spithead, upon the arrival of another Hotchkiss gun. The Nordenfeldt gun, as recently improved, was tested on board the Excellent last week, and gave thoroughly satisfactory results. The value of the modifications made in the mechanism of the gun, with a view to its being perfectly safe under all circumstances, was fully proved, and every attempt made to cause premature explosion by intentional jamming of the cartridges and interference with the regular working of the mechanism failed. 2,000 rounds of ammunition were fired, and the greatest rapidity previously obtained was even exceeded, 40 shots having been fired in a little over seven seconds, thus giving over 300 shots per minute.

The following officers were invalided at Malta Naval Hospital on April 10:—Captain F. R. Beechey, R.M.L.I., and Lieutenant A. T. Down, R.M.A., of the Monarch; the Rev. C. E. York, M.A., chaplain of her Majesty's ship Téméraire; and Lieutenant Lawrence Connolly, R.M.A., of her Majesty's ship Thunderer.

It is officially announced that the remains of the officer of the Orpheus, found at the Manukau Heads, New Zealand, are now considered to be those of Mr. W. J. Taylor, second master of that ship.

Colonel Commandant Henry Adair, whose three year's term of command of the Royal Marine Artillery expired in March last, has been reappointed by the Admiralty for a further short term. By an Order of Council, dated January, 1878, the commands in Marine Commandants were limited to three years, and their retirements to £600 per annum. It seems contemplated by their Lordships, in Colonel Adair's case, not to make this Order retrospective, he having been in command of a division of Marines when the Order referred to was made. Their Lordships' decision in this matter is looked forward to with much interest by many officials, more especially by the Chief Constructors of the Dockyards, whose position, a precisely similar one to that of Colonel Adair, would seem to merit equal consideration, and the order for whose compulsory retirement at 60 years of age, instead of 70, as heretofore, should equally be considered not a retrospective one. Colonel Adair has been 31 years in the Service, of which one year and a half has been spent abroad, and he has seen no active service.

The Scheldt Royal Shipbuilding Company, which lately took over the Royal dockyard at Flushing, has just completed two despatch gun-vessels for the Civil Government of the Dutch East India Islands. These vessels are named the Valk and the Arend. Several novel features have been introduced into their construction, of which we hope in a short time to be able to give a full description. They are intended, it is said, to carry each two Nordenfeldt guns, to assist in repelling the attacks of the pirates, while employed clearing the narrow straits and seas around Java, Borneo, and Sumatra of the last relics of those piratical communities Rajah Brooke so efficiently and effectually exterminated a few miles further north.

Of the many useful and necessary changes introduced by the late Government into our Military system, not the least important was the conversion of some of the Infantry Militia regiments into Engineer Militia. The scheme, when first mentioned to those principally concerned, was met with gloomy forebodings as to its practicability. It will be a great satisfaction to those who are responsible for bringing about the change to know that it has been crowned with success. It was said that recruits would not readily flow in to a regiment where the pick and shovel had to be wielded; but so far from this being the fact, the Royal Monmouthshire Engineer Militia, now undergoing its preliminary training under the command of Captain Sir A. W. Mackworth, Bart., Royal Engineers, has obtained more recruits this year than in any year during the last ten, notwithstanding that the standard has been raised two inches, making the recruiting more difficult. Previous to 1877, there were Artillery, Rifles, and Infantry Militia, but no Engineer.

Lieutenant Sinclair, R.E., left Cyprus on April 3 for Bombay, in charge of a number of native mules, which were shipped at Larnaca, and are intended for service in Afghanistan. A further convoy of 150 were to have left last week for the same destination.

At least a fortnight must elapse before we see any fresh impulse given to affairs beyond the Caspian by the arrival of General Skobeleff on the spot. The General set out from Moscow for Tiflis last week, and ought to arrive at his destination next Monday. Quite a fortnight must then elapse before he reaches Chikisliar, and until he arrives at that place nothing may be expected to transpire respecting his intentions. The Russian newspapers are altogether silent on the subject of the fresh campaign, the Censor having issued instructions a month ago for them not to refer in any shape or form to the matter. No newspaper correspondents this time have been allowed to set out with the new commander, and we shall have to depend for our news of the Turcoman campaign upon Mr. O'Donovan, the Daily News' correspondent at Gumuche Tepe, and the letters of the English news-writer at Meshed.

The command of the Auxiliary Artillery in the following districts has fallen vacant, consequent upon the promotions gazetted last night in the Royal Artillery, viz.:—The York, vice Colonel C. R. Hill; Portsmouth, vice Colonel N. O. S. Turner, C.B.; Colchester, vice Colonel A. Bendon; and Cork, vice Colonel C. E. Oldershaw.

The following cutting from the Liverpool Echo is amusing, as showing either how ignorant people are of Army matters; or if that is not the case, to what lengths they will go to gain their own ends:—"Attention is being called to an Army grievance which deserves immediate remedy. It is stated that although the Queen's Regulations expressly declare that while 'canteens are established for the convenience of troops, it is to be clearly understood that soldiers are in no way to be prevented from resorting to markets and shops in the neighbourhood,' this stipulation is practically disregarded, and a sort of truck system prevails to a large extent. Most officers are shareholders in the canteen, and the men know that they are expected to deal at these official stores, though they can get better and cheaper value at the outside shops. Instances are not wanting of direct pressure being put on by these traders in uniform. At least one colonel is known to potter about among the married women, with almost as many samples and of the same kind as a 'Scotchman;' and he is so obliging, that a reel of cotton and a paper of pins is not regarded as too mean an order for his dignity to undertake. The men are not so rich, that they can afford to spend their outlay to fill the officers' pockets. But the principle which underlies the matter is one unfortunately transgressed in directions civil as well as military. The perfect liberty of the subject may be an ideal, but it is one which our political creed aims to accomplish. Neither for profit nor pleasure has one man a right to obtain from another that which, were the latter a free agent, he would not grant. To attempt this in any degree, is oppression; to take advantage of another's necessity is tyranny in kind, if not degree, as bad as that of the slave-driver, the Turkish pasha, the Tory landowner, whom we so roundly and justly abuse. It is quite possible for a man to have Liberalism on his tongue, and very little of it in his practice; and the great doctrines which Gladstone and Bright champion mean as much freedom for the private to spend his pence away from the canteen, as the release of our corn from tax, or the protection of Bulgarian maidens from the violence of a filthy soldiery." What next shall we hear?

By command of her Majesty, a fountain is in course of erection at Balmoral to the memory of the late General Sir Thomas Biddulph, K.C.B. The site is near the Victoria Bridge, and a tablet on the front bears a suitable inscription.

A telegram from the Viceroy, received in London yesterday, gives the following list of casualties in recent actions in Afghanistan, including Bright's, Stewart's, and Roberts's forces:—"Killed—Lieutenant E. Palmer, Bengal Staff Corps; Serjeant J. MacCarthy, 51st Foot; Private F. Rutherford, 59th Foot; Serjeant Cherson, Privates G. Ward and W. Crook, 2nd Battalion 60th Foot; and Private Keane, 92nd Foot. Major Waudby, 19th Bombay N.I., killed at Dobrai, southern Afghanistan. Officers wounded—Captains C. Hamilton and R. Corbett, Royal Artillery; Colonel Yorke and Lieutenant Young, 19th Lancers; Lieutenant Stuart, 2nd Punjab Cavalry; Captains Nugent and Kennett and Lieutenant Reid, 51st Foot; Colonel Lawson and Lieutenant and Adjutant Watson, 59th Foot. Died of wounds—Serjeant Smith, 92nd Highlanders."

The colonelcy of the 85th Light Infantry, vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General Percy Hill, C.B., is to be filled by the appointment of Lieutenant-General H. J. Warre, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army.

We learn from Durban of the safe arrival there of Mrs. Deeble, lady superintendent of the Netley nurses, together with Sisters Grey, Gerrard, and McWilliam, from the Transvaal. Mrs. Deeble has been suffering from a severe attack of fever, contracted while nursing the sick at Middelburg. After a short and much needed rest, the ladies were to embark for England.

Colonel Sir G. P. Colley, K.C.S.I., C.B., C.M.G., 2nd Queen's Royal; Colonel Baker Russell, K.C.M.G., C.B., 13th Hussars; and Lieutenant-Colonel J. C. Martin 1st Dragoon Guards, proceeded to Windsor Castle on Tuesday, and dined with the Queen. On Wednesday morning, Colonel Baker Russell was introduced into her Majesty's presence by General Sir H. Ponsonby and received the honour of knighthood, and was invested by the Queen with the insignia and badge of Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

Commandant Lonsdale, of "Lonsdale's Horse," may be expected in England shortly from the Cape, where he has done such good service during the recent operations. After a short sojourn among us, he intends, we understand, to proceed to Canada.

The Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore scarcely does justice to Captain Butler—"Turcoman Butler," as he is called—in the paragraph which we copied from its columns last week. It might be inferred from the observations of our Indian contemporary that Captain Butler was recalled to India in consequence of having failed in his mission. This, however, was not the case, for Lord Lytton, Sir Frederick Haines, and Sir Francis Roberts all agree that he carried out his important duty fearlessly, manfully, and honourably, and to their full satisfaction. In fact, he did too well, and succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectations of the Indian Viceroy, in enlisting the sympathies of the Turcomans in our favour.

We have from time to time touched on the question of "crammers'" establishments, but we cannot too often take up our pen to expose the evils which must inevitably result from a residence at most of these establishments. The crammers, in many instances, at the best, assist in their studies those who are the heroes of some grave scandal. The idle lad is subject to no pressure, and the greatest license is allowed out of study hours. Every sort of low dissipation and irregularity is connived at, and extravagance passes quite unchecked. In fact, the crammer seems to think that as long as he is ready to teach those who are willing to learn, he has no further responsibility; and pupils placed in his charge are allowed to consort with low women, get drunk continually, and run up bills to any amount. At one rather well-known crammer's, indeed, the head of the establishment is frequently drunk himself, is notoriously living in a state of concubinage with his housekeeper, and has been known to come in to breakfast with nothing on but his night-shirt. All are not so bad as this man, but it is a lamentable fact that lads at crammers' are, as a rule, under little or no restraint, and consume spirits and spend money to an alarming extent. Some conscientious tutors are sadly needed.

The 27th Brigade Depôt, at Leicester, under command of Colonel E. Chippendall, C.B., A.D.C., will be formed about the end of the ensuing month, by which time the new barracks are to be ready for occupation.

A very important addition to military literature has been made lately, in the shape of a bulky volume of 650 pages, entitled, Opesanie Vengerskoi voine 1849 Goda, a description of the Hungarian war of 1849. The author is E. Oreoos, of the Russian État-Major, and the work, which is furnished with fourteen maps and plans, is derived almost exclusively from official sources. M. Oreoos divides the work into two parts: one dealing with the military and political aspect of Austria on the outbreak of the war, and the other describing the operations of the Russian Army. In his criticisms, he professes to be impartial, and whether the public will agree with him on this point or not, it is certain that he does unduly eulogise the Russian commander, Prince Paskievitch, charging him, indeed, with "moving his army hither and thither, fruitlessly and without obvious reason, and giving way to exaggerated cautiousness and want of decision." Appended to the volume are a number of valuable appendices dealing with the Russian Army, and altogether, the work is one that an officer suffering from a superabundance of leisure might advantageously employ his time in translating for English readers.

General C. Crutchley, Colonel 23rd Fusiliers, is about to be placed on the Retired List, on attaining the age of 70 years, with effect from 12th ult.; General Sir E. C. Hodge, K.C.B., Colonel 4th Dragoon Guards, from the 19th ult.; Lieutenant-General Ralph Budd, from the 25th ult.; and General Brook Taylor, Colonel of the 2nd West India Regiment, from the 29th ult.

A correspondent, writing from Cabul on March 26, says.—"The following military arrangements have been made here:—1st Division, under the personal command of General Roberts: 1st Brigade, under General Macpherson, includes 92nd and 28th Light Infantry, and 45th Sikhs; 2nd Brigade, under General Baker, includes 72nd and 3rd Sikhs, 5th Goorkhas, and 5th Punjab Infantry. 2nd Division, under Colonel Ross: 1st Brigade, under Colonel Roberts, comprises 67th and 2nd Goorkhas, and 27th Punjab Infantry; 2nd Brigade, under General C. Gough will command the brigade at Siah Sung; Lieutenant-Colonel Knowles, 67th Regiment, will command at Bala Hissar. Captain Prettyman has rejoined General Roberts's staff as Aide-de-Camp. The Transport Department has been arranged as follows:—Major Lowe, director; Lieutenant Booth, Staff officer to director; Lieutenant R. H. F. Wilson, 1st Brigade; Captain Wynter, 2nd Brigade; Lieutenant Cotton, 3rd Brigade; Lieutenant E. G. Robertson, Ordnance; and Lieutenant R. B. Fisher, to the Cavalry; Captain Downes, Paymaster; and Lieutenant Kitch, equipment and supply.

The Purchase Captains of the Army may be divided into two classes. The first (about 75 in number at this date) complain justly that not only will their brevet promotion cease on October 1 next, contrary to the understanding which existed when they entered the Army and when they obtained their companies, but that they were superseded on July 5, 1872, by some hundreds of Artillery and Engineer captains, and that they are still passed over by captains of those services who are not only junior to them as captains, but also in the Army. The senior captain of Artillery, for instance, is of May, 1872, and entered the Service in 1859, whereas some of the Linesmen—such as Captain Shinkwin, 59th—have 28 years' service, and many others 25. The other class includes all whose companies range from February 10, 1868, to October, 1871, some 300 in number, February 10 being the date of company of the junior captain promoted over the Line officers in 1872, and October 1, 1871, the date of abolition of Purchase. Clearly, therefore the 75 in the first class have claims for promotion on two grounds, namely, supersession and retrospective legislation adverse to their interests, and as their number (deducting all likely to be promoted before October 1, 1880—say, 25) will not probably exceed 50, the expense will hardly be objected to by the most economical. After eight years, such a concession might compensate, in some degree, for past injustice. The Queen's birthday might appropriately be selected for this act of grace. The other class is deprived of its rights by the legislation consequent on the abolition of Purchase, but has not been superseded by the Ordnance Corps. It might therefore be placed on its proper footing either by the temporary suspension of the brevet clause in the Warrant of 1877, or by annual brevets, until the whole body of Purchase captains disappear from the Army List.

A number of officers from the Marines have, we notice, volunteered for the Indian Staff Corps, under the new regulations. Are these officers aware that none of their service prior to their arrival in India will be reckoned for pension? If not, a word of warning may save them much subsequent heart-burning and wrath. In exchanging Services young officers are very apt to overlook such "trifling" considerations as conditions of furlough and pension, &c.; all thoughts of retiring are far distant, and unless their attention is called to the subject, it would not occur to them that they would ever possibly be called upon to resign all their previous service. General Order 117, of 1878, paragraph 13, says:—"Their service for furlough and pension will be reckoned from the date of their first arrival in India." It is a fact that some officers, who accepted appointment to the Staff Corps under these regulations, were under the impression that the paragraph quoted referred to certain special Indian pensions, to which, of course, their previous service would not entitle them (and the coupling of "furlough" and "pension" would tend to encourage this idea, furlough being a specialty, and there being no other connection between them); but they did not realise the fact that their previous service would be entirely lost, and that they would not be permitted to claim even the pensions to which they would become entitled in the British Service. A few figures illustrating the loss actually entailed by this rule will serve to impress the fact more forcibly than anything else. An officer who enters the Staff Corps, after a previous service of five years, must serve twenty more before he can claim any pension at all; he will then be entitled to retire on £191 12s. per annum. Were he, however, to remain in the British Service, and not enter the Staff Corps, he could retire in fifteen years on £200 per annum. It must be borne in mind also that in the twenty years which he must serve in the Staff Corps, he is only permitted to reckon a limited amount of furlough, and if that period is exceeded, whether on sick-leave or otherwise, it has to be subsequently made good before the pension can be claimed. In the British Service, on the other hand, he may take all the leave he can get. It is difficult to conceive on what principle the Indian pension rule is drawn up, and the injustice of it is shown in any case of exchange. The officer who exchanges into the Staff Corps must serve twenty more years for pension, while the officer who exchanges from the Staff Corps into the British Army may reckon his service from the date of his first commission. In fact, a Staff Corps subaltern desiring to retire from the Service may make a very good speculation of it by exchanging into the Line, completing at home, perhaps, his twelve years' service, and then obtaining the gratuity of £1,200 on retirement. It is very certain that until this regulation is modified, candidates for the Indian Army will be few and far between. Officers from the West India regiments and the Marines may, indeed, be induced to volunteer, as they may be willing to discount their future rather than continue a service which is disagreeable to them, but the subaltern of the Line will not be so caught.

ARMY QUARTERMASTERS.

"Quartermaster" writes:—"I trust you will accept my best thanks for again making mention of the hard case of Quartermasters in your columns. For my own part, however, I have not much hope of any success. I have in my possession a letter not very old, in which are the following words, written by an official of the War Office: 'There is no present intention of altering position of Quartermasters.'"

The annual general meeting of the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army will be held on Thursday, May 13, 1880, at 12 o'clock, at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall Yard, on which occasion Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, K.G., &c., will preside. A fancy bazaar, under the especial patronage of H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck, in aid of the funds of the School, will be held by the kind permission of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, in the Riding School, Knightsbridge, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 1, 2, and 3.

Nicholson, 27th Native Infantry (Brig.-Major, Candahar Field Force) to be Brig.-Major; Capt. W. Cooke-Collis, 83rd Foot (D.A.A.G., Bombay District), to be Brig.-Major; Capt. G. M. Cruikshank, R.E., to be Field Engineer.

Lieut.-Col. C. H. Scott, Bengal S.C., has been appointed officiating A.A.G. at Army Head-quarters, vice Major J. Goldie, 6th Dragoon Guards, officiating military secretary to Sir F. Haines.

Col. W. Creagh, Bombay S.C., is about to retire on a pension of £456 5s. and a special annuity of £468 6s., from April 9.

The following appointments have been made to the Staff of the Bombay Army:—Lieut.-Col. A. Wardrop, Bombay S.C., D.A.G., to officiate as A.G. during the absence of Brigdr.-Gen. Brooke, in command of a brigade in Southern Afghanistan; Col. E. A. Green, Bombay S.C., A.A.G., to officiate as D.A.G., vice Lieut.-Col. Wardrop; Capt. A. G. Spencer, 56th Foot, A.D.C. to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, to officiate as A.A.G. at Army Head-quarters, vice Col. Green.

The London Gazette of Tuesday last announces that the Commander-in-Chief has ordered that the thanks of the Indian Government be conveyed to the Naga Expeditionary Force.

The Morning Post states that "the Marquis of Ripon, who has accepted the high office of Viceroy and Governor-General of India, will leave England as early as arrangements can be completed to assume the functions of his exalted post. The Marchioness of Ripon, it is said, will not leave England for India till the autumn."

The Bombay Gazette hears:—"As soon as adequate building accommodation can be secured at Simla, the amalgamation of the Adjutant and Quartermaster-General's Departments under the chief of the Staff will be completed. Col. C. C. Johnson will for the remainder of his term of office act as deputy quartermaster-general of the Army."

Lieut.-Col. A. Wardrop, Bengal S.C., depty.-adjt.-gen., will be adjt.-gen. Bombay Army during the absence of Brigdr.-Gen. Brooke, on active service in southern Afghanistan.

A bounty is to be given to every recruit enlisted for field service in Afghanistan or in mobilised reserves. This payment is authorised by the Government of India with a view to facilitate recruiting for native-infantry regiments, and applies to all the three Presidencies. 25 rupees will be paid on enlistment to every recruit medically passed, and 25 rupees on discharge at the conclusion of three years' service. Those desiring to continue in the Army at the end of their three years' enrolment will, if pronounced medically fit for further service, and if then permitted to re-enrol, receive the sum of 25 rupees, to which they would have been entitled had they been discharged on the completion of their first three years' service. Men discharged on account of physical unfitness in and by the service before the termination of their three years' engagement will receive the deferred bounty. In no case is the augmented strength of regiments, 800 sepoys, to be exceeded. This grant of bounty does not apply to recruits brought to regiments by native gentlemen who, in consequence, receive commissions, under recently published rules. The grant of bounty is purely temporary, and is to remain in force for nine months.

Says the Civil and Military Gazette:—"For some time a report has been current that a new force—partaking of the characteristics of the Army, the police, and the Intelligence Department—is to be formed for the protection of our interests in the belt of Afghan territory just acquired by us. Rumour goes on to say that the force will be raised as much as possible from the Pathan or Pushtoo speaking tribes along our frontier, and officered by volunteers from the various Indian Services. If this be so, let us hope that a knowledge of Pushtoo—which might so well be insisted on in the Punjab police and present frontier force—will be a sine quâ non. Some real inducement will be necessary, and we hope will be offered, to get really competent men to volunteer to immure themselves in a country that offers not one single advantage as a place of residence, and among a people whose chief family characteristics are disingenuousness and dirt. Col. C. M. M'Gregor, C.B., C.S.I., C.I.E., has been mentioned as likely to be entrusted with the formation of the force, and as its future commandant. We think this rumour far more likely to be correct than that one which would have us believe that the present frontier force will be enlarged by the formation of new regiments."

The Standard states that "in consideration of the short period he has held the appointment (18 months), Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar is, with her Majesty's permission, allowed to retain the command of the Portsmouth District for another year, on promotion to full General in the Army."

GENERAL MASSY'S CASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I happen to be in a position to know the truth about much which occurs beyond the frontier. It is quite impossible to accept any official account of any matter of policy or action in Afghanistan without great reservation. Gen. Massy's case is now the great topic of interest. When time has cleared away the accumulation of mirepresentations—this is a strong word, but an appropriate one—with which his affair of December has been invested, it will be seen and acknowledged that his tactics on that occasion were simply admirable. The true reason of his recall are:—1. He believes Lord Lytton's policy a most mischievous one. 2. He entirely disapproved of the hanging and shooting and flogging of men, whose only crime was fighting fairly against us. 3. He is well known to be engaged on a true history of the present Afghan campaign. No justice will be accorded to him here. He is the only General whose action and conduct have lent to this wretched Afghan business the splendour of a true glory; but he is not in favour, and so he is pushed to the wall. I wish to draw your attention to the following indubitable facts about Massy's action of Dec. 11:—1. He was never on the Ghaznee road, or any other road at starting, and therefore could not have left it. 2. He had scouts out, and had taken every precaution. 3. He had no orders not to engage the enemy. 4. When the enemy first appeared over the hills, about four miles ahead, he naturally supposed them to be the beaten rabble of 1,500 villagers whom he had been sent to intercept. 5. Finding, after joining action, that Roberts's information was all at sea, and that he had an army of 10,000 men to deal with, he began to retire, but slowly, in the hope of inducing Macpherson to change his direction, and come to his assistance, and thus help to save Sherpur, where we had only 500 bayonets, and where Roberts had turned 100 sick men out of the hospitals to help to man the walls. 6. He had made two retirements in perfect order, and successfully, his casualties at that time being only one man wounded and two horses disabled, when Gen. Roberts appeared and took command. 7. His responsibility at that moment entirely ceased. 8. Roberts changed the direction of the retirement, and ordered the charge of Lancers before the guns were in difficulty. 9. Roberts ordered forward, at this critical moment, 2 guns, 400 yards, to cover the falling-back of the cavalry after their charge. 10. He ordered the guns into a walled enclosure, surrounded by a deep moat, where he had to abandon them. 11. Macpherson, having approached on the enemy's left rear, and driven them from the scene to the hills on their proper right front, Massy returned for the purpose of recovering the guns. 12. He arrived on the spot only a few minutes after Col. Macgregor, who had just succeeded, with some spare teams, in putting the guns once more on the road, the enemy at that time being at least four miles off. 13. He (Massy) handed the guns over to a squadron of the 9th Lancers, and directed them to be taken at once to Sherpur. 14. Having so done, he rode back to the Deh Mozung Gorge, expecting to find Roberts still there, but found he had retired with the rest to Sherpur. 15. He then rode into Sherpur, and arrived there at 8.30 p.m., darkness having set in for some hours. Posterity will acquit him; the Army acquits him now; but neither the verdict of the Army, nor that of posterity, will acquit others for an act of tyranny and gross injustice.—I am, &c.,

ONE WHO KNOWS THE FULL FACTS.

Cabul, March 31, 1880.

THE LATE CAPTAIN MORIARTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—On reading an old copy of a Cape newspaper, I came across a letter from a correspondent lately with Col. Wood's Column. In it I read that poor Captain Moriarty was stabbed in coming out of his tent. I cannot help wondering how this correspondent has not been able to ascertain facts of events so well known since our disaster on the Intombi River. Will you do me the favour of publishing, for the information of all who knew Capt. Moriarty, that he killed three of Manjoba's sons at his tent door before he was wounded, and that afterwards, whilst he bravely made his way in the midst of the overwhelming numbers by which he was surrounded, he killed seven others—Zulus, of course—before he reached the left side in the middle of the laager, where he was shot in the chest, and was heard to say, "I'm done! Fire away, my men! Death or glory"? Then he fell, and was assegaied again, but it is believed he must have been dead. His body was not touched like the others; he was not mutilated in the least, and his face wore a calm and peaceful expression, as if he had not suffered pain. For the authenticity of part of this information, I refer you to the officer commanding the 80th Regt. The rest is sadly told by the few survivors who managed, by some extraordinary way, to escape being massacred. Capt. Moriarty was known by the Kaffirs in the vicinity of his temporary camp by the "Inkosi" with the white head, and he impressed them greatly with the brave manner in which he fought. Let this poor consolation for his loss meet the eye of his bereaved friends:—"We have lost a good soldier, and a kind, congenial friend." Truer words were never expressed. His loss is mourned not only by those who knew him intimately, but by those, also, that chance had brought him in contact with. Let the words Noble, Simple, and Brave be conspicuously written on his tombstone. "Requiescat in pace."—I am, &c.,

A FRIEND.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The buildings for the Household Cavalry which have been erected on the site of the old barracks at Knightsbridge are now so far completed that they will be ready for occupation in a few days' time, when they will be taken over by the regiment from Albany Street Barracks. Built of red brick and stone, the new quarters form an irregular oblong, the quadrangle for the troopers on one side, the married soldiers' quarters on the other, the riding-school and other buildings further on towards the Albert Memorial, and then the officers' quarters and stables. Besides the introduction of the most approved sanitary appliances, it is evident that the health and comfort of man and horse alike have been studied to the utmost extent, the rooms and stables being large, well-lighted, and ventilated, while above are baths and wash-houses, lavatories, &c., and a terrace, covered in, for smokers. The married soldiers' quarters exhibit the same careful attention to detail, even to the providing of a covered play-ground for the children, while every married soldier has the use of a suite of apartments, comprising sitting-room and kitchen, bed-room and scullery. There is also a well-appointed canteen and reading-rooms. The principal feature of the officers' quarters is the mess-room, the frontage of which is to the Exhibition ground—a handsome apartment, 36 ft. long by 24 ft. wide. Over the principal window are busts of former commanders, including Wellington, Marlborough, Anglesea, Combermere, Oxford, Raglan, and Hill.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. Capt. Rogers has been ordered to embark for Natal to join head-quarters, on exchange from the 3rd Hussars.

2nd Dragoon Guards. The regiment has moved during the week from Dublin to Dundalk, relieving the Scots Greys. The Irish Times points out that the services of the regiment are of special interest to Irishmen. Two hundred years ago, when the horrors of war were desolating this country and the rival armies of James and William were struggling for supremacy, the 2nd Dragoon Guards, at that time styled the "3rd Horse," landed in Ireland, and in the early part of 1690 were present at the siege of Charlemont, afterwards effecting a junction with the forces commanded by William in person, and taking part in the famous battle of the Boyne, this being the first general engagement at which the regiment was present. On the dispersion of James's army, and his flight from Dublin, the 3rd Horse marched to Dublin to occupy the city, and subsequently shared in the sieges of Limerick and Kinsale and the siege and storming of Athlone, returning to England in 1692. From this date the regiment was frequently quartered in Ireland, and was always employed with the British armies when on the Continent, likewise taking a prominent position in the actions fought against the Pretender in 1715, notably at Preston, where its gallant behaviour gained it the title of "the Prince of Wales's Own Royal Regiment of Horse," and in 1847 it received its present designation. In 1857 the 2nd Dragoon Guards landed in Calcutta, and took part in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny, and then gained the honour of carrying "Lucknow" on its colours, returning to England in 1870. It will thus be seen that this distinguished regiment has for nearly two centuries been honourably engaged, and its conduct both in the field and in quarters has ever been pre-eminently conspicuous, as conducing to the retention of the high character borne by the British soldier in peace or in war.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The regiment has moved during the week from Dundalk, &c., to Dublin.

6th Dragoons. The regiment commenced its march from Edinburgh to Norwich, &c., yesterday, the first party being due at its destination on the 29th inst.

17th Lancers. The London correspondent of the Irish Times says:—"It deserves to be mentioned that among the legacies left by the late Capt. Wyatt-Edgell was one of £500 to Capt. John Brown, paymaster of the regiment, and lately adjutant. Capt. Brown served as a trumpeter with the 17th Lancers in the Crimea, and had his commission purchased for him in 1867 by Col. Drury Lowe, in view of his appointment as adjutant. No officer of the regiment has done more to promote its interests than Capt. Brown, and Capt. Edgell's acknowledgment of his services is only one of many instances which might be quoted in which the officers of the 17th have borne testimony of their respect for him as a soldier and a comrade."

Major-Gen. E. W. E. Walker (late Bengal) died at Mussoorie on March 24, in his 55th year. The deceased served with the army of the Sutlej in 1846, the expedition against Kote Kangra, throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, being present at the actions of Sadoolapore, Chillianwallah, and in the Mutiny. He took part in the battle of Agra, the relief of Lucknow, and the attack on Fort Rooyab (twice mentioned in despatches, two medals, each with two clasps, and brevet majority).

Major R. C. Smith, commissary of Ordnance, Secunderabad, died on March 30, off Southampton, on his passage from India, aged 44 years. The deceased served in the Indian campaign of 1857-58, and was present in the affair of Jelalpore (medal). He joined the Army, Sept. 24, 1855; became Capt., Dec. 17, 1864; and Major, March 11, 1874.

It is semi-officially announced that "the Queen has been pleased to appoint Major-Gen. R. Biddulph, C.B., High Commissioner of Cyprus, to be a Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George; and Lieut.-Col. F. C. H. Clarke, R.A., late her Majesty's Commissioner for the demarcation of the frontier of Turkey in Asia, to be a Companion of the said most distinguished Order."

Major E. S. G. Showers (late Madras) died at Cheltenham on the 7th ult., aged 71 years.

We learn from Natal that Brevet Major M. J. Clarke, R.A., has been appointed commissioner to the Waterberg and Zoutpansberg districts.

C Baty. A Brig. R.H.A. arrived at Dublin from Aldershot on Saturday, Capt. A. E. England in command. Lieuts. Hotham, Knight, and Trotter accompanied the battery.

G Baty. B Brig. R.H.A. (Major Walton) has embarked in H.M.S. Assistance at Dublin, for conveyance to Liverpool, en route to Woolwich.

H Baty. A Brig. R.H.A., consisting of five officers, 147 men, 105 horses, 26 women, and 28 children, has arrived at Aldershot from Woolwich.

M Baty. 3rd Brig., under command of Major Maunsell, arrived at Dublin on Monday from Limerick, and moved into Portobello Barracks, awaiting embarkation in H.M.S. Assistance to-day for England.

The move of M Baty. 3rd Brig. from Limerick and the N Baty. from Clonmel to Dublin, to proceed to Woolwich, has been cancelled for the present.

In consequence of a change in the programme of reliefs, the moves of all batteries of Royal Artillery in Ireland have been countermanded for the present.

Major A. Dixon, C Brig. R.H.A., has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

Our Woolwich correspondent, writing last night, says:—"The Coast Brigade of Artillery disappears from Woolwich to-day, having become absorbed in the District Staff. The regimental bands and others engaged in garrison duties were transferred to the District Staff, under the command of Col. R. Oldfield, some time since, and it has been thought desirable that the whole of the 'employed' men should be placed under one head. Capt. Garnham, in command of the 9th Division, Coast Brigade, will be removed, with a remnant of about forty men, to another station, not yet named, and the rest of his division will be taken on the roster of the District Staff at once. An anomalous system which has existed since the disestablishment of the Depôt Brigade is thus terminated. Major-Gen. Younghusband, R.A., terminated his duties as superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories, Woolwich, yesterday, being one of the General officers who have accepted the retiring allowances granted in the recent Royal Warrant. He was presented with a farewell address yesterday morning by the officials and foremen of the department. He quits the Royal Artillery after a service of 42 years, during the whole of which time his skilful attainments have found employment in special duties, chiefly connected with the manufacturing departments. He is said to have been the youngest cadet commissioned in the Royal Artillery, having been barely 17 years of age when he received his first commission. He will be succeeded by Lieut.-Col. Eardley Maitland, R.A., formerly assistant-superintendent of the Royal Gun Factories; but a month's interregnum will elapse, during which Gen. Younghusband goes on leave, and in this interval the department will be in charge of the second officer in command, Major Porter, R.A."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Pioneer states that Lieut.-Col. St. John has been permanently appointed to reside at Candahar as the political representative of the Indian Government, and the scheme which would have transferred his services to the British Foreign Office has been abandoned. The Government of India represented to the Home Authorities that they could ill spare Col. St. John, and intimated, at the same time, their desire to offer him the agency at Candahar, on terms which would enable him to decline the appointment at Astrabad without incurring personal loss. After a short interval, the Secretary of State announced his consent to this proposal. Hitherto Col. St. John has been in subordination, in political matters, to Gen. Stewart, but now he is to be recognised as in independent management of political affairs at Candahar.

The Bombay Gazette says:—"Col. Ponsonby Cox, the new Chairman of the Port Trust, took his seat for the first time yesterday (April 2). Col. Cox has the reputation of being a capable man, and when he begins to understand something of Bombay and its trade, he will, no doubt, make an efficient chairman. But the marvel is very great how, and by whom, an officer quite new to India, and with absolutely no local knowledge whatever, has been made the Chairman of the Port Trust."

Col. R. Harrison, C.B., lately employed on special service in South Africa, succeeds Lieut.-Col. R. Grant, transferred to Devonport as second in command of Royal Engineer troops at Aldershot. Col. Harrison returned home from Natal by way of the Suez Canal, and was introduced to the Sultan of Zanzibar by the captain of the Asiatic, mail steamer. The Sultan received them before the palace, where his army was drawn up with presented arms, the band playing "God Save the Queen," and subsequently conducted them through the palace, and entertained them with coffee and sherbet.

They were played out of the camp at Polemidia by the band of the 1st Batn. 20th Regt., and marched to Limasol for embarkation. The head-quarters of the company, commanded by Capt. Patten, remain on the island. Lieut.-Col. H. W. Dumaresq, commanding, has left Cyprus on four months' leave of absence, Capt. Patten, R.E., performing the duties during his absence.

The Irish Times says:—"Capt. M. S. Bell, V.C., Royal Engineers, who has accepted an appointment on the Intelligence Staff in India, has been specially recommended to the notice of the Indian authorities, who applied for the services of an officer of tried ability to assist in starting the intelligence system in that country. He will be given one of the highest appointments on the new Staff, at the head of which Lieut.-Col. G. E. L. Sanford, of the Royal Engineers, is to be placed. Capt. Bell will be remembered as the engineer officer brought to notice by Sir Garnet Wolseley on account of his gallantry in the Ashantee campaign."

We regret to see that a sapper and a bugler of this corps are in custody of the civil power at Carrigaline, Ireland, on a charge of outrage on a girl in a cottage, which they entered under pretext of searching for deserters. The corps is remarkable for good-conduct generally. The brother of the girl, a youth of 18 years of age, made no attempt to defend his sister or procure assistance, and the affair has a suspicious look.

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Companion of the Civil Division of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath on Mr. Gerald Gould, her Majesty's Minister Resident at Belgrade, and on Major H. Trotter, R.E., her Majesty's Consul for Koordistan.

51st Light Infantry. We take the following notes from the Bugle, the excellent little paper published by the regiment, the last copy of which, dated Pezwan, Afghanistan, March 1, has been sent to us:—"We were all glad to hear very excellent accounts of Col. Madden's health. He arrived safely in England after a good passage, and has greatly benefited by the change. Capt. Drury, who was adjt. of the regiment for many years, has obtained a company in the 65th Regt. Major Wynne received his well-earned brevet for his services as superintendent of Army signalling in the last Afghan war. It is well remembered with what success he filled a similar position in the Jowaki campaign. It is with pleasure we hear that Pymr.-Serjt. Isaac Webster, who was badly wounded at Ali Musjid last year, has completely recovered, and is now at Dover. Ptes. Downey and Gall, who were wounded the same night, have also safely arrived in England. Qrmr. Murray has been obliged to appear before a medical board, and has been ordered home at once. Capt. Kennett rejoined his company at Jugdallak, having relinquished his appointment as station staff officer at Basawal."

74th Highlanders. A local paper, published at Shrewsbury, gives the following account of the services of an old soldier :—"The death of Mr. John Owen, formerly assist.-serjt.-major in the 74th Highlanders, and which occurred recently, leaves another gap in the thinned list of the men who in their early manhood saw service in the Peninsular war. The deceased, who was a native of Shrewsbury, enlisted in the 74th on May 2, 1811, at the age of 18 years, and after serving for a period of 22 years and 48 days, was, on Aug. 8, 1832, discharged with a pension. He rose to be successively corpl., serjt., colour-serjt., and assist.-serjt.-major, which last-named position he filled from Nov., 1829, to the date of his discharge. He served nearly three years in the Peninsula and in France, nearly eight years in North America, and one year and nine months in the West Indies, and was present at the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, and at the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajos. At this last-named scene of heroic British encounter and endurance, the deceased was slightly wounded in the groin; whilst at the battle of Vittoria, Lieut. Atkinson, of the 74th, dating Cork Barracks, June 9, 1830, thus speaks of Owen's gallantry :—'I certify that I remember Serjt. John Owen from the time he joined the regiment in 1811. He was one of the men who composed the storming party in the assault of Ciudad Rodrigo in Jan., 1812. He afterwards was present at the siege of Badajos, when he was wounded in the storming of Fort Pecorina. He was in the retreat from Madrid, 1812; and at the battles of Salamanca and Vittoria, at which latter his gallantry was most conspicuous, and met with strong approbation from all who witnessed his conduct. He was skirmishing with his company, and having discharged his piece, he, with bayonet fixed, charged two French soldiers from behind a tree, receiving the fire of both, from one of which a ball passed through his cap, and the powder was blown in his face. In fact, his conduct during the whole of the Peninsular war was always exemplary and gallant, particularly in the following engagements,—Pyrenees, Orthes, Nivelle, Toulouse, besides various skirmishes on outpost duty.' His conduct was so exemplary, that on his discharge a gratuity of £15 was awarded 'for meritorious conduct;' which fact the Secretary of War at the time desired the Churchwardens of Shrewsbury 'to make generally known in the parish to which he belonged.' Among other medals possessed by the deceased was one presented to him by the officers of his regiment, bearing the following inscription :—'This cross was given to John Owen, 74th Regiment, for his brave and gallant conduct in the forlorn-hope at the storming of Badajos and Rodrigo, and also at the battles of Salamanca and Vittoria, at which battles his gallantry was most conspicuous, and met with the strongest approbation.' On the late Lord Hill's recommendation, the deceased was appointed to a situation by the late Sir Baldwin Leighton, Bart., and this position he filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to his employer. The deceased expired on April 16, at the advanced age of 88. In addition to the medal mentioned above, he was in possession of the Peninsular medal and clasps for the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse, as well as for the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajos."

76th Regiment. Capt. Gore is likely, we hear, to exchange to a regiment now serving in India.

77th Regiment. Capt. Gatacre, from the Supernumerary List, is to be brought on to the Establishment, vice Capt. Henderson, retired on a pension.

80th Regiment. We learn from the Cape papers that a general court-martial assembled at Pietermaritzburg, Natal, on Feb. 20, for the trial of Lieut. H. Harward, with reference to the disaster which occurred to a detachment of this corps at the Intombi river on March 12, 1879, when Capt. Moriarty and a considerable number of men lost their lives. Col. Alexander, King's Dragoon Guards, was the president of the court. Two charges were preferred against Lieut. Harward. The first was for misbehaviour before the enemy, in shamefully abandoning a party of the 80th Regiment under his command when attacked by Zulus, and riding off at full speed from his men. The second charge alleged conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having neglected to take proper precautions for the safety of the party. Lieut. Harward pleaded "Not Guilty." The witnesses consisted of Serjt. Booth and several men of the 80th Regiment, who formed part of the detachment. It appeared from the evidence that on the night of March 11 a company of the 80th—about 100 men—were encamped on the river. The greater portion of them were on the left or Derby bank, under Capt. Moriarty, and the remainder, some forty men, in a position facing their comrades, were on the right, or Luneberg Bank, under Lieut. Harward. On the latter side of the river lay Luneberg, from four and a half to five miles distant, and on the road to Luneberg, some 400 yards from the encampment, was a mission station. At about five in the morning of the 12th a force of Zulus, estimated at 4,000 in number, attacked and speedily overcame Capt. Moriarty's men on the left bank of the Intombi. This party was at once almost annihilated; a few attempted to escape, some naked and unarmed, across the river. On the left bank there was a hand-to-hand conflict, and most of those attempting to escape were assegaied in the river, and the Zulus began crossing in numbers. On the right bank the orders had been, in case of attack, to assemble at the provision waggon. When the alarm was given some nine men so assembled, under Serjt. Booth, who commenced firing with the view of covering the retreat of their comrades coming from the left bank of the river. Lieut. Harward came from his tent with a saddle and saddled his horse, gave a command to one of the men to retire on the mission station some 400 yards distant, and told him he was going off to Luneberg for reinforcements. He accordingly galloped off to Luneberg. This appears to have been from three to five or six minutes after the alarm was given. Serjt. Booth and his nine men remained about ten minutes after Lieut. Harward left, firing 25 rounds, and then retreated. The Serjeant swore he did not think that if Lieut. Harward had remained more effectual help would have been given to those on the Luneberg side or those escaping from the Derby side, or that the retreat would have been more orderly or soldierlike. He could not say if his departure influenced the men in leaving. The nine men who remained with him were cool and collected. The attack took place at break of day, when it was misty; it had been raining all night. There was no reserve ammunition on the Luneberg side. The Zulus followed about three miles on the road to Luneberg. They were investigating the road with the apparent intention of cutting him off, and he would have been cut off if the Zulus had not eventually retired. The witnesses stated that that so long as he remained after the alarm Lieut. Harward was cool and collected in manner. The fact of Lieut. Harward galloping away was not in dispute, and his defence rested upon the theory that in doing so he acted in a manner not only not open to blame, but deserving credit for good judgment and care for the party. His was the only horse with the party; he was, as far as he knew, the only person who could ride; the main body on the other side had been annihilated; his own men, excepting the nine who rallied with Serjt. Booth, were scattered; he knew that the Zulus were adepts in the art of signalling the movements of our troops, and his idea was that their seeing him riding off for reinforcements would have the effect of deterring them from pursuit. Lieut. Harward repudiated the imputation of misbehaviour, and rather claimed credit for having acted with good judgment and for the interests of the party. He stated that when he was invalided home afterwards, on account of ill-health, he was offered by the Horse Guards the option of retiring from the Army in the ordinary way, but he refused to do so, owing to the imputations to which it would subject him in the circumstances, and asked for trial by court-martial. He complained much of the comments of Sir R. Peel in the House of Commons, and some of the newspapers at home; and it appeared that Lord Chelmsford, in his despatch relating to the disaster, had described him as having done his utmost. The court-martial adopted Lieut. Harward's view, and acquitted him of both charges. Sir Garnet Wolseley disapproved the proceedings, but ordered him to return to his duty.

85th Light Infantry. The colonelcy has again fallen vacant, by the death of Lieut.-Gen. Percy Hill, C.B., which occurred on Saturday last. Gen. Hill commanded the 2nd Batn. The Halifax (N.S.) Evening Mail contains the following :—"We shall soon be called on to bid farewell to the most general favourite ever known in the Halifax garrison, the genialP. M.O., Dr. Shelton, who has been ordered and promoted to Aldershot. We are selfish enough to wish that the gallant doctor had not got his step, and we are quite sure that he himself will hardly appreciate the professional advancement which will estrange him from scenes and faces to which he has become attached. We can only hope that some happy influence will bring him back to us, and that the good example set by so many junior members of the service will not be lost on one who, though at the top rung of the ladder, is still young in years, and very young in heart."

Army Hospital Corps. Lieut. of Orderlies D. Whiteley and a detachment of men are on passage home from Cyprus in H.M.S. Tyne, which sailed from Limasol on the 17th ult.

MILITIA.

Durham Artillery. The preliminary drill of the regiment began on 19th ult., at head-quarters, the Barracks, Hartlepool, under the command of Capt. Grubb, the adjt. There are 190 men now assembled, and the following officers :—Capt. Scott, Lieut. Murphy, 2nd Lieut. Cluny M'P. Henderson, Surg.-Major Rawlings, and Qrmr. Green, R.A. THE VOLUNTEERS.

Honourable Artillery Company. The members of the corps gave a performance on Tuesday evening at the Imperial Theatre. The entertainment included Mr. Maddison Morton's well-known farce, "Whitebait at Greenwich," and Mr. James Albery's ever-popular "Two Roses," to which thorough justice was done by those engaged in its representation, Staff Serjt. Matthews' John Small and Jenkins, Serjt. Mackenzie's Caleb Deecie, Drill-Serjt. Williams' Digby Grant, and Miss Kate Langford's Ida calling for special commendation. The proceeds of the entertainment were devoted to the Hon. Artillery Company's Lifeboat Fund. The annual dinner of the Light Cavalry Troop was held on Wednesday evening. The troop now numbers 60 sabres, mostly hunting men. Lieut. M'Dougall presided, while the vice-chairs were occupied by Serjt. Margetson and Pte. J. H. Rowley, the hon. sec. The usual loyal toasts having been duly honoured, the toast of "The Light Cavalry" was proposed by Capt. Jacobs, senior officer of the regiment present. In responding, Lieut. M'Dougall said that although they were in a fairly prosperous state now, they hoped to be still more so soon, as at Whitsuntide they intended to go to Bishops Stortford for a day or two, with a view to picking up eligible recruits from the disbanded Herts Light Horse. There were many of the old members of that corps who would like to volunteer into a cavalry regiment with a good "backbone," and such they had in the H.A.C. Light Cavalry Troop.

The Volunteers will, as usual, be allowed to drill with the Regular troops at Aldershot this year, and the dates of attendance will be later, so as to give officers and men a better chance of attending. The dates at present proposed are July 31, and Aug. 7, 14, and 21.

THE ROYAL MARINES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Your correspondent "Othello" will, I think, find many officers to support him in his proposed method of dealing with the Marines. The officers of this corps are practically useless on board a ship. They have no authority, no active duty, for I do not call inspecting reliefs, visiting sentries, and the tomfoolery of a so-called drill-day active duties, no practical responsibility, and nothing whatever to make them take an interest in the ship. In these days of gunnery lieutenants, seamen gunners, and efficient police, the number of Marine officers and men embarked might be considerably reduced, and the detachments placed under the supervision of the gunnery lieutenant. I cannot, however, agree with "Othello" when he says, "for there can be no doubt there exists throughout the whole of that Service a feeling of uncertainty and distrust, which, sooner or later, will destroy the esprit de corps and efficiency which has hitherto been unequalled by any body of men in her Majesty's Service." Esprit de corps has long ceased to exist. It was crushed out years ago, about the time when Gen. J. O. Travers threw up his appointment of Inspector-General, and the only feeling in the minds of the officers generally is to get as good a pension as they can out of the Service. They have no ambition, because official despotism will not allow them to compete with other Services. They do their work, it is true, but they do it mechanically, and they feel no pride in their corps. Indeed, as a rule, they are rather shy of admitting to strangers that they belong to it. It is not the officers' fault, but the Government's, for habitually treating the Service with indifference, contempt, and injustice. The majority have brothers or relations of some kind in the Army or Navy. Why, then, should they be thought less of, if it is not from the different way in which they are treated.—I am, &c., Patience.

The following officers are attached for instruction at Aldershot, under the Staff College regulations, from the 1st prox., as follows:—To Cavalry: Capts. Elles, Palmer, Jocelyn, and Spencer, R.A.; Capt. Bickford, R.M.A.; Capt. Cooper, 15th Foot; Lieut. Nash, 44th Regiment; Capt. Tidy, 54th Regiment; Capt. Craigie, 71st Highlanders. To Artillery: Capts. Norton, 5th Lancers; James, R.E.; Glasgow, 12th Foot; Stringer, 23rd Foot; Pollock, 21st Foot; Lieuts. Leverson, R.E.; Huyshe, 41st Regiment; and Ponsonby, 49th Regiment.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1880.

THE Parliamentary return of the number of courts-martial, desertions, and minor punishments in each regiment of Cavalry, brigade of Artillery, company of Engineers, and battalion of Infantry, during the year 1878, has apparently been compiled on the usual official principle of giving as little real information as possible. The civilian reader, on glancing at the summary of this document in the Times last week, must have been much misled, and formed very erroneous ideas as to the comparative amount of crime in different regiments, for the good reason that neither the strength nor the station of each regiment was furnished. Without knowing both these facts, it is quite impossible to constitute a comparison. Nor even had columns giving the strength and station been added, could the comparative state of discipline have been accurately ascertained, for there are often peculiar and accidental circumstances connected with the composition of a regiment, which greatly influences its conduct. We need not, after the lengthy criticism in the Times, go into details, but we would point out that there are several different establishments in the same branch of the Army, and that some corps are complete, while others are often very far from being so, Then as to composition. In 1878, several regiments had given a large number of volunteers to other regiments, and filled up with recruits. Others had received,—1st, a large number of recruits; 2nd, several hundreds of volunteers from a dozen different corps, the men sent being often of extremely bad average character; 3rd, a large number of Army or Militia Reserve men. This was undoubtedly the case in the regiments of the First Army Corps, which were by this means raised to a strength of over 1,000 non-commissioned officers and men. To compare one of these regiments, suddenly doubled in strength by a mass of strangers from all regiments of the Service, with another homogeneous regiment, about 500 strong, is obviously misleading and unfair. Then it must be borne in mind that a weak regiment, full of old soldiers and quartered at some quiet single-battalion station, was naturally much less likely to behave ill than a strong corps, stationed at, say, Dublin, Aldershot, Woolwich, or Portsmouth, where temptations to crime of every sort abound. While on this point, we may observe that the Guards are particularly exposed to temptation, being for the most part quartered in London. The Colonies vary very much. In some of them liquor is cheap, bad, and plentiful; while, on the other hand, in most of them successful desertion is so hopeless, that it is rarely attempted. Finally, there is a vast difference between Colonels as well as between Generals. One Colonel invariably tries by court-martial for an offence which another Colonel considers sufficiently punished by cells, and one General grants district courts-martial freely, while another seeks every opportunity to get crime dealt with by regimental courts. It is evident, therefore, that without the most full and detailed information, showing the strength, station, average age and service, the composition of the regiment, and each offence committed, no exact comparison of crime can be made; but even an approximate comparison is rendered impossible by the omission of the strength of the different corps enumerated in the return which is the subject of these remarks. Without, however, attempting a comparison, this return gives ample food for instructive reflection. It is melancholy to think that in some regiments the average of minor punishments was three to every man, and of courts-martial one to every five or six men in the year. Can nothing be done to remove such a stigma?

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Friday next, at two o'clock. It is the Queen's pleasure that presentation to his Royal Highness at this levée shall be considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty.

We are glad to be able to state that his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been enjoying perfect health, and that the report as to his indisposition which was circulated on Friday week was unfounded. On the contrary, the Duke of Cambridge has been perfectly well, and has been constant in attention to the duties of his office.

The Right Hon. H. C. E. Childers, Secretary of State for War, arrived at the War Office at a quarter to four o'clock on Thursday afternoon, and formally assumed the official duties of the department. The right hon. gentleman was accompanied by Captain Lyttelton, his private secretary.

Earl Morley has been selected to succeed Lord Bury as Under-Secretary of State for War, and Mr. A. Campbell-Bannerman, who was Financial Secretary under Lord Cardwell's administration of the War Office, resumes his former position under the present Government.

The Secretary of State for War has appointed Captain the Hon. N. G. Lyttelton, Rifle Brigade, and Captain G. W. A. FitzGeorge, 20th Hussars, to be his private secretaries. Captain FitzGeorge has been assistant private secretary to Colonel Stanley since Colonel Deedes' appointment as Assistant-Under-Secretary of State for War.

It is only just to Colonel Stanley and his predecessor, Lord Cranbrook, to bear tribute to the zeal and energy which they have displayed during their six years of office. Fettered by schemes which they had opposed, but which they were bound to try honestly to carry out, hampered by financial considerations and harassed by ignorant or unprincipled opposition, they yet did their best to work a machine which had been thrown thoroughly out of gear by the previous Administration. We cannot here enumerate all that they did to increase the efficiency and contentment of the Army, for the memory of their improvements is still fresh in the memory of our readers. We will, however, say that they did much to remedy the blunders and muddles of Lord Cardwell, and that they inspired all ranks of the Army with a conviction that their interests were dear to those who presided at the War Office.

Veterinary-Surgeon B. L. Glover, Royal Artillery, has been strongly recommended to the notice of the Military Authorities to receive a step of promotion, in recognition of his recent services at the Cape. Mr. Glover was sent out from England on the first outbreak of hostilities, and is spoken of on all hands as having displayed great ability in the discharge of his important, and at times most trying, duties. Since his return, he has visited America in connection with the purchase of mules for transport service, and he has handed in a most elaborate report to the head of his department on the subject of the horse and mule supply of the American Continent. The Veterinary Department has been so slightingly treated in the matter of rewards for the Zulu campaign, that we trust advantage may be taken of this opportunity of acknowledging the claims of one who has rendered valuable service to the State, and has shown himself to be well deserving of the favourable consideration of the War Office.

As we mentioned some weeks ago was probable, General Sir Daniel Lysons has suggested the appointment of Brevet Major P. H. S. Barrow, C.M.G., 19th Hussars, and Captain J. F. C. Hayward, 25th Regiment, as his aide-de-camp at Aldershot. The appointments, however, have yet to be approved.

The assumption of the chief command of the army of Northern Afghanistan, this week, by Lieutenant-General Sir Donald Stewart, K.C.B., is likely to bring the war to a rapid conclusion. When the events of December around Cabul exhibited such a strange want of political sagacity, as well as military foresight, in Sir F. Roberts, public men in India became seriously anxious concerning the course of events beyond the frontier. Private letters and telegrams state that Lord Lytton, with as much delicacy as he could use, hastened virtually to supersede General Roberts in his political capacity by Mr. Lepel Griffin. Subsequently, when Sir Frederick Haines heard from General Massy, at Umballa, how military matters had been managed and shuffled, and how General Roberts's many blunders were attempted to be smoothed over by making victims of one or two, and praising all the rest all round in his despatches, his Excellency, though not having the moral courage to fully admit his own error in condemning, without explanation, by sending back the Cavalry General to his command, still hastened to inform Sir Donald Stewart that he wished him, the very moment Ghuzni was captured, to proceed to Cabul and supersede General Roberts in command. Sir F. Roberts is an officer of much activity and personal courage; but every man in India considers him better suited to the useful command of a brigade than of an army corps. It is also very generally believed in India that the war would have been terminated last November had Sir Donald Stewart commanded the expedition to Cabul.

We understand that it has been definitely decided to station a battery of Royal Horse Artillery at the St. John's Wood Barracks, on their vacation by the Household Cavalry next month. We further believe this will be made a permanent quarter for artillery. The first battery to occupy the new station will be the Chestnut Battery of A Brigade, which was to have gone to Ireland this spring.

We are glad to learn from Cyprus that the health of the troops since last October, when they arrived at Polemidia Camp from Mount Troödos, has been excellent, and the advisability of remaining in the present camp for the summer months, instead of again marching to the almost inaccessible heights of Troödos, has been seriously discussed. The choice of a site for the present cantonment and future barracks has been attended with the best results, as the health reports testify, there not being a single man of any corps in hospital for fever or any climatic disease at the time our advices left the station.

We have received some interesting details illustrative of the bungling policy pursued by the Government of India in regard to the transport arrangements of the Afghan expedition, and it would be satisfactory to learn that an inquiry had been instituted into the subject, if only to guard against similar mistakes in the future. We have it on the authority of one whose statements we cannot but respect, that the losses sustained under this head alone, in connection with the Afghan campaign, may be estimated at the very lowest computation at one million sterling. This is a large sum, and yet our authority is in a position to speak with a full knowledge of facts, and he furnishes us with the names of officers in high position who bear out his views as to the utter inefficiency of the transport system in India.

Colonels Saunders and Greene, Royal Horse Artillery, being the two senior colonels on the roster for foreign service, have been placed under orders for India. Such an act of vigour on the part of the Authorities is as gratifying as it is unexpected. No date has, however, been fixed for the embarkation of these officers, one of whom, we presume, will proceed to Bangalore.

We are glad to be able to announce that some dozen steps will shortly pass to the senior majors and captains in the Army. This fillip to promotion will be appreciated, for there certainly has been cause for discontent of late, in consequence of the slow rate at which advancement has reached one class of officers, the majors of July 5, 1872, who have had to suffer the mortification of finding themselves superseded in each gazette by the favoured members of the Scientific Corps.

Captain H. H. Oldham, 79th Highlanders, has been appointed Captain-Instructor at the School of Musketry, Hythe, vice Captain T. S. Gildea, 72nd Highlanders, transferred to the Staff at Gibraltar as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Musketry.

Captain H. H. Parr, 13th Light Infantry, vacates his appointment as Military Secretary to Sir Bartle Frere at the Cape of Good Hope.

The new Veterinary School which Colonel Stanley announced some time ago in the House that it was proposed to establish, will be started at Aldershot in the course of a week or so, and a Warrant has been drawn up by the War Office providing for the necessary appointments in connection therewith. The Professorship is to be filled by Veterinary-Surgeon J. Lambert, late of the 17th Lancers, who is recognised as one of the ablest and best read officers of his department. Mr. Lambert will receive a special allowance of £150 per annum, and he has lately been pursuing a special course of study at Edinburgh, in order to fit himself for the discharge of the duties of his new position.

Captain the Hon. W. FitzW. Elliot, 93rd Highlanders, who has lately been employed as aide-de-camp to General Sir Patrick M'Dougall, K.C.M.G., commanding the troops in British North America, has arrived home from Halifax, to join the Staff of the Intelligence Department.

The Royal Warrant has at length been promulgated providing for the retirement of Purchase Lieutenant-Colonels. It is laid down that, "Whereas we have been pleased to take into consideration the disadvantageous position in regard to promotion in which the officers under the rank of lieutenant-colonel, in certain regiments of our Cavalry and battalions of Infantry of the Line, are placed, in consequence of the officers commanding those regiments and battalions not being subject to the rule now generally in force under which a lieutenant-colonel in command is required to vacate his appointment at the end of five years; and whereas we deem it inexpedient that the officers in question should be required to continue to serve under conditions less advantageous in regard to promotion than officers in the same rank in other regiments and battalions of our Cavalry and Infantry of the Line, our will and pleasure is that the limitation of the date of October 31, 1871, in Article 131 of our Warrant of May 1, 1878, shall be cancelled; and that henceforth all lieutenant-colonels commanding such regiments or battalions shall, on the completion of five years' service as such, be removed from the command of their regiments or battalions. It is our further will and pleasure that officers now serving who are affected by the provisions of this our Warrant shall be removed from the command of their regiments or battalions, as the case may be, at the expiration of two months from this date.— Given at our Court at Windsor this 21st day of April, 1880, in the 43rd year of our reign." The following officers will have to retire at once, viz.:—Colonels A. Nugent, Scots Greys; A. G. Montgomery Moore, 4th Hussars; E. T. St. L. MccGwire, 1st Battalion Royal Scots; W. Roberts, 1st Battalion 5th Fusiliers; G. H. Waller, 1st Battalion 7th Fusiliers; J. Davis, 2nd Battalion 20th Regiment; G. P. Prevost, 1st Battalion 23rd Fusiliers; R. T. Glyn, C.B., 1st Battalion 24th Regiment; J. A. Ruddell, 1st Battalion 25th Regiment; H. de R. Pigott, 70th Regiment; J. I. Macdonnell, 71st Highlanders; H. Kent, 77th Regiment; F. G. Appleyard, C.B., 85th Regiment; N. Stevenson, 87th Fusiliers; and H. E. T. Williams, 108th Regiment.

It certainly appears strange that an officer of the standing of Chinese Gordon should have hitherto gone unrecognised since his return to England. We cannot think that the Government has overlooked Colonel Gordon intentionally, yet it is a subject of general remark that one of the ablest men of our Army, who has lately been performing most valuable service, has received no acknowledgment whatever, notwithstanding all he has done to promote the welfare of a Power in which Great Britain is considerably interested. He has not even been honoured by a summons to attend at Windsor. There may be some difficulty in decorating him, but there can be no reason why he should be treated with indifference after all he has done since he was last in England.

Brevet Majors H. Stewart, 3rd Dragoon Guards, H. M'Calmont, 7th Hussars, and Lieutenant A. G. Creagh, Royal Artillery, will accompany Sir Garnet Wolseley to England from the Cape. It is the intention to provide Major Stewart with a Staff appointment as soon as opportunity offers, but it is not known in what manner his services will be utilised.

BOARD OF TRADE, WHITEHALL GARDENS, April 26, 1880.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to confer the "Albert Medal of the Second Class" on Mr. George Oatley, gunner's mate in the Royal Navy, and Drill Instructor of the Royal Naval Reserve at Peterhead.

The following is an account of the services in respect of which the decoration has been conferred:—On Monday, the 16th February, during a very heavy gale, a vessel, which proved to be the Swedish schooner Augusta, was observed by the Coastguard at Peterhead showing signals of distress, and labouring heavily in the trough of the sea. On reaching the opening of the Peterhead South Bay, the vessel headed for the land. As it was clear that she would come ashore, the life-saving apparatus was at once started, but by the time it reached the beach the vessel had struck on the rocks near Boddam, about four miles south of Peterhead, and drifted towards the shore, where she lay exposed to all the fury of the gale. Two rockets were fired, and the second carried the line over the stern of the vessel, but the crew were quite ignorant of the working of the apparatus, and were unable to avail themselves of the assistance. Oatley thereupon took off his clothes, and swimming through the breakers and broken water, reached the smooth water between the ship and the rocks, and was pulled on board by a rope thrown to him. He then proceeded to haul in the line and fix it to the rigging, after which the crew, five in number, were one by one drawn ashore. Oatley, who contrary to the captain's wishes, was the last to leave the ship, was landed benumbed with cold and fatigue, and cut and bleeding from contact with the rocks. Oatley is not of a strong constitution, and was invalided five years ago for phthisis.

Instructions have been given to the Blanche, or other ship of war, shortly expected at Halifax, Nova Scotia, to cruise from lat. 48 to 50 as far as long. 36, and remaining a fortnight after passing the banks of Newfoundland, in search of any trace of the above ship. Among the passengers by the Tamar was an able seaman named Varling, who was invalided from the Atalanta, and received on board the Tamar at Barbadoes. He left in hospital two ordinary seamen named Thomas Westlake and Alfred Stansell, belonging to the same ship. He also states that Frank Ellis missed the training-ship at Barbadoes, and was in consequence transferred to the Tenedos, and that two young seamen, named John M'Cormick and John Jessop, had been sent on shore for 42 days' imprisonment. Varling reports that after leaving Teneriffe on the outward passage, they were obliged to heave-to for seven days and nights in a gale, the top-gallant masts being housed and the upper yards sent down upon the deck. Capt. Stirling scarcely ever left the deck, and the work of shortening sail and sending down the spars was left to the able seamen on board, who, including marines (mostly servants), petty officers, and cooks, numbered about 50 in a crew of 250. The number was further diminished at this time by the death of John M'Clure, an able seaman, who fell into the sea from the topgallant-yard, and was drowned, despite every possible effort made to save him. Varling states that the young sailors were either too timid to go aloft, or were incapacitated by sea-sickness. He adds that they hid themselves away, and could not be found when wanted by the boatswain's mate. It took the ship thirty-one days to go to Barbadoes from Teneriffe, the former port being reached on Jan. 1, or about nine days after time. The result was that provisions ran short during the voyage, 15 lb. of biscuit being served out every two days for a mess of ten men. The Atalanta left Barbadoes on Friday, Jan. 9, for Antigua, where they caught the yellow fever. Two men, whose names Varling cannot remember, had already died from the disease. When out on their way from Antigua they met the Tourmaline, to whom they signified their condition, and after transferring their sick, they proceeded to Halifax. There the training-ship received sailing orders for England. The ship called in at Bermuda on Jan. 30 for water and provisions, and finally left for home on the 31st. An officer who served in the Atalanta writes, relative to Varling's statement:—"On referring to my journal, which is copied from the ship's log, I find that in one gale of wind experienced on our passage home from Bermuda, our lee lurches are logged over 40 deg. The exact amount could not be registered, as we had no means of measuring over that amount; but this maximum was frequently exceeded. When I state that during that time no anxiety for the safety of the ship was felt by Capt. Stirling or his officers, I think you will agree with me that very little faith must be placed in this man's statement. That the officers, with the exception of two, were as much untrained as the crew, is absurd, as, in addition to the experience they have all had in former ships, four out of seven have served on board her in her previous cruises. That the captain should be continually on deck in bad weather, and that the bulk of the work aloft should fall to the trained portion of her crew, is only natural. Capt. Stirling, knowing the capabilities of his crew, is always careful to place his ship under snug canvas on the appearance of any bad weather. She carries 44 trained seamen, all of whom are available for work aloft in bad weather, the work on deck being done by the untrained men, who are incapacitated from sickness, and the Marines and idlers, who number about 26, in addition to which there are nearly 20 excused idlers, who could be turned up in case of emergency. This complement of 44 men is about what a merchant ship of the same spread of canvas would carry, all told, and be considered well manned. These are the circumstances the ship would be under on meeting with bad weather soon after leaving England. On her passage home none of her crew would be incapacitated from sea-sickness, and a good number of her men under training would be available aloft; besides which, she would probably be bringing home time-expired men, and would have their assistance. Thus we cannot say she is under-manned; on the contrary, for her size, she is better manned than most ships in the Service."

BACCHANTE, Capt. Lord Charles Scott. A correspondent, writing from Kingston, Jamaica, on March 24, says:—"On the landing of the young Princes, the streets were lined with thousands of spectators, who had come out to see the sons of the Prince of Wales. All the way from the wharf to the outskirts of the town—rather more than a mile and a half, by the route that was taken—their progress was a real, hearty ovation, as only loyal colonists who see the members of the Royal Family but seldom can give. At last, however, they reached the open country, and the carriages then bowled along merrily at an accelerated rate of speed, taking them shortly to the residence of the Governor, where they were received and entertained at luncheon; and it being understood that their Royal Highnesses would visit the grounds during the afternoon, streams of people poured out there by every practicable road and path."

CRUISER, Com. F. A. Wetherall, which has been on a cruise between Sicily and Corfu, will return to Malta next Saturday.

CURACOA, Capt. Cuming, sailed from Malta on April 29 for the China station.

DRUID, Capt. W. R. Kennedy, was to be at Port Royal on April 12.

FANTÔME, Com. Karslake, was refitting at Port Royal when the last mail left.

FLAMINGO, Com. W. H. Hall, was at Port Royal, refitting, according to last accounts.

FORESTER, Lieut.-Com. Sydney Smith. On March 11 an inquiry was held at Old Calabar on board this ship into charges of atrocity alleged against the Egbomen men. In April last year a treaty was signed between the King of Calabar and England in which the acts of the Egbomen were pronounced illegal, but since then several murders have been committed, hence the inquiry, which had been ordered by Lord Salisbury. The acting Consul presided, and several missionaries and prominent traders were present. In only one case, in which a woman's neck had been broken, the murderer was sentenced to death, and was handed over to the Regent of Duke Town for execution. Another case, in which a woman had been beaten to death, was adjourned, owing to the absence of the Ekot Emu. The Qua murder, which occurred during the lifetime of Consul Hopkins, was also investigated. The King of Calabar was examined as a witness, and said that the murder was committed with his knowledge, which was in violation of the treaty. It was thought, however, that the matter had been dealt with by the late Consul, and that the King was not aware of the significance of the treaty. The acting Consul, therefore, impressed upon him the importance of the treaty, and said he would have been punished, but for his advanced age.

FORWARD, Lieut.-Com. Ernest Brickdale. According to the Standard, the captain of the Portuguese schooner Christina reports that when off Monte Video, he heard, at 2.15 a.m., voices calling for help. He hove to, anchored, and made signals to announce to those in distress that aid was at hand. He then lowered a boat, which, in consequence of the agitated state of the sea and the violence of the wind, capsized and sank, four of his men escaping with difficulty. He at last sighted, by the flash of his signal-lights, a boat bottom upwards, to which several persons were clinging, and floating at the mercy of the wind and tide in the direction of his vessel's prow. He, with difficulty, succeeded in getting the men on board, but could not secure their boat. After doing his best to restore them, and after they had slept about an hour, he weighed anchor, and arrived at Monte Video about 8 a.m., when he delivered the persons he had saved to the captain of the port, who conveyed them on board the Forward. At 4 p.m, the Forward hailed them, and lowered a boat. One of the officers saved came on board, to return the clothing with which he had been supplied. It seems that some of the officers of the Forward had gone shooting to the River Santa Lucia, but that when off the point Espinillo their boat capsized. They succeeded in getting on to the keel, and, as above stated, had the good-fortune to be rescued from their perilous position by the Portuguese schooner.

Hart, Com. Evans, sailed from Malta for Plymouth on April 29.

Hotspur. Messrs. Laird, Birkenhead, have undocked the Hotspur, which has been in their hands for some time past, for alterations and repairs. The principal alterations made are the substitution for the old fixed turret of a revolving turret of the latest construction, protected with compound-steel armour-plates, equal in resisting-power to about 12 in. of iron, and carrying two guns of equal power to the one 600-pounder originally carried. Appliances for working the Whitehead torpedo have been provided, and new boilers have been put in.

Iris was commissioned on Tuesday morning, at Portsmouth, by Capt. Edward H. Seymour. Her present orders are for service in the Mediterranean.

Kestrel, Com. William Metcalfe Lang, who has been appointed to command this ship, entered the Navy in 1857, and served as acting-lieutenant in the Orestes, Capt. Alan H. Gordon, at the Cape of Good Hope and in the East Indies, from April 13, 1863, until paid off in June, 1865. He was lieutenant in the Topaze, Capts. W. M. Dowell, C.B., and R. A. Powell, C.B., in the Pacific, from Jan. 24, 1866, until paid off in the summer of 1869; and from April 14, 1870, until paid off in May, 1873, served in the Orontes, troopship, Capt. J. L. Perry. He commanded the Goshawk, tender to the Revenge, at Queenstown, from Sept. 1, 1873, until promoted to commander, Dec. 31, 1875, and after subsequently studying at the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, took out a gunboat built for the Chinese Government; and in June, 1877, was transferred to the command of the Magpie, vice Com. Anson, invalided; and at the close of 1878 removed into the Nassau, also at China, and brought her to England, and was paid off in April, 1879.

Lively, Lieut. C. Le Strange, flying the flag of Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, Superintendent of Naval Reserves, arrived at Valentia, from Queenstown, on Thursday.

Minotaur, Capt. H. Rawson, flag of Rear-Admiral A. W. Hood, C.B., will complete her search for the Atalanta, and return to Bantry Bay about Saturday next.

Northumberland, Capt. H. R. Wratislaw, now in search of the Atalanta, will arrive at Bantry Bay about Saturday next.

Philomel, Com. H. R. Berners. The Hampshire Telegraph hears that the ship had the misfortune recently to ground in Souakim harbour, but there is no reason to believe that she has been strained or otherwise injured to an extent worth mentioning. The causes of her taking the ground have naturally been canvassed on board, and some are inclined to think that a possible "wigging" is in store for somebody, though nothing serious need be looked for.

Plover, Com. H. B. Stewart, left Port Royal on March 15, for Portsmouth, calling at the Bahamas and Bermuda.

Shannon, Capt. John D'Arcy, was at Callao on March 25.

Sparrowhawk, Lieut.-Com. C. Carpenter. In alluding to the relief of her late commanding officer, the Colonial Standard says:—"Among the passengers for England, viâ New York, by the s.s. Alps, on March 3, was Lieut. Thomas F. Pullen (Oct. 29, 1875), who, after four years' unremitting and zealous service, has, in his capacity as commander of the surveying schooner Sparrowhawk, completed the surveys of Jamaica in so thorough a manner as to leave the navigation of the approaches to the several ports of the island a matter of perfect safety, with the display of the most ordinary care on the part of captains, &c. During his stay in Jamaica Mr. Pullen has made many friends, who, whilst they unite in regretting his departure, are no less earnest in their good wishes for his prosperity and further advancement in the Service."

Tamar, Capt. W. H. Liddell, which arrived at Spithead late on Sunday night from Bermuda, brought no news of the missing training-ship. The Tamar's passage from the Bermudas was pleasant and eventful, the weather being fine throughout, and no wreckage was encountered. She left Bermuda on April 11, and brought from the West Indies drafts belonging to various regiments, naval time-expired men, court-martial prisoners, invalids, and six officers. A serjeant-major of the Royal Artillery died of delirium tremens on the passage between Barbadoes and Bermuda. The Tamar has proceeded to Devonport to refit.

Tourmaline, Capt. R. P. Dennistoun, was to leave Port Royal on March 24, to give leave to her crew, and would be back at Jamaica in the first week in April.

Tyne, Com. J. E. Stokes, sailed from Limassal, Cyprus, on the 17th ult., and arrived at Malta on April 22, and xpects to be at Portsmouth about May 5. She embarked at Limassal, Cyprus, for Portsmouth, Capt. A. C. Alexander and detachment R.E.; Surg. O. G. Wood, A.M.D.; Lieut. of Orderlies D. Whiteley and detachment A.H.C. On the night of the 17th, Ordinary Seaman S. Mitchell died at sea, and the funeral was held on the following Sunday morning. The naval officers who embarked at Hong Kong were:—From Midge (paid off): Capt. Henry Salmond, Lieut. John. W. W. Wells, Lieut. John L. Eagles, Navigating Lieut. John H. Woolward, Assist.-Pymr.-in-Charge R. P. Hawkshaw, Boatswain Joseph Pill. From Kestrel (paid off): Com. F. Edwards, Lieut. P. C. Underwood, Navigating-Lieut. W. B. Meade, Chief Engineer J. Edmonds, Surg. O. P. Browne, B.A., M.B., Assist.-Pymr.-in-Charge C. E. Byron, Engineer W. Landells. From Naval Yard, Hong Kong: Staff Com. G. P. Heather. From Iron Duke (for passage home, to pass examination): Acting Sub-Lieuts. G. Shuckburgh and C. F. Thursby. From Iron Duke (invalided): Lieut. A. E. Clark Kennedy. From Hong Kong: Acting Military Chaplain the Rev. J. Henderson. Navigating-Lieut. William B. Meade died at sea, off the island of Crete, on the afternoon of Monday, April 19. Funeral held on the morning of the 20th; naval honours; troops paraded.

Valiant, Capt. W. Chapman, has arrived at Devonport from the Shannon to refit. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Tarbert in the Lively on April 22, and was saluted with eleven guns from the Valiant. His Royal Highness paid an official visit, as Admiral of Naval Reserves, to the Valiant. The crew was mustered and inspected, and during the forenoon exercised at general quarters, fire quarters, &c. The Duke expressed himself highly pleased with the discipline and cleanliness of the ship. In the afternoon, he visited and inspected the Coastguard Station at Tarbert Island, in company with the district captain. In the evening, his Royal Highness was entertained by Capt. Chapman on board the Valiant at dinner, and the following gentlemen had the honour of invitations:—The Knight of Glin, Glin Castle; Mr. Reeves, Bessborough; Mr. Leslie, Tarbert House; Mr. Blennerhassett, Shannon Lawn; Lieut. Le Strange, R.N., equerry to H.R.H.; Mr. Rickard, R.N., secretary to H.R.H.; Com. Boyes, Lieuts. Needham and Jackson, and Capt. St. John, R.M.L.I., of H.M.S. Valiant. The Duke returned to the Lively at 11·30 p.m., and immediately proceeded to Queenstown.

Valorous, Capt. G. D. Morant, employed on service connected with the Irish relief, has left Queenstown with stores from the Constellation for the West Coast of Ireland.

Wye, Staff Com. Sarratt, which was despatched in search of the missing training-ship Atalanta, arrived in Plymouth Sound on Wednesday. The Wye started from Gibraltar on the 20th ult., in search of the Atalanta, and arrived at Vigo on the evening of the 23rd. She left Vigo on the morning of the 24th, and, when about 20 miles from that place and four miles from Ons Island, a small fishing-boat, with a man in a recumbent posture, was observed. It was blowing hard at the time from the north-east, with a heavy sea. A boat having been lowered, the fishing-boat was taken in tow, brought alongside the Wye, and hoisted on board. The occupant turned out to be an old fisherman, apparently about 70 years of age. He was perfectly unconscious when brought on board, and only lived about 20 minutes, although every effort was made by the medical officer, Dr. Lyon, to restore animation. The Wye returned to Vigo and delivered over the body to the Spanish authorities, who expressed their gratitude to the commander for the attention shown. It is supposed the man was a Spaniard. The boat had only one oar, and had evidently drifted off the shore, or out of one of the bays. The Wye had been ordered to the Azores, but the Channel Fleet were despatched in search of the Atalanta instead, and the Wye left Vigo the next morning for Plymouth. A look-out was kept from that port to Plymouth, but nothing of the Atalanta was seen. The Wye has proceeded to Portsmouth and the Thames.

ASSISTANT-SECRETARIES, R.N.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—May I crave a short space in your columns to advocate a change of title for those assistant-paymasters serving in admirals' offices, viz., that instead of "secretary's clerk" they be termed "assistant-secretary?" The title of "passed clerk" was transformed some years ago into that of assistant-paymaster, and there can be no reason why these assistant-paymasters should still be called clerks, as their duties are those of assistant to the secretary, and in his absence his important duties devolve upon these assistants.—I am, &c., A. O.

The Admiralty has awarded medals for long service and good conduct to the following men:—William Ferguson, quartermaster of the Pembroke; Henry J. Norris, chief gunner's mate, of the Swallow; William Lawrence, armourer's crew, of the Albatross; Joseph Gaforino, captain's cook, of the Fawn; Richard A. Cathie, gunner's mate, of the Euryalus; John York, ships' corporal (first class), of the London; James Symes, quartermaster, of the Flamingo; Joseph Baker, corporal, R.M.A., of the Northampton; Allen Tamon, ropemaker, of the Tourmaline; C. B. Brett, private, R.M., of the Flora; Joseph Eales, leading stoker, of the Firefly.

The members of the Navy Club dined at Willis's Rooms on Tuesday, Vice-Admiral Hon. John W. S. Spencer, C.B., occupied the chair, Gen. Sir Hastings Doyle being the guest. There were also present—Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, Bart., G.C.B., Admiral Lord Edward Russell, C.B., Admiral Sir Alexander Montgomery, Bart., Admiral Sir E. A. Inglefield, K.C.B., Admiral John E. Erskine, Vice-Admiral Richard Oliver, Vice-Admiral J. Miller, Rear-Admiral Horton, C.B., Rear-Admiral Sir Francis Sullivan, K.C.B., Rear-Admiral A. H. Hoskins, C.B., A.D.C., Capt. N. Bowden Smith, Capt. Henry B. Hankey, Capt. Sir Lambton Loraine, Bart., and Com. Sir John Heron Maxwell, Bart.

It has recently been stated in the papers that the recreation-ground at Sheerness is making good progress, and will shortly be a very creditable and enjoyable spot. Portsmouth, too, will soon have its naval recreation-ground in a fit and proper condition, if the Treasury will consent to the estimated expense being incurred. The amount required to be spent in making it all that can be wished is not far short of £2,000, and to this extent, I am assured, their Lordships are prepared to go. The expenditure comes under the heading of "extraordinary," and consequently the keepers of the public purse have to be consulted, and with them will rest the question as to whether the whole of the proposed work shall be done.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF ARICA.

[FROM A CORRESPONDENT.]

I send you a short account of the bombardment of Arica, which you may think worth publishing. It is interesting, if only as showing what a great advance is being made even in so small a navy as the Chilian, and as being, perhaps, the first example of an armed merchant steamer taking an active part in a bombardment. In October, 1879, the Belle, of Cork, a three-masted merchant steamer, which not long before had been running between the English and Irish ports, arrived in Valparaiso. She had been purchased in Europe by the Chilian Government as being a very fast steamer. After two months' trooping-service, she returned to Valparaiso to be armed with one long-range, heavy gun (hereafter described) and a Hotchkiss mitrailleuse, and was then sent to assist the squadron blocking Arica. She had been renamed the Angamos, after the action off Angamos Point, in which the celebrated Huascar was captured by the Chilian Fleet. Arica, a Peruvian town, important as being the principal outlet for Bolivian commerce, is a well-fortified place, and its partially sheltered roadstead is defended by about twenty guns. Ten of these are mounted on the Marro, a high cliff close to, and S.W. of, the town; the rest are in batteries near the beach, and in detached forts inland. Some are 250-pounder rifled guns. Under the batteries lays the Peruvian monitor, the Manco Capac, with smooth-bore guns in her turret loaded with 500-pounder round shot; but being only capable of steaming three knots, she did not venture to move out. The Angamos arrived on February 29, two days after a smart engagement between the Manco Capac and the Huascar now one of the Chilian fleet. Captain Thompson and eight men of the latter vessel were killed, but neither ship received serious injury. On Sunday, February 29, the Angamos opened fire on the town and forts, at the extraordinary range of 7,000 yards. The effects of the bombardment were soon apparent. The inhabitants fled to Tacna, the troops withdrew inland, and the men who manned the batteries lay helplessly behind their entrenchments, unable to pitch their projectiles more than half-way to the little Cork pig-boat that was causing all this alarm. The bombardment continued for a week, and on March 6 the Angamos withdrew, having thrown nearly two hundred shot and shell at ranges from 6,000 to 8,000 yards. There were very few casualties on the Peruvian side, and not much damage was done to the town, as it is built, for the most part, of sun-dried mud bricks and corrugated iron. The shot went clean through the walls without knocking them down, and then could be seen ricochetting away some miles inland, and the shell, though they did great damage on bursting, did not set fire to the town. Another action took place on March 17 between the Chilian ironclads and the Peruvian ships and batteries, but the town will probably not be bombarded again until the Chilian Army, which has landed at Ilo, arrives to invest Arica on the land side. A rough description of the Angamos's remarkable gun may be interesting. It was made at Sir W. Armstrong's works, and is a breech-loader on the improved French system. Extreme length, 18 ft. 4 in.; weight, 11½ tons; calibre, 8 in.; rifling, polygroove; vent, at right angles to bore; projectile, 180 lb., no studs but gas-check; charges—battering, 90 lb., in two parts, with large air space; full, 65 lb. about; powder chamber larger in diameter than bore. The projectiles were 18 seconds in travelling 8,000 yards; the slide pivotted on its centre, and was worked on a circular cogged racer. The great length of the gun and the narrow beam of the ship ensured the muzzle projecting over the ship's side on either beam. Neither ship nor gun were injured in the slightest degree.

THE CONSTELLATION.

The Imogene, Coastguard cruiser, went alongside the Constellation on Saturday, and received a portion of her cargo, and left soon afterwards for Galway. When taking her departure the United States flag was run up at the fore, and as she steamed past the Duke of Edinburgh's ship, the Lively, the latter vessel hoisted the stars and stripes, and the other naval ships in port followed suit. Crowds of people visited Queenstown, and steamers laden with passengers, bands accompanying, went to and fro, and cheers were raised on passing the Constellation. On Saturday the Lord Mayor of Dublin visited the Duke of Edinburgh on board the Lively, and invited him to the Mansion House ball, and an invitation was also given by the Mayor of Cork to his Royal Highness to attend the banquet to the captain and officers of the Constellation. The Duke visited the relief ship, accompanied by the commander of the Lively, equerry-in-waiting. An address was presented on Saturday by the Queenstown people to Capt. Potter, who promised to forward it to the Secretary of the United States Navy, and said it would probably go before Congress. Mr. Moran, a prominent Nationalist at Queenstown, afterwards waited on Capt. Potter with an address, which he assured him contained nothing political. The address concluded with "God save Ireland." The captain, who appeared surprised, received the address, and merely said "Thank you."

Messrs. Allen and Hanburys have as nearly as possible succeeded in depriving Cod Liver Oil of its nauseating smell and taste. They present in their "Perfected" article the oil in a beautifully bright and but very little coloured state. Many persons to whom the taste of the oil has hitherto been an obstacle will doubtless be able to take it in its this more perfected form.—Lancet. No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed.—Medical Times and Gazette. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "Perfected" Oil. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

THE PURCHASE CAPTAINS.

"Etonian" writes:—"Your advocacy of the claim to brevet promotion of the pre-abolition captains on Oct. 1 next deserves their gratitude. The claim is irresistible, if Lord Cardwell's solemn promise is not to be broken; it is right that a Liberal Government should complete its work, by fulfilling its word. Those officers who obtained their companies between the years 1866 and 1871 have suffered hitherto most by the abolition of Purchase; they are for the greater part men who have seen service, but been unfortunate, in that they have failed to obtain regimental promotion. The bestowal upon them of brevet rank will in some degree recompense them; the expense must of necessity be small, as the great majority must shortly retire, if not from choice, by compulsion. It is to be hoped that the new House of Commons will be urged by a sense of justice not to deny to the backbone of the regimental system the boon they ask. The senior captains of the Army deserve before they leave it some reward for having for nearly a quarter of a century borne the burden and heat of the day; their services in the Crimea, India, China, and in southern and western Africa deserve a general recognition."

QUARTERMASTERS AND RIDINGMASTERS.

"Justice" writes:—"I see by a paragraph in the Standard of the 13th inst. that the War-Office Authorities are contemplating the bestowal of the honorary rank of captain, after a certain period of service, on quartermasters, special reference being made to those in the Royal Artillery. I sincerely trust that the claims of the ridingmasters will at the same time be considered, particularly those in the Royal Artillery, a majority of whom, from their long service, on being commissioned are married and have large families, and who are infinitely worse off than the quartermasters, both in respect of pay and quarters, especially the latter."

AN UNJUST RULE.

"Major" writes:—"I thank you for having noticed the hard case of the Purchase captains promoted major after six months from Oct. 1, 1877. Major Warner's case appears monstrous, and my own, if wishing to leave now, would be much the same. As far as I can make out, I can get no pension till 41 years, which would be next April, and then only £215; while I must serve two years more to get as much as a Purchase captain, who was fortunate enough not to be promoted, can get at any moment if of 20 years' service. I never had the chance of availing myself of the benefit as a Purchase captain, for even counting boy's service (which was not allowed at the time), I had not 20 years till April 30, 1878, just a month too late. But why should my juniors now be able to retire on a much larger amount than I can? I fancy no junior ought to be able to get more than his seniors, unless it can be shown that the latter has neglected to avail himself of some advantage held out."

Naval Ordnance and Gunnery: a Text-book, prepared for the Use of the Cadet Midshipmen at the United States Naval Academy. By A. P. Cooke, Commander U.S. Navy, in charge of instruction in Ordnance and Gunnery at the U.S. Naval Academy. 1 vol., illustrated. (Trübner and Co., London; John Wiley and Son, New York.)—This work was undertaken by the instructors in the Department of Ordnance and Gunnery at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, to supply a deficiency which has long been felt. The manufacture of guns is first discussed, the work commencing with a treatise on the metallurgy of iron, or the art of extracting iron from its ores. Cast-iron, wrought-iron, steel, bronze, are severally treated, and their properties and qualities are fully discussed, to enable the student to understand what are the qualities necessary in metals for cannon. The manufacture of cast, built-up, and steel guns is then carefully explained, and the American, British, French, and German systems are compared. The principles on which guns are rifled, the methods adopted, and the various systems, are all classified and explained. The student is then led to study the different forms of projectiles used and in use, their various effects on different substances, variable projectile force, the advantages of one kind over another, and, in fact, all the phenomena which obtain in the science of gunnery. Gun-carriages are then fully gone into, and the advantages of mechanical carriages, such as the Moncrief, are well set out. A general consideration of explosives, followed by a description of the manufacture of various kinds of gunpowder and explosive compounds, will be found in Chapter viii. The following chapter is devoted to pyrotechny, including a description of the various means to fire cannon; fuses, signals, and the preparation of various kinds of ammunition. Having thus taught the student everything concerning the gun, its ammunition, manufacture, and attributes, Commander Cooke leads him on to study the practice of gunnery, and concludes a most able work with a chapter on "Naval Operations on Shore." This chapter is divided, like all the preceding ones, into sections. It opens with general considerations on the employment of a Naval force on shore, discusses the necessary preparations, the landing, the march, engaging the enemy, throwing up field fortifications, siege operations, surprises, sorties, and concludes with the retreat and embarkation of the Naval brigade. A list is appended to this work of fifty-three of the principal authorities consulted or quoted by the author, and among these are found many English standard works. The author has spared no pains to make his work what it professes to be, a thoroughly reliable text-book of Naval ordnance and gunnery, and there is no doubt that it should find a place in every Naval officer's library.

Capt. George Oldmixon, R.N., on the Retired (U) List, died at Super Valley, West Calne, Chester County, Pa., U.S.A., on April 8, in his 84th year. He was son of the late Sir John Oldmixon, and entered the Navy in June, 1808, on board the Bellona, 74, Capt. John Erskine Douglas. In the Bellona he witnessed Lord Cochrane's destruction of the French shipping in Basque Roads, and was present at the siege of Flushing in 1809; and subsequently, when attached to the Prince of Wales, he served on shore at the reduction of Genoa in April, 1814. After cruising six months in the Channel on board the Hope, 10, Capt. Henry Fyge Jauncey, he sailed for Jamaica as a supernumerary in the Warrior, 74, bearing the flag of his former captain, then Rear-Admiral Douglas. He was promoted, on his arrival, to a lieutenancy, June 1, 1815, in the Tanais, 38, Capt. Joseph James, in which frigate he remained until June, 1816. He was subsequently appointed, Nov. 10, 1842, to the command of the Megæra steamer, which vessel he unfortunately lost off Port Royal, Jamaica, in March, 1843; Jan. 12, 1844, as senior, to the Hecate, steam-sloop, Capts. J. P. Bower and J. West, employed at first on particular service, and next on the coast of Africa; and June 11, 1846, to the acting command of the Flying Fish, sloop, on the station last mentioned. He was advanced to commander Sept. 27, 1847, and promoted to retired captain Aug. 1, 1860.

Fleet Surgeon Edward Heath, M.D., R.N., on the Retired List, died at Dovercourt, Essex, on April 22. He served during the operations in the Yang-tse-Kiang in 1842, as assist-surg. of the Belleisle, and during the Russian war was employed as surg. in the Dauntless, 33, in the Baltic. He was afterwards, from Nov. 1858, until May, 1862, Surg. and Medical Storekeeper at Jamaica, and again served in the Dauntless at Southampton from Jan. 1863, until April, 1864, when he was turned over to the Irresistible, also at Southampton, and in Aug. 1865, joined the Frederick William at Queenstown, and remained until 1866.

The Morning Post says:—"Lady Wolseley has left town for a few weeks, when she will return to Fleming's Hotel, Half-Moon Street, to await Sir Garnet Wolseley, who is expected to arrive in England about May 25." Sir Garnet and his staff leave Capetown for England on May 4, by Messrs. Donald Currie and Co.'s Royal Mail steamer Conway Castle.

Epps's Glycerine Jujubes.—Caution.—These effective and agreeable confections are sold by most Chemists. By others, however, attempts are often made at substitution. We therefore deem it necessary to caution the public that they can only be obtained in boxes, 6d and 1s; labelled James Epps & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 48 Threadneedle Street, and 170 Piccadilly, London.

To Emigrants, or any one leaving Home for a Change.—Eno's Fruit Salt is of the greatest value to emigrants, not only in preventing sea-sickness, &c., but as a means of keeping the blood healthy under the ever-varying conditions to which they may be exposed. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

Mr. Weil, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

Amusements.

The Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has this week presented "The Huguenots," with the last act omitted, "Il Trovatore," and "Lucia di Lammermoor," no special feature of these entertainments demanding notice. This (Saturday) evening, Madame Albani appears as Amina in "La Sonnambula," her first appearance in that character for three years.

The return of Mr. Dion Boucicault to the Adelphi, after an absence from London of five years, has been accompanied by a very cordial greeting, and his performance of the roguish vagabond, Conn, in his own drama of "The Shaughraun," is characterised by all its old vivacity. The revival is now rendered attractive by some picturesque scenery painted by Mr. Julian Hicks, and by two thoroughly artistic embodiments presented by Mr. James Fernandez and by Mr. R. Pateman, who represent the venerable priest, Father Doolan, and the scoundrelly informer, Harvey Duff, with a noteworthy absence of exaggeration.

Even the sprightliness of the Gaiety company, now transferred to the Olympic, has failed to make Mr. H. J. Byron's latest perversion of a popular opera welcome as a valuable contribution to the store of theatrical merriment. "Trovatore; or, Larks with a Libretto" is a slight parody, framed in three scenes, to suit the requirements of those members of the company who have been so long identified with parts of a similar description. Miss Kate Vaughan is the travestied Leonora, Miss E. Farren Manrico, Mr. Royce Ferrando, and Mr. Edward Terry the Count de Lana, with a topical song, "Why shouldn't a gentleman marry his niece?" which elicited the only burst of hearty laughter heard during the evening.

"Cupid; or, Two Strings to a Beau," just produced at the Royalty, is a mythological extravaganza, depending entirely on the brilliancy of its accessories. The lively songs and dances of Miss Amalia and Miss Kate Lawler, as Cupid and Pysche, a ballet performed by figurantes, recommended by the possession of youth and symmetry, and some effective scenery painted by Mr. Bruce Smith, secured for the novelty a very favourable reception.

New Sadler's Wells is now in possession of one of the most powerful and interesting dramas presented on the London stage for many years. The freshness of its subject, and the originality of its treatment, deeply impressed the large audience assembled on Monday night, and a success has undoubtedly been obtained of a very notable kind. Not merely the play, but the entire company by which it is supported, comes from America, and for the last three years both the drama and the actors associated with it have acquired considerable popularity in the chief cities of the United States. Joaquin Miller's five-act drama of "The Danites," here represented for the first time in England, gives a vivid picture of life in California, as so ably depicted in the stories of Bret Harte. The title is derived from the name bestowed on the members of the secret society formed to avenge the death of Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism. Two fanatics of the sect, who, like the sons of Dan, have dedicated their lives to vengeance, have resolved to exterminate a family named Williams, and the interest of the story is derived from the cunning and relentless manner in which this purpose is pursued. Mary Williams, an orphan, and the object of their search, is played with great force and pathos by Mrs. McKee Rankin, the wife of the manager of the company and Mr. M'Kee Rankin delineates with graphic power a rough, good-hearted miner, who is the hero of the play. Each character—and there are twenty to be portrayed—receives the most careful interpretation from its representative; and Mr. W. E. Sheridan, who figures prominently as a savage gold-digger, whose heart is softened by the loss of his physical strength, displays histrionic ability of a very high order.

The gloom cast over theatrical circles by the sudden death of Mr. George Grossmith, the well-known lecturer and entertainer, while presiding at the weekly dinner of the Savage Club, will not soon be dispelled. Never was a man more missed from his accustomed haunts, and never was one more widely esteemed and affectionately regarded. Of this worthy gentleman, whose age was sixty-two, it may be literally said that he died surrounded by troops of friends.

Rowland's Macassar Oil is universally held in high repute for its unparalleled success in promoting the growth, restoring and beautifying the human hair. Sizes, 3s 6d, 7s; family bottles, equal to four small, 10s 6d.

Rowland's Odonto is the best Dentifrice for procuring White and Sound Teeth, Healthy Gums, and Fragrant Breath, being free from all deleterious and acid compounds. Price 2s 9d per box. Ask any Chemist or Perfumer for Rowland's.

(KNIGHT of the ORDER of LEOPOLD of BELGIUM and of the LEGION of HONOUR)

LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.

THE ONLY COD LIVER OIL WHICH PRODUCES THE FULL CURATIVE EFFECTS IN

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surgeon Army, Professor of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

Sold ONLY in Capsuled Imperial Half-Pints, 2s 6d; Pints, 4s 9d; Quarts, 9s; by all Chemists.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT & PILLS—Sudden changes of temperature sorely try all persons prone to rheumatism, sciatica, tic-douloureux, and many maladies scarcely less painful, though of shorter duration. On the first attack of stiffness or suffering in any muscle, joint, or nerve, recourse should immediately be had to fomenting the seat of disease with hot brine and rubbing in this remarkable Ointment, which will assuage the uneasiness of the part, subdue inflammation, and reduce the swelling. The Pills, simultaneously taken, will rectify constitutional disturbances and renew the strength. No remedy heretofore discovered has proved so effective as the Ointment and Pills for removing gouty, rheumatic, and scrofulous attacks, which afflict all ages, and are commonly called hereditary.

REPORT.—"I cannot speak too highly of the gold watch No. 17,179, of your make, and which I purchased from you in January, 1875. It was my constant companion during the winter 1875-1876 in the Arctic, and accompanied me sledging. It was about the best, if not the very best, in the 'Discovery,' and since my return home continues to perform equally satisfactory."

THE accession of Mr. Childers to the chair of the War Minister in Pall Mall gives the Army a change of bowlers, at all events. It occurs at a momentous period. At any time this country may be called upon to put forth her military strength in support of her rights, and in discharge of her treaty obligations. Highly as we estimate our maritime power, and prize the strength of the British Fleet and the skill and courage of British sailors, there can be no doubt that now-a-days Naval operations play a less important part in deciding the fate of international conflicts than they did, and navies can no longer starve out nations and dictate peace, as of yore. The unsatisfactory condition of the Army cannot be denied. Colonel Stanley's last admission concerning the waning of the Reserve gave additional force to the reasonable apprehensions which were expressed by so many of the witnesses before Lord Airey's Commission, that our military forces would prove inadequate to meet the strain of European war, or to enter upon any great contest with well-grounded hopes that they would be able to maintain the honour and renown of our arms. Mr. Childers is what is called a strong man. He dealt the Navy a blow which nearly staggered it and sent it under water, but he evinced a very creditable disposition to deal fairly with officers and men; and he also said a good word for the rights of soldiers, and showed an equitable spirit, in which Radical reformers do not always abound. He will have strong men around and with him, and we do hope and trust he will inquire with all his earnestness and force of will into the actual condition of the Army, and not let himself be hoodwinked by official reports,—that he will not be defeated by the elaborate contrivances of official artifice in concealing the truth. Let him ask the Duke of Cambridge, with whom he has already established the most friendly relations, what would happen if he were called upon to send out a corps of 30,000 men, with reasonable notice, to co-operate with an ally in some enterprise of war, and see how the whole edifice of Linked Battalions and Brigade Depôts would sustain the demand. Let him see for himself what the country gets here, and in India, for an annual expenditure of some thirty-two millions sterling on the Imperial and Indian Armies. Let him inquire how our battalions are filled, and how they are depleted; let him make a searching investigation into the working of the Short-service system, which we hold to be a delusion and a snare, unless it be coupled with conscription. It is too late now to lament over the angry and impetuous action which cost the nation, one way or another, some £20,000,000, or to go back to the system which achieved marvellous practical results, illogical as it was, and indeed indefensible in theory; but it is quite plain that we must at once set about the reconstruction of the Regimental system, if we would avert shame and disgrace. Zulus and Afghans, brave as they may be, do not furnish any measure of the sort of work an army would have to do in the field against European enemies, and Holland and Belgium are not many gun-shots from our shores. There ought to be at Aldershot now a complete Division fit for service. If Mr. Childers inquires into the state of that Division, or of any other, as regards the physical efficiency and discipline of the men, he may satisfy himself there is much to be done ere this country can be said to be in a position of security, or even moderate safety.

It was very gratifying to learn recently from so authoritative a source as the Senior Naval Lord, that the Admiralty watch with great interest the proceedings of the Royal United Service Institution, and look with favour upon those officers who come forward with papers on professional subjects. This assurance was certainly needed, for an impression had got afloat that their Lordships did not look kindly upon the efforts of officers who had read papers before the Institution, and that in more than one instance the action of a young officer in tackling a difficult subject had been looked upon as presumption on his part. Such old-fashioned views may by this time have been dispelled, as we sincerely trust, but there can be no doubt that there was good reason for the Navy to believe that any attempt at reviewing the state and condition of the Service, or any criticism on the ships given to the Service by the Constructor's Department, was resented by the Board. It is still remembered by the Service how a rising young officer had to withdraw a paper setting forth some of the needs of the Navy, as the Authorities at Whitehall thought that the reading of such a paper, (which would doubtless have had the support of the majority) would be next akin to a rebuke to the Board for not having done that which was acknowledged to be wanted. Thus it happened that after the lecture had been duly advertised, the subject was never discussed, but the officer withdrew it, on receiving an Admiralty hint. Again, we have but recently seen how the head of another department has resented the part taken by an efficient and zealous officer, in telling the world what was wanted in the way of surveying work. That there should be such vast expanses of water and lines of coast unsurveyed rather astonished the multitude, who never believed so much of the globe was in the present time unexplored, or at least, unsurveyed, and therefore unsafe for navigation. The result of that paper has been disastrous, for although a Lord of the Admiralty was in the chair, and the remarks met with his approval, the officer who had shown up the weakness of our Surveying Service was ever after viewed with suspicion by his chief, and was ultimately unexpectedly dismissed. With such examples of the consequences of venturing to open one's mouth on professional subjects, we feel that the declaration of Sir Cooper Key has not come a day too soon. Difficulty has been experienced by the Council of the Royal United Service Institution in persuading Naval officers to come forward and read papers. So far has the Service felt gagged and under the thumb of the seniors at Whitehall, that many an officer has left unsaid what he wished to say in the discussions, because he found a senior officer had taken an opposite view of the case, and to venture to differ with a senior might again be construed into "disloyalty to a senior." It is painful to have to confess as much, but after a few years of naval training, any semblance of differing from a senior, much less actually combatting his views in a public assembly, has to the naval mind the likeness of a crime. In the sister Service there is more freedom of speech, and where one Naval officer takes up his pen to write on a professional subject, ten of the Army ventilate their views on subjects connected with their profession. Sir Cooper Key ascribed the difficulty in inducing Naval officers to come forward with papers to that innate modesty for which the Service is so noted. But, after all, there is a kind of modesty which arises from the fact of a youngster being habitually told to "shut up," immediately he opens his mouth. The days are not so very far distant when the right to think was only allowed to senior officers, and the whole aim in life of every one else on board a ship-of-war was simply to do what he was told. As the education of the masses has progressed, so it has dawned, even upon the old school, that men are no longer the mere machines they were in days of old, but that they have the power of reasoning, and consequently greater latitude has been allowed to them, and their liberties have been increased. And now it would really seem that that ancient institution an Admiralty Board, is awakening to the fact that freedom of speech on professional subjects might, possibly, be for the good of the Service, and therefore Sir Cooper Key has been good enough to give an assurance that the gag is to be removed, and that their Lordships watch with interest the reading of papers and the discussion which takes place, and note with favour such officers as distinguish themselves on these occasions. We call special attention to this fact, knowing that an opposite impression has for so long prevailed; and we hope that Naval officers will now take courage, and in the compulsory idle hours of half-pay, they will turn their attention to subjects connected with their profession. By so doing, they must improve their own professional knowledge, even if they fail to evolve anything new to others.

In support of his allegations that the discipline of the troops in South Africa was not invariably all that could have been desired, Dr. Russell gave some specific instances of gross misconduct at Heidelberg, among other places. Sir Garnet Wolseley, without waiting till the matter had been carefully and exhaustively inquired into, wrote an intemperate, discourteous letter, flatly denying Dr. Russell's accuracy. This official contradiction, supported as it was by the Home Authorities, would have silenced most men; but Dr. Russell is used to official denials of truthful statements, and declined to be summarily shut up. Consequently, Sir Garnet Wolseley was obliged to really look into the matter. Among other steps, he caused his acting chief of the Staff to write to a Mr. Goodliffe, one of the leading inhabitants of Heidelberg, asking him to say what he knew of the robberies and burglaries alleged by Dr. Russell to have been committed by the troops Much, no doubt, to the surprise and discomfiture of Sir Garnet Wolseley, Mr. Goodliffe declares that on three occasions his poultry-yard was robbed by soldiers, who were twice caught and once seen in the act. On October 8, a detached building on his premises was broken open and robbed of a quantity of clothing and property. A portmanteau was found cut open near the King's Dragoon Guards' camp, and a soldier's helmet was discovered near the place of the robbery. On another occasion, in October, two parties of soldiers attacked Mr. Goodliffe's house, broke open a case, from which they took much property. Two of the soldiers were convicted, and sentenced to two months' hard labour, which they performed in uniform. Another was caught coming to join the thieves, and a fourth was seized by Mr. Goodliffe himself in the verandah. Mr. Goodliffe asserts that he has seen where the dwelling-house of the store next to his house was broken into, and property stolen. He adds that both the canteens were broken into, liquor being stolen from both, and money from one; and that a soldier was sentenced to hard labour for robbing a dwelling-house behind his, Mr. Goodliffe's, dwelling. These, he says, are some instances which have come within his own knowledge. He continues:—"I do not add statements of what I have heard, and of the complaints of the people in Heidelberg, and on the line of march hence to Pretoria. The Heidelberg church clock was stolen, but it was not traced by whom it was taken." So much for Dr. Russell's "transparent untruths" and "gross misrepresentations." Surely the least that Sir Garnet Wolseley can now do is to make him a handsome and public apology for the unfounded and discourteous denial which, in utter ignorance of the facts of the case and singular disregard alike of prudence and good-breeding, he permitted himself to indulge in.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh arrived on Wednesday morning in Galway Bay from Kilkerrin, where the Duke had been distributing some of the relief stores brought by the U.S. ship Constellation.

Lord Northbrook has assumed the duties of First Lord of the Admiralty, and has this week moved into the official residence at Whitehall.

Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., is, we are assured, to succeed Lord Clanwilliam at the Board of Admiralty, and Rear-Admiral Hoskins may be looked upon confidently as the junior Naval Lord who will replace Sir Edmund Commerell, V.C., K.C.B. Lord John Hay certainly has claims for his services in the Mediterranean, to which we recently referred, and as he has had experience of Admiralty routine, his selection will tend to keep the Board well together. Vice-Admiral Willes, C.B., has run Lord John very close as a candidate for a seat at the Board, and we cannot but think that that officer's claims for office or employment afloat should at once be recognised by a Liberal Admiralty.

We began to think that the chances of Mr. Thomas Brassey being given a seat at the Admiralty Board were getting rather remote, so many names had been mentioned for the post of Civil Lord, and the appointment of Parliamentary Secretary having been filled by Mr. Shaw-Lefevre last week. But all things come to one who waits, and Mr. Brassey has now been selected for the post vacated by Sir Massey Lopes, and we are sure that the Service at large will be more than pleased that Mr. Brassey has a place in the new Admiralty patent. The interest he has always taken in the sea service, and the pains he has been at to qualify himself as a seaman, have not been lost upon the Navy, and that would be sufficient to make the Service look kindly upon what has sometimes appeared like an excess of zeal, and the riding of hobbies. As Civil Lord, he will have opportunities of drawing closer his acquaintance with the Naval Service, and will doubtless be on the high-road to a future appointment as First Lord of the Admiralty.

Neither Captain Hopkins nor Mr. Clements Markham, who were both named as probable successors to the office of Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, have been chosen, Lord Northbrook having expressed a wish that Captain James Erskine, now senior officer on the south-east coast of America, should be called home to relieve Captain Codrington. Captain Erskine has not been fortunate in seeing active service, but he has made good progress in the Navy, and is now the youngest Captain, and the one who has been fewer years in the Service than any of those whose commissions date from 1868. But if he has not had the opportunity of winning decorations and rewards in active service, he has shown himself to be the possessor of tact—no small recommendation, for a First Lord's Private Secretary—and has won the praise both of the Admiralty and the Colonial Office for the manner in which some complications respecting the Newfoundland fisheries were handled by him. Indeed, so impressed was the Colonial Office that he was the right man in the right place in connection with those fishery questions, that it was asked that he might be reappointed to the North-American station for those duties, when he had returned to England and paid off his ship. In the meanwhile, however, the Admiralty had selected him for the appointment of senior officer on the Brazil station, and the request of the Colonial Office was set aside. We hope that this selection of Lord Northbrook may be found satisfactory to the Service.

Sir Massey Lopes, during his term of office at the Admiralty, has won for himself something more than a passing regard from those with whom the honourable baronet has been brought in contact; and so strong is the feeling of friendship towards him, that the unusual course of marking his departure by a presentation has been adopted. The relic of the old Victory presented to him, a box made from her timbers will, we feel sure, be treasured by Sir Massey Lopes as a memorial of his period of office as Civil Lord of the Admiralty; for in being given such a mark of regard by those officials of a public office over whom he has been called upon to preside, an especial and exceptional honour has been paid him.

The following would now seem to be the constitution of the new Admiralty Board:—The Earl of Northbrook, Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, K.C.B., Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B., Rear-Admiral Anthony Hoskins, C.B., Mr. Thomas Brassey, M.P.; First Secretary, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, M.P.; Naval Secretary, Rear-Admiral Robert Hall, C.B.

Mr. George Lambert, who acted as private secretary to Sir Massey Lopes at the Admiralty, will transfer his services to Mr. Thomas Brassey.

Mr. Alpin MacGregor, who was Assistant Private Secretary to the late First Lord of the Admiralty, will now assume the duties of Private Secretary to Mr. Shaw-Lefevre.

Commander Noel, who is a gold medallist of the Royal United Service Institution, and is now serving in the Royal yacht, has, we hear, been giving his attention to the development of a system of defence against torpedoes, and has laid his ideas on the subject before the Admiralty. We believe his proposals have been well received by the Board, and it is probable that experiments with his system will be tried at an early date.

The Admiralty has directed the crew of the Bacchante to be given a week's leave, to visit their friends after their cruise with the Royal Midshipmen. The conduct of the men at the various places of call has been most satisfactory.

Vice-Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour arrived at Malta in the Helicon on Monday, and will transfer his flag to the Alexandra, and take the ships under his command for a lengthened cruise along the European shores of the Mediterranean.

The number of Lieutenants of Royal Marines who will be permitted to transfer their service to the Indian Staff Corps has, we hear, been decided, and eleven only of the twenty whose names were sent in as candidates will be allowed to resign their commissions in the Royal Marines.

It is reported that one of her Majesty's ships has been ordered to La Guayra, for the protection of British interests, news having been received of the blockade of the mouths of the Orinoco.

At the request of her Majesty's Government, we understand that both France and Denmark will cause inquiries to be made on the coasts of Iceland and Greenland, for any news or traces of the Atalanta. The search in more southern latitudes has been thus far barren of results, and there is, we fear, little reason to think that the frigate heard of by the Salamis, as under sail in a heavy gale on April 11, was the Atalanta.

The three second-class cruisers which were ordered by the late Admiralty, and appeared in the shipbuilding programme for 1880-81, are to be named the Arethusa, Leander, and Phaeton.

From time to time we have reported the progress of the Sailors' Club at Bermuda, and have marked its successful establishment with pleasure. Our last report was that the necessary funds had been collected to make a start, and the occasion of the visit of the Bacchante, with their Royal Highnesses Prince Edward and George of Wales, was taken as a fitting one for the laying of the foundation-stone of the building, a ceremony which was performed by the sons of the Prince of Wales, as reported in another column. Money for the building fund has already been collected, and further contributions are required to enable it to be suitably furnished. By the time the builders have completed their work, we trust that the treasurer will be able to proceed with the furnishing.

It is satisfactory to learn that the crew of the Portuguese gun-boat the loss of which, off Barazuta Island, we recently reported, was saved, though the vessel was totally lost. The only hope of assistance was from Mozambique, but the Portuguese authorities at that place did not hear of the stranding of the vessel until nearly two months after the event, and by that time she had gone to pieces.

The system of discharging torpedoes from our large ships is not altogether perfect, for some of these weapons prove veritable divers. In home waters, not celebrated for their clearness, many a torpedo has been lost, and an instance of one lately discharged from the Invincible at Malta, going almost straight down and ramming its nose into the mud in eleven fathoms, explains how many have been irretrievably expended through not being discharged at the correct angle.

The Vestal, which was recommissioned at Zanzibar on January 1, 1879, has had her orders for Aden, en route to England, her recommission having proved a failure. From what we hear, not a man on board the ship regrets this, not so much because they are all naturally anxious to be home again, but because the ship is not noted for her being even comfortable, much less "happy."

The Admiralty, with a view to the extension of instruction in navigation and pilotage duties to junior officers, has decided that the provisions contained in Article 998, page 320, of the Regulations, to the effect that the navigating officer in each ship shall instruct the junior officers appointed for navigating duties in pilotage and the practice of navigation, is to be in future extended to all the junior Executive officers who have not passed their examination in navigation at the Royal Naval College. The captain of each ship in which junior officers are borne is to appoint one or two of such officers, for periods of from two to three months, to assist the navigating officer in his special duties, such as taking observations by day and night, finding the position of the ship, and the variation and deviation of the compass; taking observations when swinging the ship to adjust compasses; piloting the ship into and out of harbour, and in narrow channels; laying off the position of the ship on a chart; ascertaining the errors and rates of chronometers, and all other practical duties connected with navigation and pilotage. During the time that a junior officer is appointed for these duties he will not necessarily be exempted from attendance for instruction by the naval instructor, but the duties above specified will take the place of his ordinary duties, such as watch-keeping, boat duty, &c.

Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock has received a flattering address from the citizens of Kingston, on his paying his first visit to Jamaica. The address and reply will be found under the name of the Northampton.

The Navy List for May announces the deaths of Engineer W. J. Honeysett and Lieutenant-Colonel John Poore, R.M.A., and the following removals from the Active List:—Naval Cadet Walter Trevelyan, withdrawn; Temporary Service Engineer James Turnbull, resigned; Boatswain Joseph Tyler, pensioned.

The Bacchante having arrived at Spithead on Sunday evening with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George on board, the Prince and Princess of Wales, with Princess Louise, Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud, left London on Monday morning for Portsmouth, where they were received by General his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Admiral Ryder, and Rear-Admiral the Hon. F. A. C. Foley. On arriving at Portsmouth their Royal Highnesses embarked in the Fire Queen, and proceeded to the Bacchante, which they inspected, and after having lunched on board with Captain Lord Charles Scott, they returned to London, accompanied by Prince Albert Victor and Prince George. The Rev. J. N. Dalton is in attendance on the two Princes.

Commander Courtenay Hayes, who obtained his lieutenant's commission in 1862, and retired as a commander in 1873, is, we hear, a candidate for appointment to the vacancy for a Naval Knight of Windsor.

The American Arctic expedition is about to be succoured, some uneasiness as to the position of the Jeannette and some icebound whalers being felt. A U.S. Government vessel will be dispatched with stores, and will go in search of the ships.

The old Resolute, from whose timbers some furniture was recently ordered to be made for the President of the United States, to whom it will be presented by her Majesty's Government, is also to provide some furniture for the Queen, orders having been received at Chatham, where the old Arctic ship is being broken up, for some more of her timbers to be selected for this purpose.

The death of Commander John Monk, a lieutenant of 1814, is reported. This officer served in the boats of the Berwick at the capture of a convoy in Calvacie Roads in 1813, and was wounded at Algiers, he then being lieutenant on board the Impregnable.

Captain Arthur Wilson has established himself as a necessity on board the Vernon, so intimately is he acquainted with the duties of the torpedo ship and submarine warfare. His appointment as a commander dates from April, 1876, and he has now been re-appointed as additional captain, on promotion. When Commander Jeffreys, who is borne as additional, has been fully initiated into the work of the torpedo school, Captain Wilson will be placed on half-pay.

As the Conway Castle is a fast steamer, Sir Garnet Wolseley may be expected to arrive in London about the 26th of this month, when he will take up his appointment at the Horse Guards, after a few days' repose. The idea of a Zulu element in a South African Confederation, which Sir Garnet Wolseley is credited in the Cape papers with enunciating at his farewell banquet, appears to be quite fantastical and impracticable on any theory of representative institutions. But then the admission of the Transvaal would be almost as difficult, and notwithstanding the assurances and promises which reach us, we are but little inclined to believe that the day of Confederation is near at hand. When it comes, it may prove to be of very doubtful benefit to the Empire, and of small comfort to the natives, Kaffirs, Zulu, or Basuto. We trust some mark of favour may be in store for General Clifford, whose term of service in Natal was one continuous self-sacrifice and one energetic working-up of the personnel and matériel of every Department.

The Cape papers which arrived by this mail contain, we regret to observe, reports of far too many instances of Military crime to allow any friend of the Service to be content with the state of the troops in South Africa. Cases of using the knife, of burglary, assault, robbery, and larceny, are dealt with by the civil power, but the expressions of indignation in the local press at the frequency of these offences seem to demand the attention of the authorities at home, who are assured that the Army in South Africa is in the highest state of discipline and order. A correspondent of the Natal Witness, who signs himself "A Non-commissioned Officer, 3-60th Rifles," in a highly non-commissioned officer's sort of letter observes, "as long as the conditions of the Service allow a large sprinkling of our criminal population to find a refuge in our midst, we can never hope to free the Army from crime." All we can do is to give officers full power to punish crime, if we insist on their commanding "a large sprinkling of our criminal population." We believe if the blackguards were kept out, their places would be taken by men of good character, who are now deterred from the Service by their dread of such associations.

Considerable difficulty was experienced in filling the post of Military Secretary with a suitable officer. It was offered to Colonel Annesley and to Colonel Stanley Clarke; but these officers did not see their way to the advantages of leaving their present positions, and declined the honour.

An interesting experiment took place at St. Petersburg last week. The Uhlan Regiment of the Russian Life Guards rode without resting for 90 miles, the object being to test the endurance of the troops. On completing the 45th mile the troopers exchanged their horses for fresh ones, being allowed for this purpose just sufficient time to dismount and mount again. The entire distance was traversed in ten hours, and the condition of the men was considered at the end of the ride to be excellent. All the officers of the force, and one or two volunteers from other cavalry regiments, took part in the experiment.

The following officers, being the seniors of their respective ranks, may anticipate early promotion, consequent upon the steps which are about to pass to the Army, in succession to vacancies on the establishment of General Officers, viz.:—Majors J. H. Kirke, half-pay, late 19th Foot; B. S. Robinson, 89th Foot; E. A. Anderson, 18th Foot; G. H. Cochrane, 8th Foot; J. J. S. O'Neill, 20th Foot; J. L. Moore, half-pay, late 34th Foot (S.O.P.); C. E. Stirling, half-pay, late R.A.; J. M. Straton, 47th Foot; W. H. Rowland, 55th Foot; W. S. Richardson, 46th Foot; G. C. Bartholomew, 109th Foot; and C. H. Roddy, half-pay, late Ceylon Rifles; and Captains R. J. Callwell, 45th Foot; A. H. Josselyn, 9th Foot; N. Campbell, 79th Foot; T. C. Wray, 18th Foot; W. Thorburn, 21st Foot; the Hon. H. Legge, 9th Lancers; H. R. Stracey, 98th Foot—this works off the list of Captains of 1866; M. G. Taylor, 104th Foot; N. Montgomery, 41st Foot; J. H. Shaw, 108th Foot; E. Kerrich, 9th Foot; and W. Gordon, 73rd Foot.

Veterinary-Surgeon J. Lambert, the newly appointed Professor at the Veterinary School at Aldershot, will double the duties with those of Veterinary-Surgeon to the Staff, relieving Veterinary-Surgeon J. W. Callow, who has been attached to the Staff of the Division since June, 1867.

Calculating at the present rate of promotion, it would take about two years to work off the list of Captains of 1867—to give them all their brevet, that is to say. It will be seen from this what a serious effect the abolition of the Brevet will have upon the Purchase officers if the Clause in the Royal Warrant is acted upon, and promotion by seniority is discontinued from October 1. But we have hopes that the Horse Guards will represent the matter, and induce the War Office to cancel for a time a rule which would prove most disastrous to the future prospect of a large body of inoffending officers, whose bad-luck it has been not to have made headway in the Service, and who must be allowed to have suffered sufficiently already from the effects of the new system.

Captain M. F. Thrupp, 45th Regiment, is about to be placed on the Staff of the Division at Aldershot as Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, to succeed Major F. A. Le Mesurier, R.E., as Inspector of Army Signalling, Major Le Mesurier's five years in the appointment expiring on the 15th inst.

The appointment of the Marquis of Ripon to the Viceroyalty (ought it not to be the Vice-Imperilism?) of India may be taken as a proof of the belief in high places that whatever is is best. And we believe it will turn out to be a very good appointment. Hindoos and Mahommedans are not so very particular about the colour of a Christian's ribands as the Christians are, and Roman Catholicism, Anglicanism, and the "isms" of Greeks, Germans, Scotch, and Russians are to them all of the same hue, so that the Viceroy's religious tenets quoad Christianity are to them of no consequence. At any rate, if his Excellency were to be actuated by any undue influences in favour of his faith, the members of which have flourishing missions and schools in India, which owes to their evangelists and early missionaries its first knowledge of Christianity, the sturdy Biblicism of Colonel Gordon, who is a Christian of the Cromwellian type, would effectually neutralize the zeal of his chief. There is, however, little danger of any such exercise of forces being called into play. In Colonel Gordon the Viceroy has secured as Private Secretary a man of extraordinary experience, originality, and power. In his capacity of dealing with the people so unpleasantly numerous, all over the world, whom the English call "natives," Gordon is unrivalled, but he has hitherto worked without a master and on his own lines. According to the new system, the Military Secretary will have the control of the Viceregal Vice-Imperial establishment, and will not exercise the larger powers enjoyed or assumed by Colley or Baker. It seems to us that if a soldier of position is desired for the post, the maestro della casa should be discharged by the senior A.D.C., who ought to be selected ad hoc. Lord Lytton will, it is said, retire from the delights of Simla and the cares of Calcutta, without regret, if not with positive satisfaction, and will contentedly resume the life of culture and elegant abstraction in which he delights, leaving to his rugged Generals the accomplishment of the work of pacification within the lines of the scientific frontier, which will, no doubt, be effected when Roberts and Donald Stewart have killed the last Sirdar or bribed the last Ameer who can fight. The change of Government is what is vulgarly called a "sell" for Colonel Brackenbury, who had scarcely got into the Secretary's saddle ere he was dismounted.

We hope that one of the first acts of the new Surveyor-General of the Ordnance will be to examine into the claims of some of those officers "selected" for retirement on the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Ordnance, and we would direct his attention to the names of the two whose cause we have already advocated, viz., Commissary C. B. Knapp, of the Commissariat, and Deputy-Commissary W. C. Gordon, of the Ordnance Department. We cannot but think that to exclude officers of unquestionable experience and ability is to inflict a positive loss upon the Service, and that these two officers were experienced and able men the testimonials in their possession suffice to show. Then why shelve them on full pension, and pay others to do less efficiently work that they are in all respects able to perform? Is this wise? Nay, is it just either to the individuals themselves or the State, which is thus unnecessarily taxed?

Art and war go hand-in-hand in Russia. Bogolouboff, one of the leading painters at St. Petersburg, is stated to have on hand orders for battle scenes of the Russo-Turkish war which will take him five years to accomplish. Already the walls of the Winter Palace display the pictures of the war which he has painted for the Emperor since 1878. Another painter, Verestaguine, has just cleared £10,000 by the sale of a portion of his collection dealing with scenes of the same war. As for English connoisseurs, their attention is so occupied with grubbing about after the "Old Masters," that they cannot afford time to encourage our artists in the manner that wealthy noblemen and merchants do Bogolouboff and Verestaguine. In this respect, their patriotism compares unfavourably with that of Russians.

The recent Warrant on "Boy Time" appears on examination to be a masterpiece of official finesse, taking away with one hand what it gives with the other. As an example, a major who joined at 18, and has served seven years in that rank, with a total of 27 years' service, has, by the new Warrant, his pension reduced from £300 to £260 per annum.

It is notified that there will be 80 vacancies for the examination in July next for the Royal Military Academy. That will be nearly double the usual number. The last two examinations—those in July and December, 1879—were exceptionally severe ones, the lowest marks gained by the successful candidates being 4,000 in the former and 4,500 in the latter case. Age will prevent many lads who got about 4,000 marks at the last examination from competing in July next. As there are at this minute so many vacancies, we would suggest that some of these lads be taken into the Academy at once, as has been done on several occasions for Sandhurst. At the next examination in July, in all probability lads will be admitted with about 2,500 marks, or less, on account of the large number of vacancies, while those who obtained about 4,000 at the last examination are thrown out, though there have been unfilled vacancies at Woolwich since immediately after the last examination, in consequence of a double batch of cadets having been passed into the Army. The interests of the Service seem to suggest that the War Office should take a common-sense view.

There was a flaming exhibition of what the French call "chauvinisme," and the British of to-day term "jingoism," and the Americans "bunkum," in the Times on Wednesday, à propos of Mr. Whymper's climbing exploits on the Andes. There can be no doubt about the vigour of British cragsmen and climbers, but it must be remembered that in all ascents of difficult mountains there are guides and porters, on whose broad shoulders and stout legs fall much of the heat—or cold—of the day. Nothing is more ludicrous than the sight, not seldom seen at Chamouni or Zermatt every season, of some feeble youth swaggering about after his ascent of Mont Blanc or Mont Rosa, to the summit of which he was dragged and shoved by the "professional" Jacques and Pierre, who are placidly awaiting fresh jobs in the courtyard of the hotel. Mr. Whymper is an eminent and successful climber, and no one would more willingly render just praise to his agents and companions in exertion and danger than he would. The Times seems to be astonished that the citizens of Quito should not be agitated by the ambition to climb Cotopazi and Chimborazo, but surely the denizens of Printing-House Square are not always climbing the ball of St. Paul's. There is a big Ben on a deer forest, not far from Invergarry, round which many a wearied Saxon has crept, under the guidance of the stalwart forester. One of them asked the stalker one day, "How high is Ben Something?" "Andeed, and I canna preceesely say; it's well on three thousand feet!" "And what's on the top?" "And wha kens? There's jist nothin'. It would be a doited body wad gae there." The aspiring stranger went up, and was duly rewarded by what he found on the top, but the stalker could have done it with far less trouble, if he liked. Considering that Chilians and Peruvians are now engaged, with commendable energy, bombarding each other's cities and cutting each other's throats, it is rather absurd for our contemporary to take on itself to lecture "young South-American gentlemen" for "squandering their youth in careering about the streets."

The law on the French Staff has not yet been voted, and the probability is that this measure, which has now been under the consideration of Parliament and the military authorities, will meet with further delay, in consequence of the late Ministerial changes. In the meantime, Staff officers are being drawn from the superior military school; and we see in a notice published by the Journal Militaire Officiel, that "Lieutenants and Captains of all branches of the Service will be admitted to take part in the competitive examinations, without conditions of age, provided they can show that they have held the rank of officer for five years, and have served actively with their corps for three years."

The French military chaplains are to be done away with. They have only been in office a few years, and frequent complaints have been made of their meddling. They even went so far as to establish a kind of confraternity, in which privates found themselves holding a more exalted spiritual rank than their officers. In fact, the chaplains appear to have played the devil with the Service and its discipline. There were chaplains under the Restoration, when the power of the French priesthood was almost unlimited; but they disappeared with the fall of the Bourbons. They were not tolerated under Louis Philippe, nor during the Second Empire, and they only reappeared a few years back, when the Duc de Broglie was Minister, and had at his back a clerical majority. Matters have greatly changed since then, and the priests are being gradually deprived of all the hold they had upon the nation. It may be mentioned that General Farre refused to go as far as the Committee of the Chamber desired. He insisted that the military chaplains should not be driven from the hospitals, but he promised to keep a strict eye upon them. Some letters recently addressed by curés to colonels, on the subject of religious duties, have been published in the French papers, and their tone is certainly very overbearing. They have all the appearance of having been written by a superior to an inferior. One curé wrote to a colonel informing him of the wishes of Madame Ducrot, the wife of the General who applied for and received the Papal benediction before turning out for autumn manœuvres.

The small-pox appears to have been very prevalent among French troops in some quarters of late, and the fort of Vincennes has been severely visited by this scourge. We read a few days ago that, in consequence of the spread of the contagion, the Governor of the fort had determined to have all the soldiers and the workmen attached to the laboratories revaccinated, and that a calf chosen for this purpose had been secured. The calf is anything but a warlike animal, and it is difficult to believe in any calf, however patriotic, being able to preserve a garrison from the attacks of an insidious and terrible foe. By the way, a French mother wrote to the papers a short time ago to complain that during the bitter cold weather last month the authorities at the camp of Satory insisted on vaccinating all the young soldiers. As this lady remarked, vaccination is usually followed by more or less fever, and a more propitious moment might have been selected. She had parted with her son, she said, without a murmur, but that was no reason why his life should be needlessly exposed. At the moment in question, the French troops in camp were suffering greatly from the cold.

Trials with homing pigeons for military purposes will be resumed this year in Spain. They have been proceeding since 1878, with a view of testing the practicability of this means of communication in time of war, and of demonstrating its advantages and usefulness for the defence of the country. The Spanish Government introduced 56 pairs of the birds in February, 1878, at an outlay of only £102. It will be remembered that Prussia, at the close of the Franco-German war, spend £160 for 30 pairs. The pigeons were housed at Guadalajara, and separated into three sections, so as to prevent the spread of disease, eight pigeons having succumbed to various complaints soon after being imported. The birds introduced were employed solely for breeding purposes, and up to the present time 209 young pigeons have been reared. The young, on attaining the age of five to six months, undergo a preliminary training, as recommended by La Perre le Roo and Dr. Chappuis, their flight being then increased by degrees up to a distance of twenty miles. The results have been most satisfactory, only three birds were lost, and it is supposed that they were killed, for several arrived wounded by shot.

The new fortifications at Spandau are now nearly complete, forts having been constructed on the western, southern, and northern sides of the place. The fort on the eastern side, at Ruleben, in the direction of Berlin, has not yet been commenced. The statement of a London newspaper that the German military authorities were occupied with a plan of defence for Berlin, and that at least 20 detached forts were to be constructed round the city, after the manner of Paris, is without foundation. It was so far correct, that the authorities at Berlin had been discussing the best means of defending the capital, but a decision was arrived at that the defences ought to be of a temporary character, of earthworks, since the city is capable of easy defence, especially on the north and southern sides, the approach to which, owing to the marshy nature of the locality, is passable only along narrow avenues. The equipment of the larger fortresses of Alsace-Lorraine is being pushed rapidly ahead, and the Germans hope before the year is out to complete the girdle of forts round Strasburg. The works in connection with the principal fortress wall will require, however, at least three years to complete; so that it will not be till 1882 that the defences of Strasburg will be finished. At Metz, next autumn, the authorities intend to commence the construction of a fort on the Lower Moselle, near the locality of Saint-Elois. On the eastern frontier of Germany, the works in connection with the development of the defences are also approaching completion; at least, at the principal fortified points. At Thorn, they have been pushed on with such remarkable energy that they may be now considered as complete, and the same is the case with Königsberg. At Posen, out of nine forts and three intermediate batteries, the construction of two forts and one battery has so far advanced of late, that there remains only some internal work to complete them, and the engineers express their belief that they will be entirely out of hand by June. The remainder of the forts are to be finished by the beginning of 1883. Recently the attention of military circles at Berlin has been drawn to the defenceless condition of Upper Silesia, and the minds of critics have been much exercised by the fact that Breslau is almost unprotected against the attacks of open force. It seems extremely probably that the result of this agitation will be the erection of another first-class fortress in Upper Silesia. Both of the turrets intended for the defence of the permanent bridge across the Rhine at Hamm have been fixed in their places, and have received an equipment of two guns apiece. Similar ironclad towers have been erected on the coast defences at the mouth of the Weser, and others, in all probability, will be erected at other points along the coast. Just now the authorities are considering the advisability of establishing a naval station at Dantzig. Such a station, however, would only possess importance in the event of the man-of-war harbour being able to accommodate ironclad frigates drawing from 24 to 26 feet of water; whereas the Vistula has a depth of 18 feet, and at one place only 14, while the depth of the harbour of Dantzig itself does not exceed 17. The scheme, put forth a short time ago, for the formation of a man-of-war harbour at Lake Jasper, with a canal connecting it with the Vistula and an outlet of its own in the Baltic, is not at all a new one, having been proposed so long ago as 1867. But even in this case the difficulties cannot be regarded as removed. Lake Jasper lies on the left bank of the Vistula, outside the sphere of action of the guns of the Dantzig fortifications, and in the event of a man-of-war harbour being constructed there, it would be necessary, in order to preserve the ships from the peril of bombardment by an enemy besieging Dantzig, to surround the lake with a costly network of defences of its own. It is obvious that even the adoption of this latter project would not do away with the water-way obstructions mentioned above. This year, a fresh establishment has been added to the German Navy,—a torpedo college has been organised at Kiel. A decision has also been arrived at to add six more vessels to the German Fleet.

AN EXCHANGE OF IDEAS.

[Scene.—Aldershot, May 5, 1880.

An Illustrious Lady.—I have great pleasure in expressing to you, Sir Thomas, my very favourable opinion of the discipline and appearance of the troops. It is "perfectly impossible efficient instruction can be afforded to the men, under the circumstances" which the Adjutant-General has made known to me, but when I remember "the many difficulties which both officers and men labour under," it is not to be wondered at that I express my satisfaction at what I have seen.

Sir Thomas.—I thank your Majesty. Officers and men will feel deeply gratified for the expression of your gracious approval. It might appear to some captious critics that the Army was in a better state in "other days, when beardless boys and skeleton battalions were not the mainstay of the British Army," but all military authorities agree that everything now is as it should be. Your Majesty's artillery are the first in the world, for no one pays any attention to the fact that some of these foreigners have far more powerful pieces in their horse artillery and field batteries. They cannot touch us in marching past. The cavalry cannot be excelled, though I must admit the regiments are rather weak; and if the infantry be composed largely of boys, they are "our boys," and are preferred by eminent officers to "well-bronzed, stalwart, bemedalled men." Your Majesty will be glad to hear that only 37 per cent. of the whole strength of the Division are absent, and you will, no doubt, have observed a good deal of the unsteadiness which is characteristic of youth in some of the battalions, and—— The Illustrious Lady bowed. The division marches back to quarters.

THE COLONIAL FORCES AT THE CAPE.

(FROM A MILITARY CORRESPONDENT.)

The Colonial Forces for the defence of the frontier of the Cape Colony consist at the present moment of the following arms:—1. Cape Mounted Riflemen. 2. Cape Mounted Yeomanry. 3. Volunteers. The Cape Mounted Riflemen "is to consist," so states Act No. 9, of 1878, Cape Mounted Riflemen, "of such a sufficient number of fit and able men as Parliament shall from year to year provide for." The number now estimated for is 1,000. At the present moment, only one wing exists, of some 500 men, under Colonel Bayley, late 9th Regt.; but a second wing is in process of formation. In order to ensure efficiency in the corps, a Mutiny Act is imperative. At the present time, the men for any offence may be tried by the superior Courts of law in the colony, by the court of the resident magistrate of the district, or by a board of officers of the corps, and the right of appeal from his commanding officer's decision to that of a civil court, for even a purely military offence, is allowed to a man. This cannot be otherwise than fatal to discipline. Such a system may have been necessary hitherto, as the stamp of man holding the position of officer necessitated some court of appeal, the men having had no confidence in their officers, and still less in their decisions. Latterly more circumspection has been used in the selection of officers, and more still is needed, as from the peculiar service of the corps, necessitating the splitting up of wings into troop detachments, and even into smaller bodies, great powers and responsibilities have to be entrusted to troop officers. The Government would do well to secure the services, if possible, of Imperial officers, whose military training and habits of discipline, their freedom from all local interests and prejudices, would enable them to act independently of such and in concert with the Commandant-General, who is henceforth to be an Imperial officer. Great reform is required in recruiting for this corps. Not sufficient attention has been paid to the material forming the rank and file. Decayed gentlemen, always discontented and above their work, loafers, ne'er-do-weels, picked up without regard to their ages, characters, or other qualifications, have been enrolled. The class of recruits required is not to be found in the colony. Young colonists will not enrol, finding occupation and means of livelihood in commercial and agricultural pursuits. England is the only field. Some person who knows what he is about should be employed in England to enrol young men. This duty has, so it is believed here, been carried out by an emigration agent, and though the recruits sent out have been infinitely superior to those enrolled in the colony, they fall very far short of being what is required. By the present system, a man receives so much pay per diem, ranging according to his rank from 9s. to 4s. 6d. per diem, out of which he has to provide himself with lodging, food, horse, forage and stabling for horse, and clothing. It would be very much better if the men were provided with everything, and given a less rate of pay, which would go far towards checking intemperate habits, and would be conducive to health, as money now expended oftentimes on drink by the man would be then spent by the Government, in providing him good rations and clothing and sufficient forage for his horse. Now, as to the Cape Yeomanry. The sooner the three regiments of this most useless and expensive of forces cease to exist, the better. Colonels and staff selected for political reasons, officers commanding troops unable to complete their establishments, discipline alone conspicuous by its absence, failure in every operation undertaken, notably at Moirosi Mountain, so creditably and easily captured recently by the Cape Mounted Riflemen, supplemented by native corps, demand the conclusion of the farce of a Cape Yeomanry. Nor would it be possible, were competent officers selected, that this force could be efficiently reorganised. The yeomen of South Africa are too independent to bow to discipline and too apathetic in peace-time as to the defence of their country. At present, this force, or rather farce, costs the country a large sum of money, the pay and allowances of the three Colonels-Commandant amounting in the aggregate to £2,700, which would be better spent on the possible forces of the country, viz., the Cape Mounted Riflemen and the Volunteers. Finally, as to Volunteers—Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers, Rifle. Whatever prejudice there may be against this force, and such a feeling does exist, the country, being convinced that amateur soldiering runs away with much money, and fails to give the return as regards efficiency, it is an undeniable fact that the Volunteers, during the late war, went willingly to the front and did good service, and that had they been thoroughly drilled and ably commanded, would have rendered even more valuable service. Were it possible to maintain a standing Army in the colony, which is out of the question, as the country will not pay for it, there would be no need to utilise the services of Volunteers; and seeing that the Yeomanry has been such a fiasco, and that the burgher law, which, if properly administered, might be serviceable, has failed in all former wars to render the services expected of it, the Volunteers remain the only possible second line of defence. This force is certainly the cheapest, and if properly organised, encouraged in every way by higher capitation grants, and efficient drill instructors, might be made really effective. Great circumspection will, however, have to be used in the selection of officers, who should only be appointed in the first place or promoted afterwards, if in possession of a certificate of proficiency in drill from the Inspector of Volunteers, of whom more hereafter, either based on his own personal examination or that of a board of officers. If a greater impetus were given to the movement by the above measures, the Volunteer force of this country would increase rapidly in numbers. The organisation and supervision, and indeed, the command of battalions should be entrusted to Imperial officers, headed by an Inspector of Volunteers, upon whom would devolve the same duties as pertain to that office in England. The newly-appointed Commandant-General has hard work before him, for nothing short of complete reorganisation of Colonial forces will avail, and above all, must he put his foot down and insist upon his rights of independent action, effectually putting a stop to the interference of the Colonial Secretary's Office, Capetown, which has completely paralysed all previous efforts.

NOTES ON THE SIMLA COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

[FROM AN INDIAN CORRESPONDENT.]

It would appear from the delay in the publication of any official notice of it, that the Report of the Indian Army Commission has met with considerable opposition at home. Occasional items of its recommendations are alluded to and discussed in the Indian journals, and one of the Bombay papers published a short time since what purported to be a detailed résumé of the Report. It is, perhaps, needless to say that in this résumé there are some errors of omission and commission, although there is much in it that is substantially correct. Some of the recommendations invite comment, and the ventilation of them in the columns of an influential journal at home may not be out of place, and may be of benefit to the Indian Service. According to the résumé above referred to, the Commission appear to have condemned the civil employment of Military officers, and have recommended that officers accepting civil employment should resign their commissions. It is not probable that the recommendation has been couched in these hard-and-fast terms; or if it has, it is scarcely possible that it will be accepted as it stands. The example set by the War Office might be followed with advantage. An officer of the British Service may hold a civil situation for ten years, during which time he is seconded from his regiment, and it is not until the completion of that period that he has to elect between retiring from the Army and rejoining his regiment. There is no doubt that hitherto the employment of military officers in civil situations in this country has in some cases led to rather ridiculous results. Young officers appointed to the old Indian Army were not unfrequently taken into civil employ immediately on arrival in India, and they have risen to be General officers without having ever served with a regiment, or even learned the rudiments of drill. Their rank, or rather titles, are of course anomalous and misleading, but this is of little real significance, as they would under no circumstances be given military command, nor do they hold any while employed in a civil capacity. However, although there is no doubt that there is some necessity for regulations governing the employment of military officers in civil situations, there is no occasion whatever to rush into the opposite extreme, and arbitrarily to compel military officers to decline civil employment altogether or resign their commissions. Such a step would be both ungenerous and unwise. Provided that an officer has previously received a few years of sound military training, a subsequent limited period passed in some civil capacity is not calculated to lessen his competency as a soldier. There are unfortunately grounds for believing that some of those now at the head of the Army, are so illiberal and obstinately antiquated as to hold the belief that a man who spends a few years in exercising his brain and developing his mental faculties instead of devoting his attention to the continuous repetition of the details of musketry and the varied intricacies of the march-past, is not subsequently fit for military employment; but we may hope for the recognition of this fallacy, under the more enlightened administration of a later generation. Another point for consideration in regard to this subject is the footing upon which military officers in civil employ will be placed, if they have to resign their commissions. What Service will they belong to? Certainly not to the Army, having resigned their commissions. Is it proposed that they should come under the same regulations as the Covenanted Civil Servants, and will their claims to promotion be equally regarded? Officers of the British Service in civil situations happen to be mostly employed under the Colonial or Foreign Office; and when they are required to resign their military commissions in order to retain their appointments, they hold substantive positions in the Colonial or Foreign Service, and are entirely subject to the regulations of those services for pension, leave, and appointment or promotion in common with, and on equality with, the other members of the Services. It will be only fair, then, that the same rule should apply to India, and officers of the Indian Army who have to resign their commissions in order to retain civil appointments should be admitted into the Civil Service, graded with civilians of the same standing, and be recognised equally with them in all cases of promotion, &c.; and not be given to understand, as at present, that they may expect to be frequently superseded by junior civilians, in virtue of the training of the latter, without regard to merit or service. It will be observed that the Commission make no recommendation as to reducing the qualifying service for promotion to the rank of Captain. Their recommendations, indeed, point to the advisability of abolishing the system of promotion by length of service, but in the event of no action in that direction taking place, it would have been as well had they remarked on the comparative seniority of the Staff Corps subalterns. It is probable also that they would have done so, had they not been misled on the subject. The Horse Guards furnished them with a return, based on several past years, showing that the average length of service at which the British subaltern obtained his promotion was not under twelve years, and the Commission, therefore, did not see the necessity for introducing any alteration in the Indian regulation. This return of the Horse Guards, however, cannot be taken as a criterion of either the present or the future rate of promotion in the British Army. At present, the average length of service in which all the junior Captains of the British Army have obtained their rank is ten and a half years, and this average would be reduced to less than ten, were it not for some twenty-five or thirty regiments in which promotion since the abolition of Purchase has notoriously stuck. When the last Promotion Warrant has begun to take effect in these regiments a great change will take place, and it may be confidently asserted that in another two or three years the average length of service in which promotion will be obtained in the British Service will be under ten years. The present circumstances are a matter of universal complaint among the Staff Corps subalterns, and the hardships of the case are at once illustrated whenever there is any active service. The last two years' fighting in Afghanistan has been productive of many young captains in the British regiments, and they supersede senior subalterns of the Staff Corps in the command of detached parties, &c. (this is especially the case in the Cavalry), obtain all the kudos of successful action, and are in the way for brevet promotion, when their less fortunate brethren can obtain no rewards whatever. One omission in the résumé of the Report is a clause referring to the Staff College. It is believed that the Commission have strongly recommended that in the selection for Staff appointments, a preference should be given to officers who have passed through the Staff College. This is a step in the right direction. At present, there is no inducement to an Indian officer to go to the Staff College; in fact, he loses pay and service by it, and the letters p.s.c. are not considered any special qualification for subsequent Staff employ. Hitherto, there has been no competition for the two admissions to the College placed annually at the disposal of the Indian Service; but, provided that the question of pay and service are properly adjusted, the result of this recommendation will probably be an immediate rush of candidates.

A SCHEME TO RENDER THE NATIVE ARMY OF INDIA MORE EFFICIENT THAN IT IS AT PRESENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—According to the present régime, there are to each regiment of Native Infantry 7 European officers and 16 native officers, making a total of 23 officers holding commissions, in whose hands the interior economy, discipline, and well-being of a regiment rests. Now, considering the character of the Native Sepoy, with his conservatism and innumerable caste prejudices, and that Native officers have, with isolated exceptions, exactly the same ideas as the Sepoys, the present proportion of officers, European and Native, appears to my mind preposterous, and seriously subversive of discipline and efficiency. Although I say it is preposterous, I fail to see how this proportion can be effectually altered, whilst regiments continue to have 8 companies of an individual strength of under 100 rank and file; with only 7 European officers, 2 Native officers per company is, I think, certainly desirable. Therefore, in order to change advantageously the proportion of European and Native officers, I am of opinion that the companies of a regiment, both as regards number and individual strength, should first be altered. To do this the number of regimental companies should be reduced from 8 to 4, each having the following establishment:—2 European officers, 1 native officer, 1 colour-havildar, 8 havildars, 8 naiques, 3 buglers, 2 lascars, and 150 sepoys; 175 all ranks, not including six recruit boys. Each of these companies, composed as above, would be entirely independent, as far as its interior economy is concerned, to the other three companies; and would be capable of being employed on detachment duties, with the same completeness as a wing is in the present formation. Each of the 4 companies should have its promotions separate from the other 3, and in the case of the native officer of a company being pensioned, the man to fill his place should be selected out of the same company, and so on through the different grades. The accounts would be in the hands of a pay orderly, as at present, and who would be assisted by a writer who could write English, and would perform duties similar to a wing writer. A company on detachment would thus have its own separate establishment, and would be complete in every particular. With 4 companies as above, a regiment should have the following establishment:—European: 1 commandant, 4 commissioned commanders, 4 commissioned officers, 1 adjutant and paymaster, and 1 transport officer; total, 11. Native Commissioned: 1 jemadar-major, 4 jemadars, 1 jemadar schoolmaster; total, 6. Non-Commissioned Rank and File: 1 havildar-major, 1 transport havildar, 1 drill havildar, 1 drill naique, 1 drum-major, 1 tindal, 8 lascars, 4 colour-havildars, 32 havildars, 32 naiques, 12 buglers, 600 sepoys; total, 694. Recruit boys, six per company. Band separate, and as at present. The non-commissioned staff should be completely separate from each company establishment, and should in no way diminish its strength. In time of war, the regiment should be supplemented by 200 men, or 50 per company, in the manner proposed by Capt. Anderson, of the Bengal S.C. I think no one could say that 11 Europeans, with a doctor, were too many to watch over the welfare of over 700 natives; fewer under the four-company system would certainly be inadvisable. Each company commander would be mounted, and have under him a subaltern unmounted, with the official designation of company officer. He should have at least five years' service before being eligible for, and receiving the pay of a company commander, subject to passing a qualifying examination. On parade, the regiment would stand in 8 divisions, with each of the 4 companies divided into 2 sub-divisions, the first being commanded by the European subaltern on foot, and the second by the jemadar of the company. The rank of subadar would be abolished. The jemadar-major's duties would be a combination of those of the present subedar-major and jemadar-adjutant. The latter post I should do away with, thereby saving much needless trouble and formality. The combined duties would be quite within the capacity of one man, who should be selected for efficiency and trustworthiness, not long service merely. A jemadar of long service wouldd be more fitted for the charge of a company, in place of the necessarily active duties of jemadar-major. The jemadar schoolmaster should be required to attend every regimental parade as a supernumerary, and would only command a company in the absence of any of the other native officers. In appointing a non-commissioned officer to the colour-havildarship of a company, great care, I think, should be exercised, and he should be examined in drill and general qualifications by a regimental committee, before being appointed to the post, as he should invariably succeed the jemadar, on the vacancy occurring. Should he not be considered fit to fill the higher grade, another man should be immediately appointed to the colour-havildarship. The pay of the native commissioned grade might be regulated on the following scale:—Jemadar-major, 120 rs. per annum; two 1st grade jemadars, 80 rs.; two 2nd grade jemadars, 50 rs.; jemedar schoolmaster, 20 rs., staff pay. In place of quartermaster, I have written transport officer, a name I think, more suitable to the duties of the post. One of the causes of inefficiency is undoubtedly the system of appointing outsiders to fill the most important posts in native regiments. An officer to command his men successfully and intelligently must know them, and be acquainted with their qualifications. Now-a-days an officer is brought into a regiment from outside, to watch over the welfare of some two hundred men that he has never seen before; he cannot feel an interest in them, or they in him. If it is not fair to the officers concerned, how great the injustice to the men themselves to have a new man put over them every two or three years? Such a system is bound to make them careless and disinclined to work. The new wing-commander, not knowing anything of their real claims to advancement, will, very naturally, judge of their qualifications by their good looks and general outward appearance, which are both doubtless advantages, but ones that should be taken into consideration after their professional abilities have been taken into account. Regarding the appointment of native officers to a regiment, I think the idea of filling up vacancies by selecting and inducing well-to-do native youths to come forward as candidates, is beset with many difficulties. With such a conservative being as the native Sepoy, it would be sure to breed discontent. An educated youth, of good family, being appointed direct to a jemadarship, would require a most thorough course of training before being eligible for any sort of command. This training would certainly extend to a period of eighteen months, at least, during which time he could hardly be called a useful officer, and would be, in fact, an encumbrance to the battalion. If such appointments were made, a native military college would be necessary, the expense of which alone would render such a thing impracticable. Let a commanding officer choose his own native officers from the ranks of his regiment, and they will surely be better than any outsiders. The undue preponderance of native officers is, I think, the great defect. With a proportion of eleven combatant European officers and six native officers, as I have proposed above, I think the efficiency of a regiment would be, or ought to be, ensured. Above all, when an officer joins a native regiment, let him rise in that regiment alone, and let the post of commandant be the one, of all others, to be coveted and sought after. Let me remark, in conclusion, that should the four company system ever be adopted under the conditions above noted, the efficiency of native regiments would certainly be greater than it is at present. Care in giving promotion is the mainstay of efficiency. Let sepoys rise by their individual merit alone, and not, as is too often the case, simply by favouritism and a taking outward appearance.—I am, &c.,

MILITIA EXPENSES.

"Sterling" writes:—"In your impression of last Saturday you published a paragraph deprecating, from a pecuniary point of view, the hardships imposed upon young officers who enter the Militia for the purpose of obtaining a commission in the Army. As a Militiaman, I cannot allow such remarks to pass unchallenged, for if they are true, they must apply to one or two badly conducted regiments, and not to the majority of Militia regiments of the present day. In the olden days, there may have been "the roystering, dissipation, late hours, and champagne flowing like water," mentioned by your correspondent; but the Militia, like every other phase of society, has undergone a change since the days of our grandfathers, and there is too much real hard work for the regiment to get through during the short time it is out, to allow an officer, even were he so disposed, to indulge in those vices with which your correspondent seems to think the name "Militia" must necessarily be associated. I cannot see that the expenses of a Militia regiment are unnecessarily heavy, but as I much prefer facts to mere surmise, I have written to several officers in different regiments, and asked them to send me a bonâ fide statement of their expenses in connection with the Militia, and I shall have much pleasure in sending you the result, as soon as I have their answers. Militia regiments, owing to the short time they are out, must incur certain expenses with which the Line are unacquainted, such as the hiring of a mess-room, if they are not under canvas; but I shall be much surprised if the average of fees, subscriptions, &c., in a good Line regiment for one month is not as heavy as those of the Militia. The inevitable ball does not always come off; if it does, it ought not to cost each officer more than £5; and it is undoubtedly the best way in which a regiment can return the civility shown it by the county people. Would your correspondent have the Militia officer live upon bread and water for a month, and do away with all that good-feeling which ought to exist between the county and its regiment? His remarks read as though he would, and if so, he would at once destroy the principle upon which Militia regiments are founded. And allow me to observe that the Militia is not a force formed solely for the use of young officers who wish to pass into the Army. Nevertheless, those who do use it for this purpose are chiefly the sons of gentlemen living in the county, who take as much interest in seeing the regiment hold its proper position as your correspondent would in seeing it become a grabby, cold-mutton-eating regiment, without a spark of esprit de corps. Why should not a Militia regiment drive a drag to the Derby? Is a man not to go to the Derby because he happens to be in the Militia? Your correspondent is too vague, when he talks about fees, tips, and subscriptions, to allow of any refutation but by solid facts, with which I hope to confront him next week, for in nearly every regiment the colonel is too particular in protecting the pocket of his youngsters to allow expenses which are not necessary. If the officers were perpetually under the influence of big dinners and roystering dissipation, I do not think that the Militia could have earned its reputation for proficiency and discipline with which officers of the Line are always ready to express surprise and admiration.'

THE HALF-PAY PURCHASE OFFICERS' CASE.

"F. O." writes:—"As I know you sympathise with officers who have been treated with injustice, will you kindly permit me to state the treatment I have received from the Government consequent on the action of the Army Regulation Bill, as affecting officers who were guilty of the crime of being on the Half-pay List in 1871? I was by purchase promoted to unattached rank as a reward for active services, and the rules of the Service permitted me at any time to exchange from half-pay to either serve on full pay or retire, provided there was not more than five years' difference in age between the officers so exchanging. At any time, however, an officer on half-pay could realise the value of his commission, receiving the same from the Reserve Fund; but a year or two prior to the issue of the Bill, this permission was in a gazette suspended. After a time I decided, for private reasons, to exchange to full pay and retire. I tried to do so accordingly, and had I been permitted to effect this, I should have received a handsome bonus; but an objection was raised, and before I could make other arrangements, I was caught by the Army Regulation Bill, which not only deprived me of my over-regulation or return to full pay, but for a time threatened the loss of my regulation, as a clause in the Bill allowed only a certain number of half-pay officers annually to be permitted to receive the value of their commissions. But owing to certain representations, the iniquitous clause was cancelled. I made application accordingly to retire from the Service, minus my over-regulation, and in a few days I received a formidable document containing numbers of questions as to state of health, asking for the names of two medical men, also that of an intimate friend. In fact, I was treated exactly as if I were going to borrow money, rather than to receive back my own, which I had so foolishly lent to the Government at about 5 per cent. I eventually had to go before a medical board, and I received my money after a great struggle. I made an attempt for redress, and received a letter referring me to Clause 13 of the Army Regulation Bill, which I give you:—'13. No appeal shall be had from any decision of the Commissioners under this Act. And the Commissioners shall not be compelled by mandamus, injunction, or order of any Court to exercise, or abstain from exercising, any power conferred on them by this Act.' I would, in conclusion, wish much to know to what purpose the Reserve Fund, amounting to nearly two millions, was applied?"

The Army.

1st Life Guards left St. John's Wood Barracks on Wednesday, and proceeded to Windsor.

2nd Life Guards vacated their quarters at Windsor on Wednesday, and proceeded to London, where they have taken over quarters at Regent's Park. Col. Ewart had the honour of being included in her Majesty's dinner party at Windsor Castle on Saturday last.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue) left Regent's Park Barracks on Wednesday, and took over the new block of barracks at Knightsbridge. Mr. Edward Sullivan writes from Prince's Gate:—"Three years ago, an influential deputation of noblemen and gentlemen residing in the neighbourhood of Knightsbridge petitioned the Minister for War that the barracks might not be rebuilt on their present site, and that the neighbourhood might be relieved from the immorality and rowdyism that they asserted resulted from the presence of the soldiers. The petition was refused, but actually the result they desired was obtained; the barracks were pulled down, and for three years not a soldier has been quartered in the district. They are now rebuilt, and in a day or two a regiment of the Household Brigade will march in to occupy them, and the occasion offers a fair opportunity for comparing the present moral atmosphere of the district with what it was three years ago, when contaminated by the presence of a 'licentious' soldiery. Are there fewer public-houses and dancing-shops? Fewer disreputable loungers of either sex, who toe the almost invisible line that separates vice from crime? Not a bit of it. My own impression, from seeing the neighbourhood constantly by night and by day, is that not only has it not improved, but that it is actually worse than it was three years ago. I doubt whether at this moment there is a more unsavoury quarter in London, not for squalid misery, but for wilful vice; certainly I know none where so many public-houses are crowded into so small a space. In the 300 yards facing the new barracks there are no less than seven or eight public-houses, many of them very large ones; and in the neighbouring alleys, with an area of another 300 yards, 1 have no doubt there are as many more. All of them apparently are driving a roaring trade, and who are their customers? The soldiers quartered in the Knightsbridge Barracks and their friends? On the contrary, for three years scarcely a soldier of the Household Brigade has been seen in one of them; they are touts, horse-copers, horse-gamblers, household servants going and gone to the bad, waiters on the malevolent providences of the racecourse. It is not the military element, but the dregs of the racing community, that debauch the district of Knightsbridge; and in strict justice, it would be more reasonable for the commanding officers of the Household Brigade to petition the Government to remove their men from a district where the temptations to vice are so great, than for the residents in the district to petition for the removal of probably the most respectable element in it."

6th Dragoon Guards (Carabineers). Major Goldie has returned to duty as Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. at Army Headquarters, in India, from the officiating military-secretaryship to Sir F. Haines. Lieut. Massy, who had been at Cabul as orderly officer to his brother, the Cavalry Brigdr., accompanied Gen. Massy through the Khyber Pass to Peshawur, and then returned to join his regiment at Jellalabad.

8th Hussars. The will (dated July 13, 1876), with a codicil (dated Oct. 27, 1879), of Lieut.-Gen. R. de Salis, C.B., colonel of the regiment, late of 27, Ashley Place, Westminster, who died on March 13 last, has been proved by W. F. de Salis, the brother and sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000.

10th Hussars. The London correspondent of the Irish Times says:—"It is well known that Lord Ralph Kerr was in a very indifferent state of health when he left England some months ago to assume command of the 10th Hussars in Afghanistan, and the disasters which befel his regiment on the return march made a great impression on him, and for a time it was almost feared that his lordship would be obliged to seek a change of climate. All who know Lord Ralph Kerr will be glad to learn that he has been able to stick to his post, and that there seems every prospect of his retaining his command for the full period for which he appointed. He was promoted in May, 1876, and he has, therefore, a year to run." Lieut. Rose and 2nd Lieut. Allsopp have been invalided home from India. 2nd Lieut. C. G. B. Saunders died at Murree on the 29th ult. of typhoid fever. The deceased, who was a son of Col. Saunders, R.H.A., was 20 years of age, and entered the Army May 11, 1878.

11th Hussars. Capt. T. R. Silver, cornet on the Half-Pay List, and late captain and adjutant of the West Kent Yeomanry, died at Maidstone on the 3rd ult. The deceased served with the regiment in the Eastern campaign of 1854, including the affair of Bulganac and battle of Alma (medal with clasp and Turkish medal). He was promoted to a commission Nov. 5, 1854, and retired upon half-pay Nov. 10, 1856, in order to accept the Yeomanry appointment.

12th Lancers. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Russell, who has been doing duty with the Scots Greys, is to be attached to the 2nd Dragoon Guards at Dundalk until required to embark to join the head-quarters of his regiment in India.

14th Hussars. William Poole, late of the regiment, died on Wednesday unexpectedly at his residence, 92 Wynn Street, Birmingham, aged 95. He was engaged all through the Peninsular war, and though not present at Waterloo, marched on the battle-field on the following day. He had been for many years in receipt of a pension, and a few weeks since received a gratuity of £5 from a military charity.

16th Lancers. Capt. W. R. Corballis, late of the regiment and afterwards of the 17th Foot, died at Gormanstown Castle, Ireland, on the 1st inst., aged 42 years.

17th Lancers. The World regrets to learn that the recovery of Lieut. Jenkins from the bullet-wound in the lower jaw which he received at Ulundi, has been very tedious, and is by no means yet complete.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

A correspondent writes to us from India:—"By the death of Major-Gen. E. W. E. Walker, which occurred at Mussoorie on March 24 last, another old and meritorious officer of the late Indian Artillery has ceased to be borne on its rolls. Gen. Walker had been promoted but very recently, and is another instance of early loss of command by too rapid promotion from regimental colonel to major-general. He was nominated to the command of the Royal Artillery, Oudh Division, in Feb. 1879, and had to vacate in the February following. His services in the field began at a very early period. Owing to the temporary illness of his superior officer, he commanded a battery as a very young subaltern during the action of Chillianwallah in January, 1849, and was present also with his battery at the crowning victory of Goojerat, receiving a medal and two clasps for the Bengal campaign. In the year of the Sepoy Mutiny, being attached to Gen. Greathed s column, he took part in the dispersing and pursuit of the rebels at Agra, Oct. 10, 1857. He was present at the final relief of Lucknow, and served in the defence of the Alumbagh. Subsequently he was present at the attack on Fort Roohya, under Gen. Walpole, and throughout the operations in Rohilcund, receiving a medal and clasp and a brevet majority."

Lieut. O. Rowe is a candidate for the Bengal S.C., and has been appointed officiating squadron-officer 8th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

Col. C. Clarke (late Bombay) has been granted leave from India to England from March 11 to Sept. 10 next, on medical certificate.

When we heard from India, Capt. H. S. Higginson had been ordered to proceed to Cabul forthwith, reporting himself to the officer commanding R.A. at Peshawur.

The following farewell order has been published at Cabul:—"The Kohat mountain battery being about to leave the Force under the command of Gen. Roberts, he wishes to record his sense of the service rendered by Capt. Morgan, the officers, and men of the battery. Joining the Kurum Force on its first formation in 1878, the battery shared in the assault on Peiwar, where its gallant commander, Capt. Kelso, fell in action. The General has much pleasure in bringing to notice its excellent services at Shutargardan and in the operations in Dec. 1879, and feels sure the reputation acquired for accuracy and skill will always be maintained; his best wishes for the future accompany Capt. Morgan and the Kohat battery."

Major J. F. Meiklejohn (late Bengal) has been directed to proceed from Morar to England, with a view to his embarking for Bermuda to join No. 3 Baty. 10th Brig., into which he has been promoted.

Major R. F. Lowis, Comy. of Ordnance, 2nd Class, and Assist. to the Inspector-Gen. of Ordnance and Magazines, Bombay, has been appointed Comy. of Ordnance, 1st Class, Bengal, vice Lieut.-Col. F. V. Eyre, retired.

Lieut. T. V. W. Phillips, 8th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

The Times of India says:—"The number of mules purchased at Cyprus for the mountain batteries in India is 250 and the animals are now on their way to Bombay. The 5th Baty. 8th Brig. R.A., which should have been at Kandahar a month ago, is still detained at Poona for want of mules." The Bombay Gazette has the following:—"Lord Cranbrook was obliged, after all, to sanction the purchase of Cyprus mules for the 5th Baty. 8th Brig., R.A. It was a case of Hobson's choice with his lordship; those or none. They are expected to arrive here about the 25th inst., and will, we suppose, be sent on to Poona, where the battery is now practising with the mules and guns of No. 1 Mountain Battery, and working very hard to make itself efficient. The Cyprus mules will be a valuable addition to the Candahar Field Force."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Lieut. J. B. Sharpe has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

Amongst the portraits of interest in the collection now exhibiting at the Grosvenor Gallery, there is not one more interesting than that of the bust of Major Chard, V.C., from the chisel of Mr. E. G. Papworth (executed simultaneously with Mr. Butler's work for the Queen), from sittings given in the past few months.

A correspondent of the Times of India, writing from Killa Abdilla, March 24, says:—"The Naib of Quetta was removed from his appointment in consequence of his supposed (and almost certain) complicity in the murderous attack upon Lieuts. Hewson and Kuhnhart, of the Royal Engineers. You will, I dare say, remember that while these two officers were superintending some coolies' work, they were suddenly and without provocation attacked by some of the coolies. Lieut. Hewson was killed on the spot, but Kuhnhart, though badly wounded, managed to defend himself with stones, &c., until he was rescued by Capt. Scott, of the 5th Punjab Infantry, who received the Victoria Cross for his bravery. It is pleasing to European ears to hear that within an hour of this murder, when substantial proof was forthcoming that the Naib had connived at the crime, if he had not prompted it, Capt. Scott, with a company of his men, marched with fixed bayonets into the Miri, and turned him out of his stronghold, without so much as allowing him time to get together his household goods. Poor Hewson lies in the small graveyard of the station, within a hundred yards of the spot where he fell. A marble cross is erected over his grave, with this inscription:—'In memory of Lieut. J. T. Hewson, Royal Engineers, who was assassinated at Quetta, July 17, 1877. Friends, comrades, and brother officers have erected this cross to his memory.'"

Col. E. Belfield, from the York District, has been selected to succeed the late Col. Lovell, as commanding R.E. at Halifax, N.S.

Lieut.-Col. J. M. H. Maitland, lately serving in Cyprus, has been appointed to do duty at Aldershot.

Capt. W. A. H. Hare has left the Intelligence Department of the Horse Guards, where he has been serving for some time past, and has proceeded to Ireland for duty.

Capt. F. Q. Edmondes has been appointed to the command of the 20th Compy. at Chatham.

The 7th Compy. at Chatham (Capt. P. S. Reid) and the 24th at Aldershot have been constituted field companies.

Brevet Major W. P. Jones has succeeded Capt. E. Wood in the command of the 15th Compy. at St. George's Barracks.

The Morning Advertiser says:—"The following officers of the Royal Engineers have been specially selected for employment under the Foreign Office in connection with the delimitation of boundaries under the Treaty of Berlin, viz., Capts. M. T. Sale and F. R. de Wolski, and Lieuts. F. W. Bennet, J. J. Leverson, and V. H. Caillard."

We regret to learn of the death of Col. J. Lovell, C.B., commanding R.E. in British North America, which occurred at Halifax, N.S., on the 24th ult. Col. Lovell went to Turkey on service in March, 1854, and was employed surveying the position at Buysak Tchekmidji; was appointed a division engineer to the 2nd Division of the Army of the East, which he accompanied through Bulgaria and the Crimea. Was the Royal Engineer officer appointed to attend Sir George Brown and Marshal Canrobert in their reconnaissance of the west coast of the Crimea, previous to the landing of the Allied Armies. Landed with the Army at Old Fort, and was present at the affairs at the Bulganac and M'Kenzie's Farm, battles of Alma (mentioned in despatches) and Inkerman, and siege of Sebastopol, whence he was invalided while brigade-major Royal Engineers in Nov., 1854 (medal with three clasps, brevet of major, C.B., 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He entered the Army, June 14, 1841; became brevet lieut.-col., Dec. 15, 1861; lieut.-col., Jan. 5, 1864; brevet col., Jan. 5, 1869; and col., Aug. 3, 1872.

Grenadier Guards. Col. Clive, commanding the 3rd Batn., had the honour of being included in her Majesty's dinner party at Windsor Castle, on Saturday last.

3rd Buffs. Lieut. Tate, 1st Batn., a probationer, officiating wing-officer 6th Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., with effect from Sept. 17, 1878.

4th King's Own. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Stokes and Lieut. Bromley, 1st Batn., have arrived home from the West Indies in H.M.S. Tamar.

5th Fusiliers. Lieut. Williamson succeeds to the adjutancy of the 2nd Batn., vice Lieut. Cherry, promoted.

8th (the King's.) The Times of India says:—"The 8th Foot, which has spent the winter at the Peiwar Kotal, is reported to be in splendid condition, and over 900 strong. The 85th King's is also a fine regiment, 770 strong, and up to any amount of campaigning." "Nemo" writes:—"In a much appreciated paragraph in your issue of Feb. 27, you allude to some highly-deserving officers whose services during the Afghan war have been overlooked in the distribution of honours and promotions hitherto published. Permit me to mention another officer who has been also overlooked, and one whom I think you will consider equally deserving. I refer to Capt. Dawson (senior captain), 8th (the King's), who has served throughout the Afghan war as major, and is still doing duty in that position. He was second-in-command of his regiment at the capture of the Peiwar Kotal, as well as during the whole 'period of considerable peril,' when Col. Tanner commanded. A full knowledge of the circumstances of this case induces me to trouble you with this communication, which I believe your well-known love of justice will dispose you to excuse."

9th Regiment. Lieut. Cunliffe, a probationer, officiating wing-officer 4th Sikh Infantry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from April 18, 1879.

11th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. M'Causland, 1st Batn., is about to retire.

14th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Vanrenen, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

15th Regiment. The depôt of the 2nd Batn. is at Deesa, whilst the service companies are in Afghanistan.

17th Regiment. The London correspondent of the Irish Times writes:—"In connection with the death of Lieut. Wiseman, 17th Regt., some time ago, in Afghanistan, I learn on the authority of an officer just returned from India that a singular blunder occurred. During the infantry charge, just as Wiseman attacked the party who surrounded the large standard of the enemy, an officer rode up and ordered the 17th to retire. They did not do so immediately, but the order was repeated, and they then fell back, leaving behind poor Wiseman's body, he having been cut down just as he ran his sword through the standard-bearer's body, and secured the standard. Unfortunately for himself, the brave fellow had no revolver, and before he could recover his sword, he fell mortally wounded. The order for the retirement of the 17th did not originate with the General, and was a blunder. Scarcely had the movement been made—most unwillingly made by the gallant fellows who were pressing close upon the enemy—when it was countermanded; but the countermand came rather late, and although the 17th hastened to the attack, the enemy had begun their retreat, and the 17th were not able to overtake and close with them, as they had been doing when ordered to retire." Lieut. Peacock, 2nd Batn., has been appointed temporary aide-de-camp to Brigdr.-Gen. Brice, commanding the Poona Division, Bombay Army. Lieut.-Col. Boyd, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months.

18th Royal Irish. Major Toppin, 2nd Batn., has been appointed Commandant of the School of Instruction at Aldershot for officers of the Auxiliary Forces, vice Brevet Major Prince, 53rd Regt., who has left the station.

20th Regiment. The 2nd Batn. will be moved from Mullingar to the Curragh about the end of the month, for the drill season.

24th Regiment. The Irish Times says that "Lieut. Browne, V.C., who did such good service in Zululand with the Mounted Infantry, and travelled, perhaps, over more ground than any other man attached to the expedition, has been noted by the Cape Government for an appointment in the Colonial forces."

26th Cameronians. Lieut. Barrow is acting temporarily as military secretary to Lieut.-Gen. Warre, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army.

27th Inniskillings. We learn from Hong Kong that "March 17 being St. Patrick's Day, an anniversary dear to all lovers of the Emerald Isle, the 27th Inniskillings held high festival. As few duties as possible were exacted from the men, and generally throughout the military cantonment, the reins of discipline were slackened. At midnight the band of the regiment commenced by promenading Murray Barracks to the tune of 'St. Patrick's Day in the Morning,' the 'Sprig of Shillelagh,' and other popular Irish airs, afterwards visiting Victoria and Wellington Barracks, where they kept the neighbourhood alive till well on for gun-fire. At nine o'clock there was a voluntary parade of the Roman Catholics who desired to be present at divine service in the Cathedral in Wellington Street, at which a good number attended. During the course of the day several cricket and football matches were contested on the Garrison Parade-ground, and the day throughout was one of fun and jollity."

29th Regiment. Capt. Claremont is acting as A.D.C. to Lieut.-Gen. Warre, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, vice Capt. Spencer, 56th Foot, officiating as A.A.G. at Head-quarters, Bombay.

ROYAL MARINES.

The annual corps dinner of the officers of Royal Marines (Artillery and Infantry) is to be held at the Criterion on the 28th inst., when Gen. W. G. Suther, C.B., will preside.

Medals for long service and good conduct have been awarded Serjt. John Fairchild and Corporal James Saunders, R.M.A., and Bugle-Major John Elliott and Musician Alfred Wild, R.M.L.I.

51st Light Infantry. The following is an extract from a private letter dated Pezwan, March 26:—"Lieut. Thurlow and Lieut. Reid, of the 51st Regiment, were at Jagdalak Kotal, and were riding down to Jagdalak, three miles off, on the afternoon of the 22nd, when, about a mile from the Kotal, they were fired into by a party of Ghilzais. Thurlow was hit by two bullets, one through the neck and one through the lungs, and fell back dead. Reid's pony started off, but he pulled up and went back, getting there just as one of the Ghilzais arrived at the body. The man fired at Reid so close that six inches of his sleeve were cut away and his coat and jersey burnt. Nothing but his pony shying at the barrel of the gun saved him. He turned round and blew the man's brains out with his revolver. All this time 30 or 40 men were running down, firing at him, and seeing that Thurlow was quite dead, he galloped off to Jagdalak and got some men who brought the body in. They had nearly cut his head off; otherwise he was not much mutilated. Reid could not have behaved better. He rode back at the risk of his life, and only after seeing that he could be of no use, and having fired every barrel of his revolver, rode off."

53rd Regiment. Lieut. Hickman, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on medical certificate.

54th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Shiffner is about to proceed home from India, on account of ill-health.

56th Regiment is under orders of readiness to proceed to Aldershot from Parkhurst. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Huskisson is to be brought, on to the establishment to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Major Thompson to be commandant of the School of Music, Kneller Hall.

57th Regiment. We (Irish Times) hear that Col. Clarke, C.B., who is on leave of absence, is about to retire on half-pay, having accepted the appointment of commandant of the Local Forces at the Cape of Good Hope.

62nd Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Fryer, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed officiating wing-officer, 6th Bombay N.I.

66th Regiment. Qrmr. Jones has been granted leave from India to England for nine months.

68th Light Infantry. The Lahore paper says:—"Orders from Government were received the other day by the 68th Light Infantry at Meean Meer, for an overhaulage of tentage, camp kit, &c. This order was followed by another for the immediate purchase of 250 ponies for regimental transport, and Rs. 6,000 have been granted for this purpose. What is the meaning of all this? Surely the regiment cannot be moved now or for some months to come. A possible solution of the enigma may be that Government is going to try the experiment of having a permanent transport for English troops similar to that of the frontier force, and has selected the 68th Light Infantry for it."

72nd Highlanders. The Times of India has the following:—"Many of our military readers in England will learn with regret of the death of Brevet Lieut-Col. Clarke, 72nd Highlanders. The deceased officer was obliged to leave his command in Cabul in consequence of serious illness, and it was his intention, we believe, to proceed to England. On his way down to Bombay his illness increased, and he was obliged to stop at Allahabad, where he died on the 7th ult. Sir F. Roberts, on hearing the sad news, issued the following divisional order:—'The Lieutenant-General Commanding the Cabul Field Force announces, with deep regret, the death, at Allahabad, of Lieut.-Col. Clarke, of the 72nd Highlanders, from illness contracted on service in the field. Both when in command of a wing of the 72nd in the Khost Valley expedition and the regiment itself at Charasiab and the operations of December last, he rendered excellent service, and exhibited the same soldierly qualities which distinguished him in the 53rd Foot during the Mutiny. Sir F. Roberts is sure that he is but expressing the regret felt by all ranks of the Army at the untimely death of this gallant officer.'"

78th Highlanders. Lieut. Davidson has been appointed to the command of the Teethul Sanitarium for the summer.

80th Regiment. A correspondent writes:—"Allow me to point out an error in your article on the 'court-martial' of Lieut. Harward. He rode into 'Luneberg,' not 'Utrecht,' the latter place being at least 40 miles from that part of the Intombi River." The Natal Witness says:—"The 80th Regiment will embark in a day or two on board the Orontes. We have so frequently borne testimony to the unimpeachable character and gallant conduct of this regiment during its four years' service in South Africa, that we can only re-echo all that we have said, and that others have said, by way of recognition and regret. It is seldom that a regiment takes away with it so clean a record of orderly behaviour. The name of the 80th will be ever identified with the fortunes of the Zulu war during its most trying period. It fell to its lot to hold advanced positions like that of Luneberg, and to do escort duty, during the most critical months of the campaign, before reinforcements had arrived, and when naught but depression prevailed; but whatever duty it had to do was done zealously and well, We heartily wish bon voyage to Col. Tucker, his officers and men, and a fitting reception 'at home.'" The head-quarters and the service companies are expected to reach Kingstown to-day in H.M.S. Orontes.

81st Regiment. Capt. Jones, brigade-major, 3rd Infantry Brigade, Kurum Field Force, has been granted leave to Cashmere and the hills for six months from March 13.

87th Fusiliers. Capt. Ferguson has been selected for the adjutancy of the Leitrim Rifles.

95th Regiment will be conveyed over from Ireland in H.M.S. Orontes, which is expected at Kingstown to-day from the Cape, with the 80th Regt.

97th Regiment. On removal to the Mediterranean from Halifax, the regiment is to be stationed at Malta.

99th Regiment. Lieuts. Jones and Winter have arrived home from the West Indies in H.M.S. Tamar.

100th Regiment. 2nd Lieut. Carr, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed officiating squadron-officer 7th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

106th Light Infantry. Capt. Berwick has taken over the duties of adjutant of the 1st Durham Militia, in anticipation of his appointment being gazetted.

Rifle Brigade. Capt. Howard, 4th Batn., has been granted leave from India to Gibraltar for four months, pending his exchange to the 2nd Batn. As H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was driving from his residence at Bagshot to the North Camp, Aldershot, on Thursday, the horse shied at a waggon of straw, his trap was upset, and his Royal Highness was thrown violently out, as also was his servant. The shafts of the trap were broken off. In the fall the Prince was but slightly hurt. The accident happened close to the Tumbledown Dick Inn, from whence his Royal Highness procured a cab and went to the Camp.

1st West India Regiment. Capt. Bale, Lieuts. Apthorp and Marshall, and Qrmr. Nicholson have arrived home from the West Indies in H.M.S. Tamar.

2nd West India Regiment. Capt. Caulfeild and Lieut. Bond have arrived home from the West Indies in H.M.S. Tamar.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. Comy.-Gen. Sir Edward Strickland, K.C.B., has arrived in Dublin, and has assumed the charge of the Commissariat arrangements from the 1st inst.

Army Service Corps. No. 4 Company has arrived in Dublin from Woolwich, and will proceed to the Curragh Camp, for service during the drill season.

Medical Department. The following postings of deputy-surgeons-general have been ordered in the Bombay Presidency of India:—Deputy-Surgs.-Gen. M. F. Manifold, A.M.D., to the Northern and Mhow Divisions, head-quarters station at Mhow; G. Auchinleck to the Poona Division, head-quarters at Poona. The following officers have been appointed to do duty with the troops proceeding to England from India in H.M.S. Jumna:—Surgs.-Major J. Warren, W. Tanner, W. R. Kerans, W. Taylor, and G. B. Mouat. The Times of India says, "H.M.S. Euphrates, which has just arrived, reports the sudden death of Surg. W. J. Moylan, A.M.D., a promising young officer, from an epileptic fit, the day before the troopship arrived at Gibraltar. He was buried at sea next morning. His widow returned to England from Malta." Deputy-Surg.-Gen. Shelton, returned from Halifax, Nova Scotia, assumes the duties of Surg.-Gen., Aldershot, on June 11. His name will appear in an early gazette as Surg.-Gen. Deputy-Surgs.-Gen. H. Kendall, M.D., and W. A. Thomson are about to return from India.

Army Hospital Corps. Sir William Muir, K.C.B., Director-General of the Army Medical Department, visited Aldershot on Monday, and made an official inspection of the corps and a number of young medical officers who have been going through a course of instruction at the camp. The corps paraded in review order about 12 o'clock, and formed up on its parade-ground, under the command of Surg.-Major S. Moore. Sir W. Muir, who was accompanied by Brigade-Surg. H. T. Reade, V.C., the acting principal medical officer at the station, having arrived on the parade-ground, was received with a salute, after which the troops marched past. The young medical officers were afterwards tested as to their knowledge of stretcher drill, and the care of, and attendance to, wounded on the field. The Director-General expressed his satisfaction with the practical training and instruction which the officers had received. In the list of the passengers to Portsmouth by H.M.S. Tyne will be found the name of Lieut. of Orderlies D. Whitely, who proceeded during the season of 1878 to Cyprus, and under the direction of Surg.-Gen. Sir A. D. Home, K.C.B., assisted in successfully organising field and station hospitals for the troops in different parts of the island, during a period of great pressure and extraordinary sickness. We are correct, we believe, in stating that Mr. Whitely landed at Portsmouth in H.M.S. Crocodile with the hospital establishment of A Brig. R.H.A., from Bombay, at the close of the year 1876, after twelve years' uninterrupted service in Bengal.

Chaplains' Department. The Ven. Archdeacon H. Piers Wright, M.A., on the Half-pay List, has been appointed to the living of Greatham, near Petersfield, where he has been officiating since his return from Vancouver's Island. The rev. gentleman, who carried off the Durham University Essay Prize in 1836, and was afterwards Gisborne and Hale Scholar and Classical Prizeman of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, took his B.A. degree, and was ordained deacon in 1841 by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and priest in 1842 by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. After holding the perpetual curacy of St. Mary, Leeds, in 1845-1846, he in the latter year, became chaplain to the Forces, and was also chaplain to the Duke of Cambridge. Between 1846 and 1853 he served in the Ionian Islands, and from 1854 to 1856 he was principal chaplain to the Army in the Crimea. He was promoted for "meritorious conduct in the field," and obtained the medal and four clasps for Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol, the Turkish medal, and the Fifth Class of the Order of the Medjidie. He also has a distinguished-service pension of £100 a year. The Archdeacon was for some time stationed at Portsmouth. On entering the Retired List in 1876, he went out as Archdeacon of British Columbia. He is the author of "Recollections of a Crimean Chaplain;" "Story of Prince Daniel and Montenegro," 1857; "Letters to General Peel, Secretary of State for War, on Matters Affecting the Body, Mind, and Soul of the British Soldier," 1858; "Story of the 'Domus Dei,' of Portsmouth;" "The Church in the Army," &c. The gross income of the rectory of Greatham is £275 and a house.

MILITIA.

1st Durham Fusiliers. Capt. Berwick has arrived at Barnard Castle and taken over the duties of adjutant, pending his appointment being gazetted.

Highland Rifles. The regiment was seen on parade on the 29th ult. by Major-Gen. Hope, C.B., commanding in Scotland, who visited Fort George to inspect the 55th Brigade Depot. The General told Col. Ross, who commanded, that he had often heard of the Highland Rifles, and now that he had seen them, he approved of them in every respect. He particularly commended their steadiness, which he said could not be surpassed by any Militia regiment in the kingdom; indeed, he added that he had seen many Line regiments which were not nearly so steady as they had drilled that day.

South Cork. The regiment now training at Fermoy, under command of Col. Sir A. Warren, Bart., consists on parade of 3 field-officers, 6 captains, 5 lieutenants, 4 second lieutenants, the adjutant, quartermaster, 25 serjeants, 19 corporals, 7 buglers, and 678 privates. This is the first regiment of Irish Militia which has assembled for this year's training.

Leitrim. The adjutancy is to be filled by the appointment of Capt. Ferguson, 87th Foot.

The establishment of the 159 regiments of Artillery, Engineers, and Infantry in the United Kingdom ordered for training this year has in many cases been increased. Thus, in the Artillery, the Lancashire advances from 620 to 823, the Durham from 516 to 619, the Northumberland, from 516 to 619; and the Galway from 208 to 414. The general result shows an increase in this arm of 615 of all ranks. In the Engineers, the only change is an increase of two permanent staff serjeants in the Hampshire Submarine Miners, the total of the three regiments standing at 1,317 as against 1,315. In the Infantry, the additions are in the case of the 1st and 2nd Staffordshire battalions, which are raised from 679 and 678 to 903 and 902 respectively; the 1st Batn. Glamorganshire, from 903 to 1,126; the Cornwall Rangers, from 883 to 903; the 1st Batn. of the Hampshire, from 1,106 to 1,126; and the 1st Batn. of the Aberdeen, from 904 to 1,127. There is only one reduction, that of a major on the establishment of the Meath. Four regiments have the large establishment of 1,349 each—the 1st Batns. of the 4th, 5th, and 7th Lancashire, and the Nottinghamshire. Twenty-two regiments remain at 1,126 of all ranks, two at 1,127, two at 1,125, no less than 57 at 903, two at 904, and five at 902. The regiments for which it is contemplated to form second battalions are the Northumberland, East York, North York, 3rd West York, 4th West York, 4th, 5th, and 7th Lancashire, Glamorgan, Leicester, Wiltshire, Dorset, Hampshire, Berks, Aberdeen, Perth, and Edinburgh County.

It has been notified to the General Commanding at Aldershot that the under-mentioned regiments of Militia will undergo their annual training at the Camp this year, viz.:—The Royal Berks; the Royal Bucks, to arrive on the 31st inst., and encamp on Rushmoor; the Oxford, to arrive on the 31st inst., and encamp on Church Plateau; the 1st Royal Surrey, to arrive on the 31st inst., and encamp on Rushmoor Hill; the 2nd Middlesex, to arrive on the 7th prox., and encamp on Swan Inn plateau; and the Queen's Own Tower Hamlets, to arrive on the 21st prox., and encamp on Redan Hill.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

The Queen's Own Oxford and the Yorkshire Hussars assembled on Saturday last for their annual training—the former at Oxford and the latter at York—and were dismissed yesterday. The establishment of these two regiments for this year is fixed at 375 and 434 respectively. The Nottinghamshire (Sherwood Rangers) were dismissed at Mansfield on the 1st inst., the South Nottinghamshire at Bulwell on Tuesday last, the Leicestershire at Leicester on Monday, and the Suffolk at Bury St. Edmund's on Wednesday. Thirty-two regiments have yet to assemble. There is a decrease in the establishment of the Nottinghamshire (Sherwood Rangers) this year from 498 to 375 of all ranks, and an increase in that of the Wiltshire from 474 to 498.

The Indian Army.

2nd Bengal Cavalry. Major C. W. Campbell, second-in-command, has been appointed commandant, vice Wilkinson, retired; Major F. Knowles, second-in-command, vice Campbell; Major H. C. Kemble, squadron commander, to move up in grade succession; Major C. T. M. Higginson, squadron-commander, vice Kemble; and Lieut. M. K. Martin, adjt., vice Salkeld, dated Feb. 16, 1880.

9th Bengal Cavalry. Major J. L. N. Willis, squadron-officer, has been appointed squadron-commander, vice Sampson, resigned the Service; and Lieut. G. L. Garstin, from the 5th Bengal Cavalry, squadron-officer, vice Willis.

11th Bengal Cavalry. Lieut. F. H. R. Drummond, from 10th Bengal Cavalry, has been appointed squadron-officer, vice Burn, confirmed in his appointment in the Pay Department.

12th Bengal Cavalry. The Lahore paper says:—"We understand that owing to the very severe losses and hardships undergone by the 12th Bengal Cavalry, during the last 16 months it was on active service, the horses of the regiment are so greatly reduced as to be quite unable to take the field again for at least 12 months to come, and the Chunda fund is entirely exhausted. The regiment is at present on its way to Jhelum from the front."

16th Bengal Cavalry. The following temporary appointment has been approved by the Government of India:—Major A. W. R. Becher to officiate as D.A.Q.M.G., Rohilcund District, vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. Wolseley.

19th Bengal Cavalry. Major A. G. Owen has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

5th Bengal N.I. Lieut.-Col. E. Venour, second-in-command, has been appointed commandant, Major H. A. Lewis second in command, and Capt. C. H. Stoddart wing-officer and adjutant, in succession to Col. Barlow, retired. Major A. T. Davis has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

11th Bengal N.I. See 13th N.I.

13th Bengal N.I. A correspondent writes from Allahabad:—"The losses of the 11th and 13th N.I. are great; both together muster only 240 effectives. Of the 13th, 160 died in the winter, and 150 are now in hospital. The 11th losses are nearly as great."

17th Bengal N.I. Major T. Dawes, wing-commander, has been appointed second-in-command, vice Walker; and Capt. H. J. Barr, wing-officer and adjutant, wing-commander, vice Dawes.

27th Bengal N.I. Capt. L. J. H. Grey, Bengal S.C., late in civil employ under the Bengal Government, whose services have been replaced at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief in India, has been appointed officiating wing-officer. Lieut. A. E. P. Burn, supernumerary to the establishment, has been appointed wing-officer, vice Jackson, retired.

30th Bengal N.I. Col. T. Boisragon is, it is said, leaving India for good.

38th Bengal N.I. It is reported in the Punjab that the regiment is likely soon to be converted into a Pioneer corps.

3rd Hyderabad Cavalry. This corps, under Major Fitzgerald, was to have left Mominabad for the frontier on April 5. A wing of the 4th Cavalry relieves the 3rd at Mominabad. According to the Army List, the regiment has only three officers attached to it, and one of these proceeded on furlough in Dec. last. The staff of the regiment, therefore, consists of Major C. J. F. Fitzgerald as commandant, and Major H. S. Stewart as everything else. The armament of the regiment is as great a curiosity as its officering. Half the regiment may be said to be lancers, according to the popular report, but according to the Army List, its armament consists of smooth-bore carbines, pistols, and camel guns.

4th Sikh Infantry. Col. H. F. Boisragon has been granted leave to England, on medical certificate.

Bombay Medical Service. The Times of India says:—"Surg.-Gen. Hunter, whose retirement we recently announced, leaves Bombay for England to-day. As the head of the medical profession in Western India, Dr. Hunter rendered important service to the cause of medical science, and his retirement will cause a void in the Indian medical world not easily filled. His personal friends, medical and other, had a meeting the other day, when it was decided to commemorate his services in some suitable and permanent manner. An influential committee was appointed to raise subscriptions and draw up a farewell address, and was authorised to decide upon the form which the memorial should take. Dr. Lyon, Mr. Nanabhoy Byramjee Jeejeebhoy, and Dr. Succaram Arjoon were appointed hon. secretaries to the committee."

1st Madras Light Cavalry. The strength of the regiment proceeding to Jacobabad for service with the 2nd Bombay Division is 8 officers, 10 native officers, 269 men, 280 horses, 110 privates, and 470 public followers. This is at the rate of two followers for each sabre.

12th Madras N.I. A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writes:—"One word more in regard to Madras regiments, which are certainly suffering under a plethora of field-officers. The 12th Madras N.I. has one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, five majors, no captains, and one lieutenant. The 26th N.I. has one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, three majors, two captains, and one lieutenant. The 28th N.I. has one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, three majors, one captain, and one lieutenant; and finally, the 33rd N.I. has one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, three majors, one captain, and no subaltern at all. More and more does one's admiration increase for that almost perfect institution, the Staff Corps."

21st Madras N.I. We learn from India that Lieut.-Col. Rideout, 27th M.N.I., officiates as commandant 21st M.N.I. at Mooltan, vice Col. Scott, going on furlough.

33rd Madras N.I. See 12th M.N.I.

39th Madras N.I. The death, in Rumpa, of Surg. R. H. Robinson, who was in charge of the regiment, is announced. Surg. Robinson entered the Service in 1877, and has fallen a victim to an attack of malarial fever contracted in that feverish district.

Madras Medical Service. Surg.-Gen. Smith, late head of the Indian Medical Department in Madras, took farewell of that city on April 7, after a service in various capacities extending over 35 years. In his early youth (says a Madras paper) he saw some service in the Gumsur campaign, and served with a troop of Horse Artillery; but he was soon selected as a man of marked ability to proceed to the Presidency, and fill the office of Garrison Assistant-Surgeon, then conjoined with the Professorship of Anatomy and Physiology in the Medical College. In this office Dr. Smith remained for several years, and in his professional capacity, and as Secretary to the Medical College Council, he exercised a marked and decided influence on the medical education of the day. In 1854 Dr. Maclean resigned his appointment as Superintendent of the Hyderabad Medical School. The introduction of medical education in the Nizam's country had been so successful, that Lord Dalhousie paid Dr. Maclean the great compliment of asking him to name his successor. Dr. Maclean chose Dr. George Smith, the Madras anatomist, and the fact that he did so speaks volumes for Dr. Smith's repute as an educator and scientific man. Subsequently, he filled the office of Principal of the Medical College, and Professor of Medicine and Physician to the General Hospital. Changes and vacancies brought him to be Deputy-Surgeon-General in Mysore, and on Dr. Balfour's retirement he succeeded to the office of Surg.-Gen., Indian Medical Department. In all these responsible employments Dr. Smith's public services have been more than respectable, and deserve some recognition. If he has not been able to do all that his friends hoped for him in his latest and highest office, it has been for no want of a desire to benefit the Service. His last public act was to forward a spirited appeal on behalf of the members of his service, whose prospects of promotion have been injured by recent administrative changes. He leaves the country accompanied by the good wishes and respect of many of the members of the Department, and of friends outside his own profession.

3rd Bombay Light Cavalry. The depôt is established at Deesa during the absence of the regiment on field service.

1st Sind Horse. The depôt has been established at Jacobabad. Lieut. G. F. Francis has been confirmed in his appointment as adjutant.

2nd Bombay N.I. The depôt has been established at Poona during the absence of the regiment with the Reserve Division, Afghan Field Force.

3rd Bombay N.I. The depôt is at Sholapore.

4th Bombay N.I. The depôt has been transferred from Kurrachee to Surat.

9th Bombay N.I. The depôt is at Surat.

Bell, V.C., R.E., to be assistant-quartermaster-general; Capt. P. J. Maitland, Bombay S.C., 2nd Squadron Commander 3rd Sind Horse, to be deputy-assistant-quartermaster-general. The above posts will be tenable for five years, under the regulations which govern retention of appointments on the Staff. Two paid attachés to be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief, as required."

Sir Neville Chamberlain having represented to the Government of Madras the great scarcity of recruits and the difficulties to be met in obtaining them, even after every endeavour had been made, the local Government, the Madras Mail hears, has sanctioned the formation of two recruiting depôts for the Madras troops on field service in Afghanistan. One depôt will be formed at Trichinopoly and another at Vizagapatam. The Government have also, to facilitate recruiting, reduced the standard of height for native infantry recruits from 5 ft. 5 in. to 5 ft. 4 in., but retaining the chest measurement at 32 in. above the nipple and 31 below. Pensioned native officers will also recruit, and the civil authorities will render whatever aid they can to the military in seeking for recruits.

It is stated from Simla, according to the Central News, that a number of the proposals of the Committee on Indian Army Organisation do not meet with the approval of the Government of India, and that among others the reduction of the establishment of European troops will be strongly resisted by the highest powers.

The London Gazette of Tuesday last contained a number of despatches relative to the operations in Afghanistan. The principal of these is from Gen. Roberts, who sends to the Commander-in-Chief a minute account of the operations which took place in the neighbourhood of Cabul, in Dec. last, and concludes with these sentences:—"I wish to place on record my very high sense of the services performed by the troops under my command, and of the spirit by which they were animated. All and every night, in most severe weather, officers and men were at their posts, or sleeping with their arms in the immediate vicinity of the trenches, and each day fatigue parties were employed in strengthening our defences. Hardships and exposure were cheerfully borne, and I never for one moment doubted that when the assault should be delivered, it would be successfully and decisively repulsed."

The Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta on May 2:—"Owing to the aspect of affairs in Afghanistan, a reserve division of Bombay troops is about to be mobilised and sent towards the Candahar line, as soon as the transport is available. The division will be composed as follows:—D Baty. B Brig. R.H.A., F Baty. 2nd Brig. R.A.; 1st Scinde Horse; 2nd and 3rd Light Cavalry; 2nd Batns. 11th and 15th Foot; the 3rd, 9th, 23rd, and 24th Bombay Native Infantry; possibly, also, the 8th Native Infantry. It is rumoured in Bombay that Brigadier Wood, now commanding the Deesa Brigade, will command the reserve division."

Brigdr.-Gen. F. A. E. Loch, C.B., Bombay Staff Corps, commanding Aden Brigade, Bombay Army, has been granted furlough to Europe for six months, on medical certificate.

THE DISCIPLINE OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

"Senior" writes:—"During the present stirring times, consequent upon the General Elections and change of Ministry, the question as to the state of discipline of the Army has naturally fallen in abeyance for the moment. Having served in two branches of the Service, both at home and abroad, allow me through the medium of your paper, to make a suggestion, which, if acted upon, would, I believe, be for the good of the Service, viz., give the junior officers more power in time of peace, and then on active service, or in cases of emergency, the men under their command will more readily obey them. The whole organisation of the British Army was changed on the introduction of the Short-service system. There are, undoubtedly, good points in the new system, but on the other hand, there are very bad ones, the principal defect being the youth and inexperience of the non-commissioned officers. When the new order of things came into force, very slight alterations in discipline were made to counteract the evil effects of advance of so sweeping a character. If the privates in the Army are scarcely out of the nursery, and the non-commissioned officers were schoolboys, it is evidently necessary to rule them with a much stronger hand than heretofore. Habit is second nature; teach the young soldier, therefore, to obey implicitly whoever is in command, and do not bring him up under the belief that the colonel is the only man who can award him punishment. In the Prussian service, the company or troop officer is called the company father, and the men look up to him as such. In our Service, the private soldier looks down on the company officer, knowing as he does that the officer has no more power than a serjeant-major to punish him. In the Queen's Regulations, the amount of punishment which a company officer can award is anything under seven days' confinement to barracks, subject to the approval of the commanding officer. Surely captains of companies, who all have, or should have, from eight to ten years' service, are capable of awarding a small punishment of this sort without it being questioned. The punishment awarded is very often erased or reduced to a minimum, and the company officer on the next occasion allows crime to pass unpunished sooner than suffer the indignity of being jeered at by the men under his command. Is it likely that the soldier will look up to and respect the superior whom he is thus taught to sneer at? Teach the young soldiers to consider their troop or company officers as powerful as their colonel, then, when on active service, they will obey those officers, irrespective of their rank, and the habit of stern discipline will prevent them from committing the atrocities of which Dr. Russell accuses them, and which, under our present system, must be of daily occurrence when regiments are in the field."

Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1880.

THE gratitude of the country is due to the correspondent of the Times who, in his account of the Review at Aldershot last Wednesday, exposed the unsatisfactory state of the Army and the baneful results of Cardwellism. Sir John Adye and Sir Garnet Wolseley may talk till they become hoarse, write till they are tired, about the advantages of the Short-service and Linked-battalion system. Hereby they have had their rewards, but the fact remains that our Army consists of skeleton battalions, and our stalwart soldiers have been replaced by striplings in scarlet. A battalion so weak that all tactical instruction is impossible cannot, pace these political Generals, be considered an efficient unit; neither can any experienced officer in his heart prefer an immature lad to a fully-developed, thoroughly-trained soldier. On Wednesday last, the men were, many of them, unfit, from want of drill, to take their place in the ranks. The correspondent of the Times writes as follows:—"Von Moltke maintains that a soldier cannot be trained in two years, and even then, he insists on seven hours' drill daily. At Aldershot, the recruit, be he a genius or be he a dullard, must join the ranks within four months of his enlistment, and during that time he rarely, if ever, receives more than four hours' drill a day. Once in the ranks, his education ceases. He has become—Heaven save the mark!—a trained soldier, and must take his full share of fatigues, garrison duties, orderly work, guards, &c. The little he has learnt gradually fades from his memory, and when on great occasions he falls in with his company, his ignorance becomes marked, and his awkwardness spoils the appearance of his corps." The above pregnant passage deserves to be pondered over, both by the amateur military reformers who have done so much to destroy our Army, and by the military officials who have too weakly yielded to them. We endorse every word that the Times' correspondent says, with the exception of the sentence relating to training. We feel convinced that Von Moltke never said that a soldier could be trained in two years. He probably said drilled. For training, which means acquiring the soldier-instinct, at least four or five years are required; but for drill, one year is, in the case of an infantry-man, sufficient. Four months is, when we consider the time devoted to musketry and gymnastics, manifestly insufficient. Indeed, many commanding officers can probably mention instances in which they were obliged and, despite the Regulations, managed to keep a recruit seven or eight months at drill. As to the weakness of battalions, we learn that many on Wednesday were under 400, and the strongest could not have been above 500, or less than half the war strength. One regiment, on a certain day this month, paraded, we are told, under its Lieutenant-Colonel, for instruction in minor tactics. There were but 84 privates in the ranks. How can tactical instruction be given under such circumstances? Will our Military Nihilists kindly supply an answer? Bad, however, as was the case of the regiment above mentioned, we know of one much worse. A little over two years ago, a certain regiment fell in on morning parade without a single private dismissed drill being present. The weakness of the battalions at Aldershot, which, it may be noted, turned out "as strong as possible," is due partly to the low establishment; but another cause is the enormous deductions for men on guard, in hospitals, in prison, employed, and at recruit drill. The paper strength of the Division was, on the occasion of the review, 10,644 of all ranks, but there were only 6,728 under arms. The sick numbered 560, which gives an alarming per-centage due to the physical weakness and immaturity of our recruits. The 7th Dragoon Guards had actually 18 per cent. sick. In the winter of 1855-56 the per-centage of sick in the Crimea was, only 5 per cent. On guard there were 217 men, while those employed on other duties amounted to 1,644. This seems a large proportion, but amongst these were included schoolmasters and school assistants, firemen, military police, clerks, and grooms. The Pall Mall naïvely implies that the people responsible for these large deductions are commanding officers, and suggests that, as in France no men should be excused parade, save by permission of the General commanding. ' As a matter of fact, however, the commanding officers wage constant war with the Staff to prevent their men being taken away for work with the Engineers, orderlies for chaplains and Staff officers, clerks for brigade and division offices, and even for making and repairing croquet and lawn-tennis grounds. Certainly, however, the matter does need looking into; but even with more strictness in this respect, our battalions are, what with recruits, musketry and signalling instruction, &c., far too weak to render it possible to give them that tactical instruction which is so indispensable a part of modern military training.

We are authorised to state that H.R.H. the Prince of Wales will hold a Levée on the 31st inst., at St. James's Palace, on her Majesty's behalf.

The following is the composition of the Marquis of Ripon's Staff, as far as it has been settled:—Private Secretary—Colonel C. G. Gordon, C.B., Royal Engineers. Aides-de-Camp—Lieutenant E. L. Brett, Scots Guards; Captain Lord W. L. De la Poer Beresford, V.C., 9th Lancers; Captain E. H. Clough-Taylor, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers; Lieutenant C. W. Muir, Bengal Staff Corps; Captain F. O. Barrington-Foote, Royal Artillery; Captain the Hon. W. C. Wentworth-Fitzwilliam, Royal Horse Guards. Surgeon-Major John Anderson, Medical Department. Major the Hon. H. Wood, son of Lord Halifax, who has seen a good deal of service as special and Staff Officer, was offered the post also, but declined it.

Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Financial Secretary at the War Office, has appointed Mr. Ralph Dalzell as his private secretary. Mr. Dalzell has been holding, for some time past, the appointment of private secretary to Colonel Stanley, and was Mr. Bannerman's private secretary when he was at the War Office before as Financial Secretary.

The Earl of Morley, Under-Secretary of State for War, has appointed Sir Bruce Seton, Bart., as his private secretary.

Colonel Sir G. P. Colley, K.C.S.I., C.B., C.M.G., accompanied by Lady Colley, leaves England by the mail steamer Warwick Castle on Thursday next for Natal.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by General the Hon. J. Macdonald, is on a visit to his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, who has been entertaining a succession of distinguished guests at his hospitable head-quarters at Portsmouth. The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has quite recovered his attack of gout, and has been daily at the Horse Guards this week up to the day of his departure for Portsmouth.

We understand that Colonel Godfrey Clerk, Rifle Brigade, will probably be the Adjutant-General at Madras, as Sir Neville Chamberlain is desirous of his being appointed. No better officer could be found for the post, and those who are acquainted with the circumstances under which Colonel Clerk was prevented from passing the language examination, will fully understand the propriety of the extension of time and conditions which has, we believe, been accorded in his case for that purpose.

The appointment of Major-General Sir J. M. Adye to be Surveyor-General of the Ordnance was made—not as a pis-aller, for the gallant officer is second to none in the Service as a professional soldier, barring some technical crochets, but—as an escape from a trilemma, consisting of a choice between Sir H. Havelock-Allan, Sir A. Gordon, and General Balfour. We believe that it was decided it would be safer to incur the rage of the "still vexed Bermoothes," and the statistical energies of the Indian financier, than to pass over the gallant officer, who has hereditary and personal claims to consideration at the hands of his party, and that the letter offering the post to Sir H. Havelock-Allan was actually written, when at the last moment it was thought better to take an officer as yet new to Parliament, though not to military office, and so Sir John Adye, whose advanced views in military organisation are well-known, was pitched upon, no doubt to the detriment and regret of the students at the Military Academy. The readers of the Army and Navy Gazette do not need to be reminded of the long battle which we waged with Sir John Adye in support of the claims to fair trial of the breech-loading ordnance which he persistently opposed, although every nation in Europe of military experience or position had formally adopted it; but the gallant Surveyor-General has now seen the errors of his ways, and he no longer insists on the super-eminent and unapproachable merits of his muzzle-loading, "hardest-hitting, furthest-reaching, flattest-trajectoried," most armour-piercing, and most man-destroying artillery in the world, and we welcome him to Pall Mall with the most implicit trust in his desire and ability to carry out the work of the department on the lines laid down by Lord Eustace Cecil. The future of our Artillery is in his hands, and we trust that the experiments which are in the programme will be worked out to their legitimate conclusions.

General the Right Hon. Sir Edward Lugard, G.C.B., Colonel 31st Regiment, attains the age of 70 years on Monday next, when, according to the terms of the Royal Warrant, he should be placed on the Retired List. General Sir J. Hope Gibsone, Colonel 17th Lancers, becomes 70 on May 21st; and General H. Darby Griffith, Colonel 5th Lancers, on May 22. Thus seven officers become liable to retirement in the space of five weeks, Generals C. Crutchley, Sir E. Hodge, R. Budd, and Brook Taylor having, as we stated last week, reached the limit of age during the month of April.

Brigadier-General Dunham Massy was posted last week to command of the Brigade at Rawul Pindee. This was a compromise of what the whole Indian Press characterises as an act of unexampled tyranny towards that officer, and many of his friends say he should not have accepted such a conclusion, but have returned to England, and fought the matter out. However, men with grievances generally go to the wall, and in this country it is too much the habit for authority to support authority, irrespective of the merits of a case. We therefore think General Massy has shown himself a well-disciplined officer in obeying orders to resume a brigade command, which is as great an acknowledgment as could be expected from the Commander-in-Chief in India of the rashness with which he acted in condemning a distinguished brigadier, before accepting one word in his defence. It will be recollected that General Massy was summarily removed, not only from his command at Cabul, but also from his brigade in India. The Adjutant-General, Colonel (local Major-General) Greaves, with new-born zeal and a sense of fair-play, probably learnt in the Ottoman atmosphere of Cyprus, telegraphed to him to Cabul, when he asked to be allowed to make a defence, that it "was impossible to give him any command in India, as the case had been finally decided." The voice of all the officers of the Army in India outside a narrow clique, and the indignant demands of the Press for ordinary English fair-play, however, compelled the Commander-in-Chief and his Adjutant-General to listen to General Massy, and the consequence of a three-hours' interview at Umballa was a request to him to give up continuing his successful rejoinders to General Roberts's special pleading, and to accept a brigade. He will not be muzzled, but has accepted the Rawul-Pindee Brigade, which has been confirmed to him by the Viceroy, who is said to be utterly disgusted with the rashness and injustice of the Commander-in-Chief.

Captain W. E. Montague, 94th Regiment, has been appointed Garrison Instructor at the Cape of Good Hope.

The Distinguished-Service Reward, vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General J. W. Armstrong, C.B., has been awarded to Lieutenant-General J. M'N. Walter, C.B. General Walter served throughout the Kaffir campaign of 1846-47 as Adjutant of the 90th Light Infantry, and Field Adjutant of the 1st Division (medal). Served with the 53rd Regiment in the Punjab campaign in 1849, and was present at the battle of Goojerat (medal with clasp); also with a brigade on the Peshawur frontier in 1851-52. Served with the 35th Regiment in the Indian campaign of 1858-59; commanded the Arrah Field Force in the actions of Sirthooa, Bramineegunge, Rampoorperoiora Jemaon, and Kareesath; subsequently a Light Column in the operations in Shahabad, including the action before Nonoodhee (C.B., and medal). He joined the Army, July 31, 1835; became Major-General, March 6, 1868; and Lieutenant-General, December 21, 1878.

Colonel J. Nason, half-pay, late of a Brigade Depôt, has been appointed Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Northern District, vice Colonel C. F. T. Daniel, promoted to the establishment of General Officers.

Captain E. Barton, 27th Regiment, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Major-General E. W. Donovan, commanding the troops at Hong Kong, vice Lieutenant A. S. Drummond, Scots Guards, resigned that appointment.

Sir W. Sullivan has done good service in calling attention to the disgraceful state of the Knightsbridge district at night, now that the barracks have been unoccupied (and non-existent) for three years, and justly says that it is the officers of Household Cavalry regiments, condemned to such ruffianly associations, who ought to petition the Authorities to save their men from the contamination of the thieves—and worse—who haunt the place.

Sir G. Colley will not leave England till the arrival of Sir Garnet Wolseley, who may be expected about the 25th of this month, if the Conway Castle makes as good a passage as usual.

We hope that the artist who furnished sketches to the Graphic this week, of the Duke of Edinburgh's proceedings on the coast of Ireland, made a mistake in representing his Royal Highness as "visiting the United States' relief frigate Constellation" in a pot hat and a great-coat. Our American brethren, Republicans as they are, do not care for the Republican simplicity which has a soul above lace and buttons.

There was a very full attendance of Naval and Military officers at the Levée yesterday. The presentation of officers "by corps" is a great improvement.

Surgeon-General E. Gilborne, P.M.O. in Ireland, has been appointed to be P.M.O. at Malta, and embarks at once to take up his duties.

Lieutenant-Colonel Eaton, Grenadier Guards, has consented to submit to private view his collection of war medals issued to the Army and Navy, from the battle of Dunbar to the present time, at 168 New Bond Street, to-day, from 4 to 6 p.m.; and to the public on Monday next, when the proceeds will be devoted to the funds of the Guards' Industrial Home.

Having done its best in time past to back up the authors of the disorganisation of the British Army in their work, the Times now utters piteous lamentations over the result. The account of the Review by the Queen of the Aldershot Division, written by an experienced military critic, which was published in the leading journal on Thursday, was simply appalling. And yet the Duke of Cambridge gets up, as he reminded the Royal Academicians this day week, and repeats countless times each year the usual stereotyped phrases and comfortable assurances, that her Majesty's Army is in a most efficient condition, and that the country may rely on it with the utmost confidence for any duty it may be called upon to perform.

ATALANTA, Capt. F. Stirling. We have received the following from the Admiralty:—"H.M.S. Salamis has arrived at Berehaven, Bantry Bay. Com. FitzGeorge reports that no tidings were obtained at the Azores respecting H.M.S. Atalanta." Although private intelligence was received several days ago that the cruise to the Azores of the Channel Squadron was unsuccessful, its official confirmation has caused much consternation. Hardly any one now believes that the Atalanta is still afloat. Many relatives of the 320 men who were on board the training-ship have already adopted mourning, but the Admiralty will not obliterate the Atalanta from the Navy List, or stop half-pay, or put widows upon special allowance until something definite respecting her is discovered. The Secretary to the Admiralty has forwarded for publication copies of letters brought by the Salamis, which arrived at Berehaven on the 2nd inst. Admiral Hood, writing on board the Minotaur, at Fayal, April 25, says:—"The return of the Salamis to Fayal that morning, after communicating with the Islands of Santa Maria, Terceira, St. Michael, Graciosa, Flores, and Corvo, and visiting the Formigas Reefs, to endeavour to obtain information about the Atalanta; but nothing had been heard of her." The Admiral adds:—"If the Atalanta left Bermuda on Jan. 31, it is probable that when the gale overtook the Norwegian, the Atalanta was about three days ahead of her. Com. FitzGeorge was informed at Graciosa (as stated in his letter of proceedings) that on the 11th inst. a frigate passed that island in a heavy gale, steering to the north. She had no funnel, and was painted with a white streak and ports. It is my intention to sail to-morrow for Bantry. The ships will be spread during the passage, and keep a good look-out. I expect to arrive at Berehaven about May 7 or 8." The reports of the search are as follows:—"Salamis, at Horte Bay, Fayal, April 23, 1880.—Sir,—I have the honour to report that on the night after leaving Gibraltar, in pursuance of the sailing orders received from you, a very strong breeze was experienced from the south-west, with a heavy sea, and we had to lay-to for twelve hours. On the next day the wind shifted suddenly round to the north-east, and it again blew hard; and the starboard after sponson was found to have been loosened by heavy seas striking the ship. Being anxious to get to Santa Maria before dark on the 19th, I increased the speed, and at 7.30 p.m. we anchored at San Lorenzo Bay, and communicated with the shore. The landing was extremely bad, and had it not been calm weather it could not have been effected. At 4.30 the next morning we proceeded to Villa do Porto, remaining only sufficient time to communicate, and not anchoring. At 5.30 p.m. we arrived at Ponta Delguda, St. Michael's, and anchored for the night, leaving the next morning at 5 for Terceira, where we remained until 4 a.m. the following day, proceeding then to Graciosa and this place, and arriving at 4.30 p.m. yesterday. Before leaving for Flores and Corvo, I think it desirable to take in about 30 tons of coal, more expenditure having taken place than was expected, on account of the heavy sea experienced. We shall leave this afternoon for these islands, and probably return to Fayal on the 25th. At each place where there are English Consuls they were communicated with, and all information possible was obtained from the captains of the ports. Any wreckage that had been picked up was examined, but nothing that could have belonged to the Atalanta was found. At St. Michael's, the Para, one of the steamers of the Royal Mail West Indian Line, was lying in the anchorage with her screw-shaft broken, and was unable to proceed on her voyage to England without assistance. At Graciosa we were informed that a full-rigged ship, frigate painted, no funnel visible, looking like a man-of-war, had passed the island on the 11th, in a very heavy gale of wind, steering north.—I have, &c., (signed) A. FITZGEORGE, commander." "Salamis, Horte Bay, Fayal, April 25, 1880.—Sir,—In continuation of my letter of proceedings, dated the 23rd inst., I have the honour to report that I left this anchorage at two p.m. on that day, and called at Flores and Corvo the next morning. No news had been heard of the Atalanta. Wreckage was examined at both places, but none found that could have belonged to a man-of-war. At Flores, a Norwegian barque, Caspaer, was lying in a disabled state. The captain of her, Christen Hack, stated that he left New Orleans on Jan. 13, bound for Falmouth. On Feb. 3 he was north of Bermuda, in latitude 55 deg. north, longitude 66 deg. west; on Feb. 12 in latitude 42 deg. 43 min. north, longitude 39 deg. 25 min. west. While running before the wind he encountered the severest gale he had ever experienced. The ship would not steer, and could not be prevented from broaching to; she was thrown on her beam ends, and remained so for nineteen hours; the cargo of cotton keeping her afloat. Several ships were in sight at the time of the commencement of the gale, and were unable to lay to on account of its suddenness. The Salamis returned here this morning.—I have, &c., (signed) A. FITZGEORGE, commander."

AVON, Com. Keppel, which left England on July 2, 1876, for the Cape, and thence to the south-east coast of America, was paid off on Tuesday, and placed in the 4th Division of the Portsmouth Steam Reserve. A court-martial assembled on Monday for the trial of Mr. Henry Ollard, assistant-paymaster-in-charge, of the Avon, on a charge of having left his ship without leave when at Monte Video. On the evening of Jan. 12 the prisoner applied to Lieut. Anson, the commanding officer in the absence of Com. Keppel, for a boat to go on shore, but was told that he would not have one, as the ship was to get under weigh in an hour. The prisoner then chartered a shore boat, and left the ship. He did not return, and she sailed without him, but he telegraphed to Com. Keppel asking for instructions, and reported himself immediately to Capt. Erskine, senior officer, and joined the Avon two days afterwards. The defence was that he understood Lieut. Anson to give a tacit consent to his going on shore, and only refused to let him have a boat. An entry in the log showed that the prisoner had before been reprimanded by the Admiralty for a somewhat similar offence. The Court found the charge proved, and adjudged the prisoner to forfeit twelve months' seniority, and to be severely reprimanded.

BACCHANTE, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, having on board Prince Edward and Prince George of Wales, arrived at Spithead on Sunday afternoon, and exchanged salutes with the flagship of the Commander-in-Chief. Lord Charles Scott hoisted his pendant on board her in July last, and she left Spithead roadstead on Sept. 18. Having called in at Portland, she proceeded to Gibraltar, where she arrived on Oct. 6. On the following day she left for Port Mahon, where she arrived on the 8th, and remained there eight days, making next for Palermo, on the passage to which she encountered a very heavy gale, accompanied by thunder and lightning. On the 28th she got under weigh again, and reached Messina on the following day, returning on the 31st to Gibraltar, which she reached on Nov. 14. The departure from Gibraltar again on the 15th, and six days afterwards she put into Madeira, where she experienced such heavy weather that she had to change her anchorage. On the 29th she left for Teneriffe, and got to that port on Dec. 3. After a stay of three days she went on to Barbadoes, the passage taking 19 days. At that port the schoolmaster of the ship, Mr. James Sims, died, and was buried on Jan. 1 with military honours, Prince Edward joining in the funeral party. On Jan. 5 the Bacchante sailed for Trinidad, and arrived there on the 7th. Trinidad was not left again till the 20th. The Royal midshipmen made a visit to the pitch lakes. The next port at which the Bacchante called was San Fernando, on the 20th, and two days later she made for Grenada, which was reached on the 26th. On Feb. 2 a departure was made for Curaçoa, and this place was left on the 5th for Union Island. St. Vincent was reached on the 7th, and Château Belair Bay on the 12th, and St. Lucia on the 13th. Two days later an able-bodied seaman named Cowley fell overboard out of the port fore-rigging, and, striking the fore-channels, fractured both bones of his left leg. Several seamen jumped overboard to his rescue, and he was picked up. On the 19th the corvette returned to Barbadoes, and after sending Cowley ashore into hospital, proceeded to Martinique, whence, after a stay of four days, she made for Dominica. On March 7 she arrived at St. Thomas, and was visited there by Prince Waldemar. On the passage to Jamaica the young princes saw a couple of sharks captured, and while at Jamaica they visited Port Royal and other places of interest. On March 22 the Bacchante left for Bermuda, where she arrived on April 7, and was visited by Sir Robert Laffan and Vice-Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock. The stay at Bermuda lasted a week, but while at sea, on the 19th, she was caught in a gale, and had her foretopgallant-mast and one of her yards carried away. It had been anticipated that the Bacchante might have brought some tidings respecting the Atalanta, but until arrival at Spithead she had not heard of the prolonged absence of the Atalanta. Throughout the cruise the young Princes have enjoyed capital health, and have had excellent chances for acquiring a practical knowledge of seamanship, the corvette having been kept under sail whenever practicable, and her behaviour has even exceeded the favourable impressions which were originally formed of her. The young Princes slept in a cabin underneath the port side of the poop, and messed in the gun-room with the other middies. Wherever they have gone their genial manners have made them favourites, and at different ports they have attracted the admiration of hundreds and thousands of blacks, who are reported to have been hardly able to realise the fact that the sons of the Heir-Apparent undertook duties on board a man-of-war, and performed them admirably too. From Bermuda up to Spithead, the Bacchante had favourable weather. The Prince and Princess of Wales and the three young Princesses arrived at Portsmouth on Monday, and proceeded in the Fire Queen to Spithead, and went on board the Bacchante. Capt. Lord Charles Scott received the Royal visitors at the gangway, where the two young Princes were anxiously awaiting their arrival. The officers were on the quarter-deck, and the blue-jackets, as smart a crew as any officer could wish to command, were inspected by the Prince and Princess. After visiting the Princes' sleeping apartments underneath the poop on the port side, they having messed with their brother officers in the gun-room, Lord Charles Scott conducted the visitors round the ship, the condition of which elicited high praise from the Prince of Wales. Meanwhile, the Fire Queen went into harbour and returned with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Admiral Ryder, who were invited to join the Prince and Princess as the guests of Lord Charles Scott at luncheon. Afterwards the officers of the ship were presented by his lordship to the Prince and Princess. The Prince and Princess, with all their children and suite, left the Bacchante at a quarter after three, when another Royal salute was fired, and the crew manned the rigging, and gave ringing cheers for the Prince and Princess of Wales and for their Royal shipmates, who were very popular both with officers and men. When the Royal party reached the Fire Queen, the Royal standard was once more hoisted at the main, and the masthead flags displayed; and on returning into harbour the garrison battery and the Duke of Wellington, flagship, fired salutes. On reaching the Dockyard the Prince and Princess, with their two sons, left in an open carriage, followed in other carriages by the Princesses and suite and the naval and military authorities to the official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor, where the Royal midshipmen were warmly welcomed by the Princess Edward of Saxe-Weimar. After partaking of tea, the Royal party drove to the Harbour Station, where a considerable number of persons awaited their arrival, and left at half-past four by special train for London.

BELLEISLE, Capt. Barnardiston, arrived at Plymouth on Thursday from Kingstown, to have defects made good.

BITTERN, Com. E. B. Pusey. It is stated that some valuable marbles discovered at Jerabolis have been acquired for the British Museum, and will be shipped on board her Majesty's ship Bittern for conveyance to this country.

BOADICEA, Comdre. Richards, C.B. A telegram has been received announcing the return of the Boadicea to Simon's Town on the 23rd ult., the Comdre. having completed his round of visits on the West Coast of Africa.—Hampshire Telegraph.

CONTEST, Lieut.-Com. F. G. Moysey. The orders for the Contest are for her to leave Bermuda for the Newfoundland fisheries about the first week in May, and she will join the Druid and Flamingo at Halifax. The two last-named vessels were to leave Port Royal for this fishery duty about April 20.—Hampshire Telegraph.

DWARF, Com. St. Clair, left St. Helena on April 4 for Ascension. During her stay at St. Helena, the officers and men gave a theatrical performance at the Bijou Theatre, which was followed by a dance. The Dwarf also took a large party on a pleasure-trip around the island.

EUPHRATES, Capt. C. J. Brownrigg, arrived at Suez on Thursday from Bombay.

FLYING FISH, Lieut.-Com. R. F. Hoskyn, which has been specially fitted as a surveying-vessel in the China Seas, left the Medway on Tuesday, having previously been inspected by Vice-Admiral Sir R. J. Macdonald, K.C.S.I., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore. The Flying Fish relieves the Sylvia, which is under orders to return home.

GRIFFON, Com. Fred. Boardman returned to Barbadoes, with the Governor-in-Chief on March 22, and left again the same evening for Grenada, arriving there on the 24th. The Griffon left Grenada on the 26th for Tobago, which island she would leave on the 29th, and proceed in search of the Darien Rock, whose position on the chart is marked as doubtful. After this service she goes to Trinidad, and thence to Demerara, returning to Barbadoes on April 28.

GROWLER, Com. Charles Wilcox, homeward bound, arrived at Suez on April 26.

HECLA, Capt. Morgan Singer, is to leave Portsmouth on May 8 with officers and men awaiting passage to the Channel Squadron in Bantry Bay. She will call at Plymouth on her way.

HIMALAYA, Capt. H. W. Brent, will be moved out of dry dock at Keyham Yard into the basin to-day, to complete her repairs.

LIVELY, Lieut.-Com. Le Strange, arrived at the roadsteads, Galway, on Friday morning at half-past 10 from Cork. The Duke of Edinburgh came ashore at half-past 11. Capt. O'Hara was in waiting with a carriage and drove the Prince to the river, where he enjoyed good fishing up to 3 o'cloock. The Lively steamed out of the bay at 4 o'clock for Kilkerrin, where the Duke will superintend the distribution amongst the western islands of the supplies brought by the Constellation.

MALABAR, Capt. J. S. Grant. Instructions had been received at Portsmouth to prepare the Indian troopship Malabar for the service of the newly-appointed Viceroy of India, the Marquis of Ripon, and her annual refit, which had been taken in hand, was ordered to be deferred, only such defects being remedied as were necessary. The instructions have now been countermanded, and it is expected that the Viceroy will go to India in either the Jumna or the Euphrates, both of which are now on their way home from Bombay.

MARTIN, Lieut. A. C. B. Bromley, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

NAUTILUS, Lieut. A. Blennerhasset, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

NORTHAMPTON, Capt. J. A. Fisher, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir J. M'Clintock. When at Kingston, the following address was presented to the Commander-in-Chief by the Custos, members of the municipal board, magistrates, and citizens of Kingston:—"In common with our fellow-countrymen in all parts of the world, we hold in highest admiration and honour the distinguished services which you have rendered to the cause of science, as well as to the glory of the noble and gallant profession which you have adopted and adorned. The several Arctic expeditions in which you took such a prominent part fill a bright page in the naval annals of the empire; and men of the English race will in all generations remember with pride and gratitude the perseverance and zeal that you displayed in solving the mystery that so long involved the loss of the ships Erebus and Terror, and in thus discovering the fate of Sir John Franklin and his gallant companions. The assistance that you have given to Arctic exploration from the time that you served as senior officer of the Assistance in the Arctic expedition from February, 1850, until February, 1852, down to a very recent period, when, as Admiral Superintendent at Portsmouth, you acted on the Committee for fitting out the Arctic expedition under Sir George S. Nares, K.C.B., F.R.S., is to be regarded not only as a credit to the Naval Service, but as a series of precious contributions to the science and enterprise that have done so much to create and sustain the greatness and glory of the empire. If you will permit us, we wish to express our respectful appreciation of your private worth as well as of your professional distinction. We have a grateful remembrance of the humane and energetic action which you took during your sojourn here as Commodore of this station in relieving the suffering attendant on an epidemic of fever that prevailed at the time, and we do not forget the sympathy and interest which you ever exhibited in all measures and movements designed to promote the welfare and happiness of the community. We beg most respectfully to give you a hearty welcome to Jamaica, and we earnestly pray that you may enjoy long life and happiness in an illustrious career which has been full of honour, not only to yourself, but to the Sovereign and people by whom your distinguished services and worth are warmly appreciated and admired." To that address, the Admiral returned the following reply:—"Gentlemen,—The very flattering address with which you have honoured me calls for far more than any ordinary acknowledgment—indeed, I find myself unable sufficiently to express my deep sense of the high compliment you have paid me, and of the gratification I feel on receiving such a mark of your generous appreciation. I arrive in Jamaica at an eventful period, and served on throughout an unusually long and severe epidemic; public duties engrossed all my time and attention, and I can only say that I endeavoured completely to fulfil them—as required to do by the custom and traditions of that profession in which I have passed almost half-a-century, and I feel that to the Navy this high compliment, although addressed to me individually, is much more due than to myself. You have been good enough to review with great favour many years of my public and private career; I would that it were more worthy of your notice than I can admit it to be. Pray accept the heartfelt expression of my gratitude; and let me assure you that the great pleasure of revisiting Jamaica has been enhanced beyond measure by finding that I have here so many kind friends, and by receiving so hearty and so universal a welcome."

PENELOPE, Capt. H. F. Nicholson, flagship of the Duke of Edinburgh, which arrived at Chatham on April 24, is having defects made good, and is expected to remain for about five weeks.

PHŒNIX, Com. H. H. Grenfell, has been outside Plymouth Breakwater for a full-speed steam trial, and will leave for a ten days' cruise in the Channel to-day, prior to proceeding to the North America and West Indies station.

PLOVER, Com. H. B. Stewart, sailed from Bermuda for Spithead on the 15th inst.

RUBY, Capt. R. Molyneux, was at Zanzibar on April 4, and was to leave almost immediately for a cruise in the Mozambique, to assist, with Portugal, in the suppression of the slave-trade.

RUPERT, Capt. E. J. Pollard. A correspondent on board the Rupert, at Cyprus, writes to us, under date April 13, to call attention to the length of time the ship has been in commission. He says:—"She was commissioned at Chatham on May 25, 1876, and has thus been very nearly four years in commission, and there are no signs of her being ordered home, although out of the four years she has been away from England three years and eleven months. Almost every time I take up the Hampshire Telegraph, I find that ships commissioned long after the Rupert are ordered home. I certainly think that four years in a ship of this class is quite sufficient, if the health of the officers and crew is to be considered."

SEAFLOWER, Lieut. G. C. Higgins, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

SEALARK, Lieut. G. R. Bromley, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

SHANNON, Capt. John D'Arcy. A correspondent forwards the following extract from a letter from the Shannon, dated Callao, Feb. 1:—"The war still lingers, and is likely to do so, as Chili is not strong enough to force Peru into a peace by military occupation of the country. We have been here since November, and are all heartily sick of the place and station. It is to be hoped the Admiralty will remember the unfortunate officers and men of this ship, who have been bundled from one end of the world to the other. Leaving England with the Channel Squadron, expecting only to be away a few months, she was sent from Malta, at a few hours' notice, to Japan and back in the hot months, through the Red Sea and China, losing several officers and men from the climate, spending the winter in Besika Bay amidst snow and ice, and continually blowing a gale. Then, after leaving for England with the fleet, a steamer is sent after her, ordering the unfortunates to the Pacific, no stock, clothes worn out, no cooks or stewards, all having been discharged 'by order,' away is sent the unlucky Shannon to get yellow fever at Rio, gales of wind off Cape Horn, fever and dysentery at Callao. This is the reward of receiving praise for her order, and from both English and foreign squadrons, and the 'extreme gratification of the Lords of the Admiralty.' We are now enjoying the delights of a Peruvian summer, heat, fogs, and the most nauseous of smells, 'the Callao painter,' as it is called. Besides being out of clothes and stock, everything at famine prices, we have much sickness. No less than 16 officers have died or been invalided since commissioning, and surely no ship ever deserved to finish her commission more punctually than this. It is to be hoped the authorities will speedily order her to return or have her relieved. The only good (which may be called doubtful) her coming out has done is to allow the Admiral in the Triumph to go far away north, about as distant from Chili and Peru as if he were in England, or, it may be, the Admiralty."

SYLVIA, Com. P. Aldrich, has been rendering good service to an American merchant-ship, the St. Charles, laden with kerosene oil, which took fire at Hiogo. The St. Charles was towed into shallow water and scuttled, but the efforts to subdue the flames were futile, and all the rigging and upper works of the vessel were destroyed. Apparently nothing more could be done to check the flames, and after the vessel had been burning three days, she was sold with the cargo by public auction.

TENEDOS, Capt. E. S. Adeane, was at Barbadoes on March 26. The Lieut.-Governor of St. Vincent, Mr. Dundas, C.M.G., died ten days since, from congestion of the lungs. He was buried next day with full military honours, and was followed to the grave by the Governor-in-Chief, Major Geo. Strahan, R.A., C.M.G., Capt. Adeane, C.M.G., Com. F. R. Boardman, the officers of the Tenedos and Griffon, and the officials and merchants of the place. The body was borne on the field-piece carriage of the Tenedos, drawn by her blue-jackets, and the firing party were from the same ship. The church and graveyard were crowded in every part with people of all shades, and all denominations; indeed, the whole island "turned out" to pay a last tribute of respect to a much-loved governor, and a kindly, courteous gentleman.—Western Morning News.

TYNE, Com. J. E. Stokes, which sailed from Portsmouth for China on Dec. 8, 1879, on particular service, arrived in Plymouth Sound on May 5, having been 68 days from date of sailing from Hong Kong (Feb. 28 last), calling at the following places on the return voyage:—Singapore, March 5; Trincomalee, March 14; Colombo, March 19; Aden, March 31; Suez, April 7; Port Said, April 13; Cyprus, April 14; Malta, April 22; Gibraltar, April 29. This class of ship is described by men of experience in Naval matters to be thoroughly sea-going, and well fitted for employment on special service as a troop and storeship. The passage throughout has been a most favourable one, and the excellent arrangements made for the comfort of all on board reflect the highest credit on her commander and officers.

WOODLARK, Com. P. Johnstone, arrived at Gibraltar on April 26, and was to sail again for the East Indies on April 29.

WYE, Staff Com. H. D. Sarratt, has arrived at Deptford from Portsmouth, to discharge stores brought home from Gibraltar. She will shortly proceed to the Mediterranean.

The Admiralty has awarded medals for long service and good conduct to the following men:—Albert Daniels, colour-serjeant, Royal Marines, of the Tamar; Edwin Brown, able seaman, of the Indus; Charles H. Addiscott, writer (first-class), of the Cambridge; Joseph Kelly, yeoman of signals, of the Victoria and Albert; Robert G. Cluett, ship's corporal (first-class), and John Johnson, captain of maintop, of the Duke of Wellington; George Passby, armourer, of the Asia; William Ward, armourer, of the Lord Warden; George Blakey, chief boatman; Henry Nicholson, Charles Gallivan, Henry Haines, James Foland, and John McDonald, commissioned boatmen; Robert Trinder, Edmund Robinson, John Mills, T. Bancroft, and W. Scoults, boatmen, all eleven of the Coastguard.

The Dublin Town Council met on Tuesday afternoon and conferred the freedom of the City on Capt. Potter, of the U.S. relief ship Constellation, "as a mark of gratitude for the noble and generous assistance extended by the people of America to the people of Ireland in their need." The Lord Mayor presided, and shortly after he had taken his seat Capt. Potter, in the uniform of the American Navy, entered with his brother officers, the entire company rising to receive them. His lordship, in addressing the captain, observed that the Corporation had sparingly bestowed this honour, and there were but three names of its recipients preceding that of Capt. Potter—those of Mr. Isaac Butt, Mr. Gladstone, and President Grant. The Lord Mayor took occasion to say that the statement that the distress in Ireland was almost over was without foundation. Capt. Potter feelingly replied for the honour done to him as the representative of a country of which his lordship had spoken in such high terms, and the proceedings terminated. A large crowd outside heartily cheered the American visitors as they drove away in the Lord Mayor's carriage. A ball was given on Tuesday night by his lordship to Capt. Potter and the officers of his ship.

The important question as to what an engineer officer is to answer when he is hailed on coming off from the shore, has just been raised in one of the Indian troopships. It appears that an engineer had answered the challenge with "Aye! aye!" and thought he had a right to do so. There was nothing to be found in the Queen's Regulations on the subject, and everyone who was consulted could only give his idea as to the "custom of the Service." Thus it became necessary to refer the matter to head-quarters, and the Admiralty has laid it down that "No! no!" is the answer to be given by an engineer or anyone who is not a bonâ-fide ward-room officer.—Hampshire Telegraph.

A fisherman has picked up, off Sheerness, a large wooden-stocked anchor, marked "Terror." The anchor is supposed to have belonged to the ship Terror, under the command of the late Sir John Franklin. From its pattern it is evidently of English manufacture, and it must have been lost before the vessel sailed for the Arctic regions.

THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

THE RUSSIAN FLEET.

The Gulf of Finland is now free for navigation, and the naval season in the Baltic is setting in. Already great activity is prevails at St. Petersburg and Cronstadt, and the possibility of a conflict with China serves to stimulate the officials at the dockyards. The Baltic Practice Squadron this season will be commanded by Admiral Brummer, and will comprise the two-turret man-of-war Peter the Great, the three-turret ironclad frigate Admiral Greig, the two-turret Admiral Spiridoff, the 20-gun armour-plated batteries Netron-Menie and Kreml, the two-turret ironclad Smertch, and the monitors Bronenosets, Latnik, Edinorog, Peroon, Uragan, and Vesctchoon To the squadron will be attached the 12-gun wooden corvette Askold, the paddle-boat Ilmen, and a third tender, as yet undesignated. The training squadrons will be three in number. The first will consist of vessels devoted to artillery practice,—the 20-gun armoured battery Pervenets, the two-turret ironclad Roosalka, the monitor Lava, and the gunboat Stchit, commanded by Admiral P. A. Selevanoff. The second, or "mining squadron," will comprise the ironclad frigate Admiral Lazareff, the two-turret armour-clad Tcharodaika, the clippers Jemtchoog and Eezoomrood, the screw-boat Opeet, the sea-going torpedo-boat Vzreef, and the torpedo-boats Filin, Strela, Rachet, Shtik, Soodak, Voron, Kasalka, and Drakon; the commander being Rear-Admiral K. P. Pilkin. The third squadron will be devoted to the training of the lads of the sea and technical schools, and will be composed of the steam corvettes Variag and Bogateer, the sailing corvettes Giliak and Boyarin, the schooner Zabava, the tender Cadet, and a gunboat; Captain V. A. Brilkin will be in command. Besides the mining squadron referred to, there will be three torpedo squadrons, consisting in all of fifty torpedo cutters, which will manœuvre during the summer in the Gulf of Finland. The commanders of these squadrons, as well as the leading officers, remain to be selected by the Government. For survey service in the Abo and Aland Channels are fixed the gunboats Otlin, Kartetch, Grom, Koptchik, and Ersh. The vessels designated for service abroad comprise the wooden screw frigate Svetlana, which will proceed in the spring to the Mediterranean, and the armour-clad frigate General Admiral, the Atlantic cruiser Zabiaka, and the recently-constructed clipper Plastoon, designated for the naval station in the Pacific. On the other hand, the clipper Kreutzer will return home from Vladivostock, and the 10-gun ironclad frigate Prince Pojarsky from the Mediterranean, unless events cause them to be retained for service in Chinese waters during the summer. The statements that the whole of the Atlantic cruisers and several men-of-war besides those mentioned above have received orders to proceed to the Pacific, must be accepted with due reserve. At least, so far as we have been able to ascertain, their despatch to the Pacific has not yet been decided upon by the Russian Admiralty authorities. With regard to the Black Sea Fleet, a practice squadron is being fitted out with despatch at Nicolaeff. This is not a very powerful one, consisting only of the popoffkas Vice-Admiral Popoff and Novgorod, the corvettes Voin and Sokol, and six torpedo cutters. Four cutters are under orders to survey the Northern coast of the Black Sea, six to survey the Caucasian coast, five to examine the Otchakoff Channel, and one the mouth of the Dnieper. The war-steamers Eriklik and Penderakli are designated for service at Sebastopol, the schooner Gonets for torpedo experiments, and nine other vessels for duties at various ports. As customary, the steamer Taman and the steam cutter Boyouk Dere will proceed to Constantinople, to remain at the disposition of the Russian Ambassador; the gunboat Souk Su will take up its station at Galatz, and the gunboat Psesuane will cruise in Grecian waters, subject to the orders of the Russian Minister at Athens. The war steamer Elborous will also proceed to the Mediterranean, to remain there until the Svetlana arrives from the Baltic to replace the Prince Pojarsky. The total force in the Black Sea during the naval season will be—2 admirals, 290 staff and superior officers, 60 midshipmen and pilots, and 2,621 seamen. The vessels under course of construction at St. Petersburg are not of a very important character. At the New Admiralty, two gunboats, the Boorya and Broza, are nearly finished, and will probably be launched in May. Four other gunboats, the Veekhr, Dojd, Booroon, and Tootcha, are also being fitted out at the same establishment. At the Galerni dockyard there is a talk of building two frigates of the same type as the Minin, but nothing is as yet authoritatively known by the officials of the establishment. At the Baltic Ironworks, nominally a private concern, but to all practical purposes an offshoot of the New Admiralty, a clipper, named the Opritchnik, is being constructed, a fresh set of engines prepared for the corvette Vitiaz, and another for the frigate Duke of Edinburg, which latter vessel is under orders to be finished by the autumn. In Finland, two or three gunboats and some torpedo cutters are being built, but elsewhere there is complete stagnation. In the Black Sea no addition is being made to the Fleet, and the same is the case in the Caspian.

BERMUDA SAILORS' CLUB.

A most interesting ceremony took place at Ireland Island on April 12, when the two sailor Princes laid the foundation-stone of the Sailors' and Marines' Club. The idea of such an institution originated with Admiral Sir James Hope so long ago as 1866, but for several years it seems to have lain dormant, until revived by the present officer in charge of the Naval Establishments, Capt. Moresby, who, with the hearty concurrence and assistance of Admiral Sir A. Cooper Key and Admiral Sir E. Inglefield, the late Commanders-in-Chief on the station, set to work vigorously to carry out this well-conceived scheme, and by his exertions mainly there is now every hope that within a twelvemonth our sailors and marines will be in the enjoyment of a club provided with every comfort which interest in their welfare and happiness could suggest. Probably nowhere beyond the shores of Old England could so perfect an establishment be met with; and one of its most important features consists in extensive and beautifully-wooded grounds, where Jack can stretch his limbs and recruit his health after long confinement on board his ship, an advantage which cannot be over-estimated. To their credit be it said, that it was at their own request the two young Princes took such a prominent part in the proceedings, the success of which was greatly due to such auspices, and when they heard it announced that, although £1,560 had been collected, about £2,000 more would be required to complete everything as intended, they started a fresh subscription, with a donation of £10 each from their own pocket-money. It is to be hoped that such an example will be followed by the Service generally, as no doubt it will, for officers are ever ready to support anything that will tend to benefit their men. Capt. Moresby expressed his confident belief in the requisite funds being forthcoming; and having succeeded so far, it will be hard if his hopes are not realised. His agents, Messrs. Hallett and Co., 7 St. Martin's Place, W.C., will be happy to receive and forward to him any subscriptions. On the occasion of laying the first stone, there was a vast assemblage of all classes, from the highest to the lowest, and all seemed to take a lively interest in the proceedings. The religious part of the ceremony was most impressively performed by the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland and Bermuda, assisted by the Rev. C. H. Harbord, R.N.; and after several speeches, Admiral Sir Leopold M'Clintock briefly and eloquently alluded to the noble and patriotic course the Prince and Princess of Wales had adopted in sending their two only sons on a distant educational cruise, not as passengers, but as part complement of one of her Majesty's ships, subjected to the strictest Naval discipline. He then called on all present to testify their respectful admiration by giving three lusty cheers for the Prince and Princess of Wales, which was responded to by loud and long-continued applause.

GUNNERY EXPERIMENTS AT SPITHEAD.

The Admiralty having granted Mr. Hotchkiss permission to fire his revolving cannon and small shell in competition with the Nordenfelt Service gun, experiments, the results of which have already been reported in these columns, were made at Whale Island in March last, and were to have been resumed at Spithead on April 22, but had to be postponed, owing to a breakage occurring to a part of the Hotchkiss mechanism. The defect having been made good, the Medway proceeded on Tuesday last to Spithead, where, in the presence of Mr. Hotchkiss, and under the immediate supervision of Lieut. Hammill, senior Staff Officer of the Excellent, two guns' crews were exercised in the drill of the revolving cannon, in order to train them for the competitive trials to commence on Tuesday next. During the preliminary firing, however, the revolving cannon did not give very satisfactory results, numerous jambs retarding the fire. We understand that the imperfect working of the gun, when put to the test of rapid firing, was attributable to the fact that the cartridges used were some of those previously filled for the penetration trials which were held on Whale Island. These cartridges had been made up with an abnormal charge of powder, which materially increased their length, and thus seriously retarded the loading, as soon as the gun was fired for rapidity. Mr. Hotchkiss, we believe, proposed to revert to his ordinary cartridges, as used in the French Navy, for the Spithead trials; but this does not appear to have found favour among the officers in charge of the experiments, who have been using the general-service ammunition, of uniform pattern, for the Naval gun, in all the penetration, rapidity, and accuracy trials. Hence, to allow Mr. Hotchkiss to vary his charges would prevent any fair comparison of the relative merits of the two guns from being made. On Thursday the two crews previously exercised at the Hotchkiss revolving cannon again proceeded to Spithead, and were exercised at both machine guns, the crews being changed from gun to gun, as will be done during the actual trials. The Nordenfelt gun alone was fired, as no Hotchkiss cartridges were supplied. The Service pattern Nordenfelt worked without a hitch, firing single shots or volleys at the target according to orders, when the great value of the volley-firing was at once apparent.

THE DYNAMOMETER.

An interesting series of experiments have been held at Keyham with the dynamometer of the late Mr. Froude. The dynamometer was tried for the first time on the Conquest, 2,300 horse-power, to measure the actual power of the engines of a ship. The ordinary method of determining the power of an engine is by means of an indicator, which gives the "indicated horse-power," but this tells merely the amount of force exerted on the pistons of an engine by the steam-pressure, and gives no measure of the amount of work expended in the friction of the engine or in the working air pump, feed pump, and in other elements of waste of power. In fact, it may be said that the indicator tells the power given by the boiler to the engine, rather than the power given by the engine to the propeller. Mr. Froude was, says the Western Morning News, requested by the Admiralty to consider the design of a dynamometer to measure the actual power delivered by the engines. The appliance hitherto used for a similar purpose in the case of small engines was a simple clip-break on the rotating engine-shaft. To this clip a lever or arm of given length was attached, and the rotative force which the engine delivered by friction to the clip-break was measured by some form or other of spring-balance applied at the end of the lever. The difficulty of applying this method on a large scale, and of absorbing a large amount of power through a mere friction-break consists chiefly in the excessive heat which would be generated by the friction. Mr. Froude had, therefore, to consider whether some form of paddle or turbine rotating within a casing could not be made to take the place of the shaft rotating within the clip-break, the resistance offered by the water within the casing to the rotation of the paddle being the counterpart of the friction of the wheel within the break-strap, the casing, like the break-strap, being held from rotation by a lever, which should accurately measure the rotative force exerted upon it. To obtain sufficient resistance to tax the full power of large engines by means of a paddle and casing of reasonable dimensions was the problem to be solved, and Mr. Froude worked out a method by which a particular arrangement of cells in the meeting surfaces of the relating paddle and stationary casing might be able to develop an extremely powerful resistance by the violent currents of water set up. As a fact, the instrument used in the trials, though the rotating paddle is only about five feet in diameter, proves capable of resisting the power of the engines of the Conquest under full steam, and of holding them to seventy or eighty revolutions per minute, a rate much below their full speed. The full trial proved in every way satisfactory. Mr. J. Wright, C.B., of the Admiralty, and Signors Mattei and Vigni, the former of whom is chief of the constructive staff of the Italian navy, were present, the experiments being conducted by Mr. Edmund Froude, who has been entrusted by the Admiralty with this and other scientific inquiries on which the late Mr. Froude was engaged.

A RELIC OF H.M.S. ORPHEUS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It having been ascertained that the skeleton of a body found in New Zealand last autumn was that of Mr. W. J. Taylor, 2nd master of H.M.S. Orpheus, wrecked off that coast in 1863, no doubt those who had connections on board her will be interested to know that through the instrumentality of Com. J. Bruce, H.M.S. Cormorant, the remains were interred with full naval honours at Auckland Cemetery, near those of his late Commodore, the Bishop of the diocese officiating; and now that the name of this ill-fated ship crops up again after a lapse of 17 years, I trust it will not be out of place on my part if I mention that there has been no memorial erected to those who perished in her, beyond a tablet put up in the Mariners' Chapel at Hobart Town, which bears the following inscription:—"The inhabitants have erected this tablet to commemorate the heroic conduct of all on board H.M.S. Orpheus, who, under the most appalling circumstances, preserved the strictest discipline to the last moment of their lives, when, the ship breaking up, the crew gave three parting cheers, and the last words uttered by the gallant Commodore were 'The Lord have mercy on us all.'" Space will not permit of my giving a graphic account of the whole disaster, which took place on Feb. 7, but I may remind your readers that on a lovely afternoon, with all plain sail set, steam up, and every necessary precaution taken, the Orpheus, through the negligence of the man at the signal station, ran ashore on the Manukau Bar, some miles from the land, and out of a complement of 257 officers and men, little more than one-fourth were saved. In his official report, Lieut. Charles Hill, now deceased, the senior surviving officer, stated "from the commencement and during the whole proceedings nothing could exceed the coolness and decision of Comdre. Burnett, C.B., the commander, and the officers, all in their stations, sentries on the spirit-room and store-rooms; while the good-feeling and steadiness of the men were beyond all praise, remaining at their posts until ordered by the commodore to mount the rigging. Many were washed overboard in obeying orders. At daylight nothing could be seen of the ill-fated Orpheus but a stump of one mast and a few ribs." And Sir George Grey, the Governor of New Zealand at the time, in his official dispatch to the Duke of Newcastle, said "the conduct of Comdre. Burnett, his officers and men, was perfectly heroic. I have never heard instances of greater courage carelessness of self, and efforts to save the ship and others, than have been detailed to me. At 8.30 the mainmast went overboard; the other two masts following in less than twenty minutes afterwards. Those of the crew (and they were a great number) who had not been washed overboard or killed by spars and ropes, were on the masts and rigging, and the poor fellows, as these went, gave three parting cheers, and then perished. I am told that not a murmur or cry was heard from the wounded and dying; and yet the manner of some of their deaths was terrible. Altogether it is one of the most affecting events that I have ever heard of, and yet one that excites admiration from the courage, self-devotion, and energetic resignation, both of the many who perished and the few who were saved." The following was the finding of the court-martial:—"The court, having heard the evidence relative to the running ashore of the Orpheus, and having thoroughly sifted the matter, are of opinion that no blame is attached to Comdre. Burnett, C.B., or any of her officers and crew, but that their conduct was such as reflected great credit on themselves, and was honourable to the Service." The president, addressing Lieut. Hill, the prisoner pro tem., then stated that "it had become his pleasing duty to restore him his sword, and that he believed it could not be placed in better hands. There were two men present, William Johnson and John Finnis, whose conduct shone out brightly in the affair, and who so gallantly risked their own lives to save the lives of their fellow-men. He would not fail to report them in the proper quarter. The affair was a most melancholy one and much to be deplored, but there was something to be proud of in it: it showed that the courage of the English Navy had not declined, and that the Service still numbered officers and men who knew how to face even death itself in that most gallant, chivalrous, and unflinching style which the officers and crew of the Orpheus had displayed, and by which they afforded a bright example to posterity. He wished them farewell, and hoped that others would be found to emulate their bright example under equally trying circumstances." William Johnson (captain mizen top) saved five lives by jumping out of the pinnace with a rope to the rescue; and John Finnis (captain main top) three lives, in performing the same feat out of the cutter; but neither of them, beyond the former being made a first-class petty officer, received any reward. When the Eurydice was capsized (whose namesake in heathen mythology was the wife of Orpheus), death was almost instantaneous; but eight long hours elapsed before her consort finally broke up, with nothing but death staring us in the face. I am fully aware that a fund was raised at the time for the relief of the widows and orphans of those who lost their lives in the execution of their duty to their Queen and country, but I trust therefore, Sir, that this brief epitome of one of the most disastrous shipwrecks that ever took place in the Royal Navy may be the means of giving the public a chance to commemorate her loss, in whatever manner is deemed best. I may add that I have the full sanction of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to endeavour to obtain subscriptions for a memorial, and that I shall be happy to receive any suggestions or communications on the subject. Being the last survivor of the Executive officers, I naturally take a warm interest in anything that concerns the ill-fated Orpheus, and this, Sir, must be my excuse for troubling you.—I am, &c.,

CHAS. GEORGE BROOKE-HUNT,
late Lieutenant, Royal Navy.

ARMY OFFICERS' GRIEVANCES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—When Purchase in the Army was abolished, remonstrance against the threatened grievances of the officers was disarmed by a direct appeal to their well-tried spirit of loyalty, and a pledge returned that, after the passing of Lord Cardwell's Act, the officers should be placed in no worse position than before. The case related to me by a friend so nearly represents that of between three and four hundred captains of the Army, that I trust you will allow me to quote it:—Five years before the abolition of Purchase, B paid a sum (sacrificing £100 a year of his small income to do so) for his company, which conferred on him the right, by precedent, of anticipating brevet promotion in about a dozen years, should he not previously get the regimental step (of which he has now little hope before the post-Purchase regulations virtually enforce his retirement). It is announced that brevet rank shall cease on October 1 next, and Col. Stanley has intimated that it is not intended to promote the Purchase captains before the abolition of brevet rank. Surely, Sir, tacit acquiescence in so pointed a breach of good-faith can no longer be looked for, even from a body whose loyal devotion to the best interests of the Service has caused them already to suffer much in silence. Precedents—that of 1872, for instance—are not wanting for giving brevet majorities to all the Purchase captains, and settling a claim which cannot logically be contested. If cost be urged, the rank, without the pay, would be thankfully accepted by many, if not all. Captains of 1871 in the Ordnance Corps have been promoted to majorities. Some of 1866, and all of subsequent dates, in the cavalry and infantry remain captains, and are on the same footing as their fortunate brethren who have joined the Service after that date—except that the latter have saved their purchase-money, and are, consequently, at least £100 a year better off. The Purchase captains seek no "favour or affection," but in leaving their case in your hands, confidently appeal to public opinion for that justice which there appears to be a disposition to withhold from them.—I am, &c.,

VETERAN.

BRIGHTON v. ALDERSHOT.

Capt. L. Whewall, 20th Middlesex Rifles, writes:—"A most strange letter appeared in a recent issue of the Volunteer Service Gazette on the subject of the late Easter-Monday field-day at Brighton. The writer, who signs himself 'An Observer,' draws the conclusion that certain regiments of Volunteers did not take part in that affair, because their commanding officers were afraid that the 'day on the Downs would make the men unsteady;' and then suggests that the War Office should 'look these people up,' &c. The Editor of the Volunteer Service Gazette, in an editorial note, draws attention to the letter as one written by a 'most distinguished and highly practical officer of the Regular Army.' If this had not been pointed out, nineteen out of twenty readers would have been disposed to treat the effusion as written by some one either unacquainted with the subject or animated by a spirit of jealousy and envy, but coming from 'a most distinguished and highly practical officer of the Regular Army,' it merits a little more attention, and, therefore, a few words here on it may not be out of place. 'An Observer' is wrong in assuming that the commanding officers of the regiments who did not take part in the Brighton field-day were afraid to take them because it would make them unsteady. I have the honour of holding a commission in one of the regiments referred to (the 20th Middlesex), and knowing something of the matter, I most emphatically repudiate the assumption, and condemn the reasoning. I am in a position to state that if my commanding officer, Col. Gore Browne, did not take his men to Brighton, it was for the simple reason that four or five days with the Regulars at Aldershot would do them more good. I have taken part in Easter-Monday field-days, and for the last three years have gone with the regiment under Col. Gore Browne to Aldershot, and am, therefore, in a position to judge of the merits of the two courses, and I have no hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, the Aldershot course is infinitely more preferable and advantageous. 'Most distinguished and highly practical officers of the Regular Army' think so too. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who did the 20th the honour of inspecting them on Easter Monday, after stating that it would 'be his duty to make a most favourable report' of what he had seen, added that it reflected 'very great credit on the regiment' to go 'for five or six days' duty at Aldershot, to rough it as soldiers, instead of proceeding to Brighton for holiday-making.' And whatever may be the advantages of such field-days as the one at Brighton (and there may be some), no one practically acquainted with the matter can doubt that four or five days' camp life at such a military centre as Aldershot, with drills three times a day, and constant association with the Regulars, must be more instructive to Volunteers in the duties and work that would be required of them on active service. Any regiment at all worthy of the name can go through the simple movements of a field-day, but the knowledge and benefit derived thereby are nothing in comparison with what is gained from the duties, the work, and the healthy discipline of camp life; and thorough efficiency, I apprehend, should be the great object of Volunteers. Again, the suggestion of 'An Observer' to the War Office 'to look these people up' sounds remarkably strange. As regards the regiment to which I have the honour and pleasure to belong, I feel it is most unjust and uncalled for in reference to my commanding officer, Col. Gore Browne, and his adjutant, Major Hotham. The latter has, under several commanding officers, most ably, zealously, and successfully discharged his duties for upwards of twenty years, and although Col. Gore Browne has not commanded us many years, I have every reason to believe that no better or more qualified colonel of Volunteers exists. He knows his work, and does all he can, at any sacrifice, to let his men know their work too. His idea of volunteering is thorough efficiency; not mere holiday-making, or a pastime. It is not for me to commit others by my opinion, but I have an idea that neither Col. Gore Browne, nor his adjutant, Major Hotham, would have any objection to any one from the War Office or any one else 'looking them up' in the sense 'An Observer' suggests, or comparing the regiment in drill, bayonet exercise, steadiness, or discipline, with any other Volunteer regiment in the Metropolis."

A smoke helmet was tested at Devonport Dockyard on Saturday last. The invention is simple in construction, being a helmet of tin of sufficient size to pass freely over and to allow of free motion of the head. The lower portion of the helmet rests on the shoulders, being secured by straps passing under the arms of the wearer. It is padded around the shoulders so as to exclude all smoke, and is provided with glazed sight-holes, as well as an aperture for the escape of expired air. The interior of the helmet has a flexible tube, with mouthpiece, so formed that it may be held between the lips. A metal nozzle, connected with the mouthpiece, passes through the helmet, and to this is attached a long, flexible tube, provided at the other end with a trumpet-shaped mouthpiece. By means of this, and without the need of an air-pump, or any other contrivance, it is claimed the wearer can enter a building filled with dense smoke, can breathe with freedom, and at the same time, can hold verbal communication with those outside,—breathing and speaking through the one tube. The weight of the helmet is 5 lb., and with 50 ft. of tubing attached, the total weight is 25 lb. only. The experiments on Saturday took place in the hoop-heating house, in the presence of Rear-Admiral C. T. Curme, Admiral-Superintendent. The instrument was fitted upon Mr. Morrison, who entered the house and remained within it for a quarter of an hour. The ventilators in the building were closed, a fire of chips was burning, and there was a dense smoke. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Morrison communicated through the tube that he could breathe freely, and could distinguish the conversation of those outside. When he came out he stated that though his clothing was very hot his head was quite cool, and he accounted for this by reason of the constant supply of air coming through the tube, circulating through the helmet, and passing through the ventilator at the top. He entered the house a second time, remaining another fifteen minutes in dense smoke without experiencing inconvenience. The result of the trial was pronounced most satisfactory.

The following precautionary measures are to be taken on board all German men-of-war serving in climates in which cases of sunstroke or heat-apoplexy are likely to occur. In sultry weather the exercises are to be reduced to a minimum; all heavy work in the sun or during the heat of the day is to be avoided as much as possible, and the sentries are to be frequently relieved. The men are to be made to drink plenty of water—not swallowing large quantities at one time, but taking small quantities and frequently, and at regular intervals. The water is to be cooled as much as possible, and, if practicable, mixed with lime-juice, vinegar, or cold tea or coffee; but the use of spirits is strictly forbidden. Awnings are to be spread over the whole ship and as high above the deck as they can conveniently be placed, so that there may be a free circulation of the atmosphere below them, and, when practicable, double awnings with a space of a foot, or a foot and a half between the two are to be used. Both the awnings and the decks are to be sprinkled with water several times a day, and when the sun goes down the awnings are to be removed. The crowding of men below is to be prevented both at meal times and during the night, and in ships without a battery deck, a portion of the crew are to sleep on the upper deck, proper precautions being taken to prevent the men getting chilled. Every man is to take a bath or be washed down over the whole body several times a day, or at the least every morning and evening, and every evening also the whole of the crew are to be inspected by the medical officer of the ship.—Pall Mall Gazette.

At a meeting of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution held on Thursday, rewards amounting to £160 were granted to the crews of different lifeboats for services rendered during the past month. Rewards were also granted to the crews of shore boats for saving life from wrecks on our coast, and payments amounting to £2,200 were made on different lifeboat establishments.

COMPULSORY RETIREMENT OF QUARTERMASTERS.

"Q.M." writes from India:—"I believe it is in contemplation to retire quartermasters at thirty years' service, ten of which as officers, and that the Order may be issued before these lines reach you. I would wish to point out, for the information of the Authorities at the Horse Guards and War Office, that the reason why these officers cling to the Service, at home and abroad, after their time is in, is due to the fact that they have hitherto been encouraged to do so by an increase of pay at thirty-two years' service, twelve of which as quartermaster, when they receive, if at home or in the colonies, 13s. 2d. per diem, with allowances, including quarters, fuel and light, &c., and if in India 422 rs. 8 annas per month, which is much better. Nearly all this class of officers are married, with large families to support, and the increase of pay mentioned causes many of them to hold on to the Service for the purpose of educating their children, and to try and give them a better start in life than they got themselves. If the Authorities decide to retire them compulsorily, by all means let them do so, but raise the pensions to £200 a year for 30 years' service, ten of which as officers. A lieutenant would receive this amount at 20 years' service, and his work and responsibility are nowhere beside a quartermaster's. If the pension is raised to the moderate figure asked for, which is only an increase of £17 10s. per annum, no quartermaster will grumble to go, as then he would receive an equivalent for the loss of additional pay while serving, otherwise he will have every reason to feel aggrieved, and justly. It may not be generally known, but it is a fact, that quartermasters, too, have their vested interests, and that with the knowledge of their commanding officers, in the old purchase days, they paid out their predecessors at £200 to £400 each. All this is past and gone, and they have nothing for it but their long-service pay to recoup them for their original outlay, through which they in most cases obtained their positions."

Obituary.

Gen. Hubert Marshall, Madras Army (Retired List), died at Newton House, Dalkeith, on the 3rd inst., aged 75 years.

Lieut.-Gen. O. P. Bourke died on the 28th ult. at Kingstown. He obtained his first commission in the Army as ensign in Dec., 1835, and served with the 17th Regt. during the campaign of 1838-39 in Afghanistan and Beloochistan, including the capture of Ghazni and Khelat. He also served in the Crimea, in command of the regiment, from Dec., 1854, to Feb. 1855. He had received the medal for Ghazni, medal and clasp for Sebastopol, the Turkish medal, and the fifth class of the Order of the Medjidie. For some time he was an Exon of the Yeomen of her Majesty's Body Guard. He became lieut.-gen. in 1877.

Capt. Warren Hastings Anderson, R.N., on the Retired (T) List, second son of the late Mr. W. H. Anderson, of Ryde, Isle of Wight, died on the 2nd inst. He was born at Armiston Hall, Haddington, in 1826, and entered the Navy in Sept., 1841, in the Illustrious, Capt. J. E. Erskine, and served in the West Indies and North America until paid off in June, 1845. He was employed next, until again paid off, Jan. 22, 1848, in the Channel and Mediterranean, in the Albion. In the following March he was appointed mate of the St. Vincent, Capt. Sidney Colpoys Dacres, bearing the flag of Sir C. Napier, in the Channel; and on March 8, 1849, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant. He then joined the Stromboli, Capt. Lord Amelius Wentworth Beauclerk, and after serving in the Mediterranean and on the coast of Scotland, he was successively appointed—Nov. 8, 1850, to the Excellent, gunnery-ship at Portsmouth, Capt. Henry Ducie Chads—June 7, 1852, as gunnery lieut. to the Sanspareil, Capts. S. C. Dacres, L. G. Heath, and W. J. Williams, employed at first on the Home and Lisbon stations, and afterwards in the Black Sea; and May 28, 1855, to the command of the Biter, gunboat. He had charge of the rocket-boat belonging to the Sanspareil, at the bombardment of Odessa, April 22, 1854; and was wounded on board the same ship, in the general attack upon Sebastopol, in October following. He was on the heights of Inkerman during the battle of Nov. 5. In Aug. 1855, he commanded the Biter at the bombardment of Sweaborg. He had the honour of receiving the Crimean medal from the hands of her Majesty. From Feb. 16, 1858, until promoted to commander, Sept. 5, 1859, he served in the Victoria and Albert, Capt. the Hon. Joseph Denman; commanded the Flying Fish on particular service, &c., on the West Coast of Africa from May, 1861, till the close of 1862! and the Foxhound in the Mediterranean, from April, 1863, till the close of 1864. He became capt., April 11, 1866.

At the Durban Police-court, on March 27, three (3) privates of the 90th Regt. were sentenced to two months' imprisonment for theft; two (2) privates of the 88th Regt. and one private of the 91st Regt. were sentenced to a similar punishment for stealing boots, and one private of the 94th Regt. was sentenced to a month's imprisonment for having stolen articles in his possession. On March 31, one private of the 88th Regt. and one lance-corporal of the 90th Regt. were sentenced to fine or a month's imprisonment, for creating a disturbance and using bad language. On April 1 three soldiers, in charge of stores, were arrested on a charge of stealing beer; and a warrant issued for the apprehension of a serjeant, on a charge of theft from a police station.

The English officers in the Turkish gendarmerie have been officially informed that at the expiration of their term of service in August, their contracts will be renewed if they will consent to a reduction in their salaries of about 40 per cent.

We understand that the Investment Registry and Stock Exchange (Limited) has now commenced business at their new offices, 16 and 17 Pall Mall, S.W. On the board of direction we find Col. the Hon. W. A. Feilding, E. B. de Fonblanque, Esq., late Deputy-Controller, War Department; and Comy.-Gen. Sir Edward Strickland, K.C.B.

Amusements.

The ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA on Monday night added "Un Ballo in Maschera" to the repertory of the present season, and introduced M. Lassalle in the character of Renato, the new baritone achieving a distinct success by his rendering of Verdi's familiar songs. The audience was numerous and appreciative. Madame Scalchi was again the Ulrica, and the other personages were adequately represented. On Tuesday night, the opera of "Faust and Marguerite," with Madame Albani and Signor Gayarré in the prominent characters, brought another good house; and Wagner's "Lohengrin" was the attraction on Thursday night.

Transferred to the HAYMARKET THEATRE, Mr. T. W. Robertson's comedy of "School," originally brought out at the Prince of Wales's in January, 1869, preserves its old charm. There was some flutter of apprehension that the delicate manipulation of the dramatist would be found hardly suitable to the larger establishment, but all doubts on that point were quickly dispelled by the time the first act was brought to a conclusion. This now takes place in a charming woodland glade, admirably painted by Mr. Hawes Craven. Although founded on the German play, "Aschenbrodel," the treatment of the story is thoroughly original, and the dialogue is bright with the quaint fancies of the dramatist. Mrs. Bancroft once more impersonates in her own delightful style the merry, mischievous school-girl, Naomi Tyke, and Mr. Bancroft resumes his former position as the simple-minded Jack Poynter. Miss Marion Terry imparts to Belle, the heroine of the love-story, much natural feeling and depth of expression; and Mr. Conway as Lord Beaufoy secures respectful attention from his auditors while illustrating that pretty idyll in which the blended references to the moon and the milk-jug have a tendency to provoke unwelcome merriment. Mr. Arthur Cecil is the successor to Mr. Hare as Beau Farintosh; and Mr. Forbes-Robinson, Mr. Kemble, and Mrs. George Canninge now play Krux the usher, and Mr. and Mrs. Sutcliffe, conducting the academy for young ladies.

Madame Helena Modjeska, the Polish actress, has not only had the good-fortune to justify all the high anticipations formed of her capabilities, but to seize at once the admiration of the student of the dramatic art and the capricious fancy of the world of fashion. Her performances, which take place daily at the COURT THEATRE, are attended by large audiences, distinctively representing the best circles of society, and it is already evident that this accomplished emotional actress will become the prominent feature of the London season. Madame Modjeska, whose age may be guessed at about thirty, is attractive in appearance, prepossessing in voice and feature, and in full possession of all the resources of her art. On the American stage her popularity has been very great during the last two years. The version of Dumas' play of "La Dame aux Camelias," in which the actress is now representing the heroine with fascinating power, is that prepared by Mr. James Mortimer for Miss Helen Barry, and produced about eight years since at the Princess's, under the title of "Heartsease."

An effective adaptation of Dickens's fragmentary novel, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," has been brought out at the PARK THEATRE, Camden Town. The adaptor, Mr. Robert Hall, has ingeniously preserved the interest of the story, and solves the problem of the plot by making Edwin Drood suddenly appear in the Criminal Court, where his friend, Neville Landless, is being arraigned on the charge of murder. The cast of the piece is efficient, and some effective views are introduced of Rochester Cathedral and the country scenes in the vicinity of the Medway.

"George Barnwell" has been transferred to the regular evening performances at the OLYMPIC, and "The Castle Spectre" has been experimentally tried at a GAIETY morning performance, to discover whether there is any hope of similar promotion. Mark Lewis's romantic drama was originally brought out at Drury Lane Theatre on Dec. 14, 1797, when John Kemble and Mrs. Jordan sustained the prominent parts; Michael Kelly composed the music, and the piece was at that time very productive to the treasury of the management of Richard Brinsley Sheridan.

Mr. Augustus Harris will produce on Saturday next, at DRURY LANE, on a very grand scale, a new ballet, entitled, "Les Sirènes." Nothing, we understand, will be spared in any department to make it worthy of the boards on which it is to be produced, and of the reputation for spectacle the present able management has already acquired.

On Friday next a concert, organised by Lady Folkestone, will be given at ST. JAMES'S HALL, at 8 o'clock, in aid of the Children's Hospital in Great Ormond Street. It is rarely that so much talent is gathered together as will be the case on that evening, and it is enough to add that among the distinguished musicians who have consented to give a performance of the Toy Symphony are Sir Julius Benedict, Blumenthal, Barnby, Barnett, Cowen, Charles Halle, Henry Leslie, Carl Rosa, Santley, Randegger, and Drs. Stainer and Arthur Sullivan. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has notified her intention of being present.

In his address to the electors of Pontefract seeking re-election, Mr. Childers says:—"In addressing you I have frequently expressed my conviction that every branch of our comparatively small army ought to be maintained in a high state of efficiency and usefulness, and it is in the hope of contributing to this end that I have undertaken my present duties."

MESSRS. ALLEN AND HANBURYS have as nearly as possible succeeded in depriving Cod Liver Oil of its nauseating smell and taste. They present in their "Perfected" article the oil in a beautifully bright and but very little coloured state. Many persons to whom the taste of the oil has hitherto been an obstacle will doubtless be able to take it in its this more perfected form.—Lancet. No nauseous eructations follow after it is swallowed.—Medical Times and Gazette. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

DEFENCE OF HOME FORTS.

"G. L. B. K." writes:—"May I ask for a place in your columns for the following suggestion, which has occurred to me in connection with torpedo warfare? It is universally agreed that torpedoes will take a very prominent part in any future war. Would it not add greatly to our coast defences if the forts bordering on the shore, such as Hurst Castle, Coal House Point, and the battery now in course of construction at the end of the Admiralty Pier at Dover, were fitted with tubes for discharging torpedoes from a chamber below the level of the sea? They could be fired without exposing the men, as is the case in torpedo launches, and would, in fact, double the offensive and defensive powers of a fort against an enemy's fleet."

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."

THE ARMY LIST.

"Grey Coat" writes:—"May I suggest, through the medium of your columns, that as the type for the Army List has got to be recompiled, the opportunity should be taken to make a complete index, which should include officers holding her Majesty's commissions in the Yeomanry and Volunteer Forces? The manner in which the index has hitherto been made out has always appeared to me to be somewhat of a slight on the officers of the above-named branches of the Service."

TO EMIGRANTS, or any one leaving Home for a Change.—ENO'S FRUIT SALT is of the greatest value to emigrants, not only in preventing sea-sickness, &c., but as a means of keeping the blood healthy under the ever-varying conditions to which they may be exposed. Caution.—Examine each bottle, and see the capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s 9d and 4s 6d.

The Irish Times hears that, "having been relieved in his command at Cabul by Sir Donald Stewart, Gen. Sir F. Roberts is to return at once to England, it not being intended that he should take up his former duties as Quartermaster-General of the Indian Army."

The Central News says:—"We are enabled to state that the recently acquired island of Cyprus will shortly be placed under the charge of the Colonial Office. The question of the transfer from the Foreign Office is considered practically settled, and unless some unforeseen difficulty arises the change will be carried into effect at an early date."

The War Office is constantly receiving letters addressed to Gibraltar by friends of officers on board troop-ships on their way home from India. The idea extensively prevails that all the troop-ships from India call at Gibraltar on their way home. The fact is that troop-ships from India sail direct from Malta to England, not touching at any intermediate port.

MR. WEIL, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. Smokers who really understand good tobacco should lose no opportunity of inspecting Mr. Weil's cigarettes.

THE

LIMITED.

CITY AGENCY—53 OLD BROAD STREET, E.C.

CHAIRMAN—Major-General the Hon. WILLIAM FEILDING. BANKERS—Messrs. HERRIES, FARQUHAR, CHAPMAN, and CO., 16 St. James's Street.

SOLICITORS—Messrs. FRESHFIELDS and WILLIAMS, Bank Buildings, E.C. SECRETARY—Mr. W. W. SMITH.

In the Report of the Royal Commission on the London Stock Exchange, dated May 31, 1878, a prominent place has been given to the following recommendations:—"That a Book or Register should be kept on the Stock Exchange, in which Brokers should be invited to enter from time to time the names and quantities of any Securities of the character we have been considering, which they may have instructions to buy or sell, with or without a price at which they are ready to deal......In whatever form such a scheme be carried out, it cannot fail, we think, to possess the great advantage of bringing buyers and sellers into immediate contact, and by the exclusion of the middleman, for whose services there is no need, of saving to the parties the profits, sometimes unreasonably large, which he secures for himself."

The London Stock Exchange having failed to adopt the system recommended (the benefit of which to the public is too obvious to require comment), this Association has been established upon the principle indicated by the Royal Commissioners, as a WEST-END STOCK EXCHANGE, by means of which Sellers and Buyers will be enabled to conduct their transactions directly through one agency instead of three, and consequently at a greatly reduced rate of brokerage. Another great advantage derivable from the Register will be that of providing a ready market for that class of Securities called "Non Current," the value of which is estimated in the Report above quoted at 562 Millions, and for dealings in which, in consequence of their not being quoted on the Stock Exchange, great difficulty is now experienced.

In addition to operations through the Register, the Association is prepared to effect the Purchase and Sale of Stocks or Shares in the open market, as well as to negotiate Mortgages, on exceptionally favourable terms. Deposit Accounts, bearing Interest, can be opened, and Coupons and Dividends collected, for the convenience of Members.

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit. Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL is now the only Cod Liver Oil used in the Royal National Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surgeon Army, Professor of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The Chief Wonder of Modern Times.—This incomparable medicine increases the appetite, strengthens the stomach, cleanses the liver, corrects biliousness, and prevents flatulency, purifies the system, invigorates the nerves, and re-instates sound health. The enormous demand for these Pills throughout the globe astonishes everybody, and a single trial convinces the most sceptical that no medicine equals Holloway's Pills in its ability to remove all complaints incidental to the human race. They are a blessing to the afflicted, and a boon to all that labour under internal or external diseases. The purification of the blood, removal of all restraints from the secretive organs, and gentle aperient action, are the prolific sources of the extensive curative range of Holloway's Pills.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, and Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, &c.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a-dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

WE live in a progressive world, created in the darkness of Chaos, but struggling hard to reach the perfection and light of Cosmos. Old landmarks are continually being swept away, to make room for new conceptions. Men stand bewildered in the midst of the changes they see taking place around them, and feel they would need go to school again, did they wish to keep pace with the times. Thus in Seamanship we now have, as remarked by Admiral Jurien de la Gravière, a science which was formerly but an instinct. In former days, the Royal Navy was renowned for the number of its officers who had made a name for themselves as brilliant seamen, by their skill in handling a ship or a fleet under sail. But in these days of transition, there are comparatively few officers who are really capable of the perfect management of an armour-clad under steam. There are good reasons for this change. These are enumerated by Captain the Hon. Edmund R. Fremantle, C.B., C.M.G., R.N., in his essay on "Naval Tactics on the Open Sea, with the Existing Types of Vessels and Weapons," which deservedly gained this year's prize medal at the Royal United Service Institution. Captain Fremantle maintains, that the inherent difficulty in managing a ship under sail in crowded harbours and narrow waters, almost forced upon Naval officers who wished to be considered competent seamen a serious study of seamanship. But the kettle has deteriorated seamanship. We fear the lessons taught by the ill-fated Eurydice and Atalanta only prove this to be too true. It is easier to manage a ship under steam than under sail, and partly from this cause, and partly from prejudice, it has come to be supposed that no study and but little experience are required for the manœuvres of an ironclad. When powder was first introduced into the art of war, the musket displaced the long-bow, but it is only in the present century that we have come to appreciate the necessity for perfecting our men in small-arm firing, owing to the fact, no doubt, as observed by Captain Fremantle, "that it was considered that any one could hold a shooting-iron straight, it was so much easier than practising with the bow." This has been our case, so far as Naval tactics are concerned. We have repeatedly urged upon the Admiralty the necessity felt in the Service for more thorough instruction in this branch of Naval science, and we hope that one of the results of the Naval Prize Essay of this year will be the speedy organisation of a squadron whose chief duty it will be to instruct officers in Naval tactics on the open sea. For, as Captain Fremantle very justly remarks, how many Naval officers care to know the number of degrees of helm that can be given to the ships they serve in; or the direction in which the screw tends to turn the ship unassisted by the rudder; or the effect on the ship of turning the engines astern when she has head or sternway on, or when lying still; or the result of speed on the circle described in turning; or what the reduction of speed by putting the helm hard-over; or what heel a helm hard-over may be expected to give the ship; or what the drift angle means; or what the time of completing the circle at different speeds, and its diameter? These and other questions are simple points of seamanship, and yet, as Captain Fremantle says, "An officer who would think himself disgraced if he could not answer at once as to the lead of the lower studdingsail halyards, or a flying jib-guy, neither of which has been supplied to the ship in which he is serving, will acknowledge without a blush that he does not know if his screw is right or left-handed, or how many blades it has," and will most probably refer you to the chief engineer of the ship for the required information. Alluding to the Signal Book, Captain Fremantle pointedly asks whether all the signals, evolutions, and manœuvres contained therein are intended as a groundwork for tactics; and if so, where are the tactics? Modern Naval warfare has so changed, and is in such a state of transition, that failing a direct order from higher authority to deal with tactics, it would certainly appear as if modern Signal-book Committees had agreed to ignore them, except so far as an occasional verbal change in an old signal might adapt it to modern warfare. Captain Fremantle is not surprised at the result. Nor are we, for it is only of recent years that it has come to be acknowledged that some attempts at least to solve the problems of Naval tactics should be made. But what a change from the days when the Signal Book was substantially a code of "fighting instructions," which showed the goal at which fleets must necessarily aim! Now, it lays down no clear general principles of attack and defence suited to modern times; but cannot something be done in this direction? Are there no broad principles which might be shadowed forth in the Signal Book? "At present, it must be admitted we are groping in the dark. Our evolutions and manœuvres have no direct bearing on battle formations. The Signal Book is a useful drill-book, but that is all, and it is not unreasonable if, in all earnestness and simplicity, we ask for something more than 'a halfpenny-worth of bread' for this 'intolerable amount of sack.'" Assuredly something should be done to remedy the defect, for it should not be forgotten that the "charming simplicity" attaching to the old conditions of a naval engagement no longer obtains in these days of armour-clads, with their heavy guns, their rams, and their torpedoes. These are the existing types of weapons we have to face, and modern Naval tactics mean not only using these to the utmost advantage, but also avoiding such of them as are singly or collectively massed against you; but to do this effectually, the Signal Book should be clear and explicit. Captain Fremantle holds the ram to be a most formidable weapon, not quite so fatal as is popularly supposed, although in foreign navies it is given the first place. The gun can be used without the ram, but if the ram is used, then bow and stern fire are the most essential. If the gun is to be depended upon, the tactics become simpler, and culminate in an attempt to keep the broadside of the ship at a certain fixed distance from the enemy. Captain Fremantle considers a heavy broadside a necessity, and in a general action end-on fire to be of secondary importance. The torpedo he looks upon as in its infancy. The Harvey torpedo he condemns as useless, although the French ships tow a modified Harvey astern when in action, as the best safeguard as yet discovered against an enemy adopting ramming tactics, and that for the simple reason that should the ship attempting to ram miss her mark, she must pass under the stern of the should-be rammee, when the torpedoes towed by the latter could hardly fail to act in a most decisive manner. Indeed, it was only the other day that a slow Peruvian monitor, towing two such torpedoes, ventured to attack the Chilian fleet, and no attempt was made to ram her, simply because the Chilian captains feared missing the monitor and being struck by the torpedoes she towed. We need not follow Captain Fremantle through the various tactics he enumerates, as every Naval officer will doubtless read this Prize Essay, the best of any for which a gold medal has been awarded, and throughout the whole of which the gallant author shows such an intimate knowledge concerning all things appertaining to his profession, and such a remarkable clear-sightedness and aptitude in matters of organisation, that we hope to see him at no very distant date placed in a position to practise that which he has so ably preached as the Naval Prize Essayist for 1880.

It is to be hoped that one of the results of the Simla Committee on Army organisation will be a modification of the Indian leave regulations. The occasion for the system of the two years' furlough, after eight years' service, is now altogether obsolete. It was very well and desirable in the old days, when the voyage either way was a matter of three or four months, and when it was not worth while for one to go home for a short time; but now, when one can reach London in three weeks from Bombay, the long furlough is not only unnecessary, but frequently a great nuisance. Sick-leave does not, of course, enter into the question, but apart from that, who cares for two years' leave taken "all at once?" The system of short and frequent leave would be far preferable, and would be not only acceptable to the majority of men, but would have a beneficial effect upon the social and professional well-being of the entire community. Under the present regulations, with 60 days' leave every year, for eight years, and two years' furlough at the end of that period, an officer is entitled to three years and four months' leave in the aggregate in 10 years' service, or an average of four months per annum. If this leave were so apportioned that an officer might take two months' ordinary privilege leave in the country one year, and six months out of the country every second year, how many men are there not who would not jump at the opportunity of either going come, or visiting the continent of Europe, or other parts of the globe? Under such circumstances, the chief drawback, and in the minds of many the only drawback, to service in India—expatriation—would be removed, and the gain to India, socially and professionally, would be immense, in that the aptitude to stagnate, to become groovy and slack, one of the chief characteristics of old Indians, would be checked. The disbandment of a great portion of the Madras Army, which is regarded as almost a certainty, is a proposition which has met with some adverse criticism, probably, however, from individuals who are not personally acquainted with the appearance of Madrassees. Some of the mare said to be wiry, tough little fellows, but the majority are anything but efficient men. There is one regiment, stationed now not a hundred miles from Calcutta, the ranks of which are composed of the most weedy, ill-conditioned, narrow, hollow-chested, hump-backed set of scarecrows that ever donned the British uniform. A man on sentry-go staggers under the weight of his rifle, and when he presents arms he has to spread-eagle his legs to prevent himself from pitching forward on his head. Alice's White Knight was probably a Madrassee. The absence of any regulations as to marriage is probably the chief cause of this want of condition. If Cetewayo were in command, there might be some improvement. As it is, every man is married, and has to support an enormous family of his own progeny, besides sundry sisters, and cousins, and aunts, and as his pay is limited, he generally finds himself on very short commons. Not long ago, a man was tried by court-martial for sleeping on his post, and it came out in the evidence that he had sunk down exhausted from absolute starvation, his family having consumed all that his pay could command. Three of these regiments are among those now under orders to form the reserve division at Peshawur, and one commanding officer, at Meean Meer, telegraphed that his regiment was in hospital. "No matter, march!" was the reply.

The Warrior and Hercules are under repair at Portsmouth for the coming summer cruise of the Reserve Squadron, and the Lord Warden, Captain Lindesay Brine, will shortly arrive from Sheerness, where she has proceeded to complete her ship's complement. This will complete the Reserve Squadron so far as Portsmouth is concerned, the remainder of the ships being attended to at Devonport and Sheerness. Very little money will be expended in preparing them for their annual cruise beyond what their own crews can perform, and when they are ready they will probably assemble at Portland, under the command of Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh for evolutionary drill at sea. The ships which are to be got ready at Portsmouth are to be ready for sea by June 20.

There are abundant indications that the Admiralty will be put on its defence in respect to the loss of the Atalanta, which may now be regarded as almost beyond doubt. The expressions of opinion in the Press are not so strong as the remarks which are going about in clubs and in society in town and country; and very painful rumours are repeated respecting the alleged protests or representations of Captain Stirling that his ship was over-masted and over-sparred, after the last alterations had been effected in her equipment. It is asserted that he requested the scuttles and ports might be enlarged, to permit the vessel to ease herself of the seas which he expected her to ship, but that his request was not complied with; and it is also affirmed on good authority that the Admiralty officials objected to further alterations, on the ground that they would, by so doing, incur the suspicion that the Eurydice had been fitted out in an unsafe condition. There are officers who say Captain Stirling expressed his apprehensions to them in writing and by word of mouth, and if these statements be proved, it will go hard with those who are responsible for the terrible catastrophe.

To supply the place of the Atalanta as a training-ship, the Admiralty have directed the frigate Newcastle to be refitted immediately. Her steam-power will be retained, it having been decided that training-ships in future shall have auxiliary steam-power, to be used in rough weather.

Lord John Hay will move to his apartments in the Admiralty, as soon as they are ready for his reception.

Captain Arthur Wilson, of the Vernon, will be removed from his appointment on the breaking-up of the present senior torpedo class, he being retained principally for the purpose of completing his course of lectures to that class.

The Admiralty appear to be keeping an eye on the dates of officers' births, and relieve them sharp to the date, for with the arrival of the sixtieth anniversary of his birth, the paymaster of the Himalaya has been called upon to resign his comfortable billet, and will be forthwith placed on the Retired List. We believe this is the only paymaster who will be compulsorily retired by age during the present year, a circumstance which is sufficient to cause much grief to assistant-paymasters. Some of these officers begin to fear that they may yet be called upon to retire by age as assistant-paymasters, for some of them do not find their forty-fifth birthday so very far ahead.

The idea of sending out an Indian troop-ship to bring home Lord Lytton, on being relieved of his office of Viceroy of India, has been abandoned, and it has been arranged to give his Lordship and his family a passage home in the Himalaya, which will sail about the 28th inst., with supernumeraries for Malta and the East India station. The appropriation of an Imperial troopship to Indian service has become all the more feasible, since the hard-and-fast line has been removed. It is now no more opposed to official routine for the India Office to pay for the services of the Himalaya at so much per diem, than it would be to pay the newly instituted daily rates for the Serapis or Malabar.

His Excellency Mr. Goschen has decided to pay a visit to Venice, on his way to Constantinople, and at that place he will embark, with his brother and other members of his family, on board the Helicon, probably on the 20th inst,, and at once proceed to take up his appointment, in succession to Sir Henry Layard.

Admiral Ryder has been carefully reading the new volume of Uniform Instructions, and has issued a memorandum calling attention to irregularities which have met his eye. The caps now worn by officers are not all exactly the same width across the top, nor are the peaks of exactly the same shape, a matter which officers are to see to at once. This is right enough; but the reintroduction of the three great buttons on each cuff is not liked. It is laid down in the Regulations that they shall be worn, and the Commander-in-Chief is only doing his duty in enforcing the same; but these buttons are so large and lumpy, that they are anything but an agreeable addition to the cuff of a coat.

The Medway, having on board Vice-Admiral Boys, the president, Colonel Close, R.A., and Captain Lewes, R.E., members of the Select Committee on Machine Guns; Captain Hopkins, of the Excellent, and Commanders James Brown and Custance, representing the Admiralty Ordnance Department, carried out a series of experiments at Spithead this week, the object being that of ascertaining whether the Hotchkiss revolving cannon is better adapted to repel torpedo-boat attacks than the Nordenfeldt machine-gun. The Admiralty declined to admit visitors while the trials were proceeding. Our Portsmouth correspondent informs us that the trials ended in favour of the Nordenfeldt. The models of two torpedo-boats were used as targets. The Government gun fired about fifty shots a minute, out of which about eighteen or twenty hits were scored. The Hotchkiss revolving cannon could not exceed some thirteen shots a minute, out of which from six to seven hits were scored, the guns being taken at their worst, while the maximum result of the Nordenfeldt was ninety-five shots a minute with about eighty hits to the Hotchkiss twenty shots a minute and ten hits. It is said that at no previous trial has the Hotchkiss gun done so well. Both officers and men think that in the Nordenfeldt the Admiralty have secured the best machine-gun.

Mr. Hotchkiss has written us a letter denying the accuracy of the report which appeared last week in these columns, as to the results of the preliminary trials on board the Medway, stating that no part of his gun broke, and that his cartridges were not filled with an abnormal charge of powder. From inquiries made at Portsmouth, we find that a part of the mechanism of the Hotchkiss gun did break, and that the cartridges at the "penetration trials" were filled with fine-grain rifle-powder, instead of the coarse-grain powder used in the Service ammunition supplied for the Nordenfeldt naval gun.

A propos of the trials of the Nordenfeldt and Hotchkiss guns, it is noteworthy that the specimen of the former which burst on board the Northampton, and was on its way to England in the Atalanta, will probably never be seen again.

An order has been issued respecting reports on the conduct of officers serving afloat, and a new form has been introduced, entering into rather minute details as to character, "temper," and "disposition" having to be reported on. This return is to be an annual one, but will not be confidential, inasmuch as officers will be permitted to see their captain's more personal remarks upon them.

The Cormorant has had a very rough passage from Lyttelton to Auckland, but behaved very well under the circumstances. One boat was carried away and two others were stove in. In the height of the gale, she had to run before it under bare poles, not a stitch of canvas being set.

Admiral Sir Cooper Key will, it is very generally rumoured, leave the Admiralty, and take the command at Devonport, when vacated by the present Commander-in-Chief.

The fortieth annual meeting of the Royal Naval Female School, Twickenham, took place on Wednesday, the 12th inst., at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall Yard; in the absence of the president, Admiral the Hon. A. Duncombe, the chair was taken by Captain the Hon. F. Maude. The report was considered very satisfactory, the total ordinary receipts being £348 in excess of the ordinary expenditure, notwithstanding the very heavy outlay in the way of building improvements. The committee were happily placed in a position to meet the additional expenses by the receipt of some large donations, through which they were enabled to invest the legacies, amounting to £400. The annual subscriptions, however, do not appear to have increased, and the committee express themselves anxious about this source of income, which is, after all, the surest test of public favour and the chief mainstay of the institution.

The Secretary of State for India has approved of the following officers of the Royal Marines for appointment to the Indian Staff Corps, on the distinct understanding that they shall not, under any circumstances, be permitted to revert to the Royal Marines, viz.:—Lieutenants L. M. M. Hall, J. B. Woon, J. B. R. Butler, and H. Farrant, R.M.A.; and Lieutenants C. H. Hayes, E. T. Paul, W. W. Taylor, C. V W. Williams.on, E. V. Goldsmid, A. C. Powell, and C. H. Powell, R.M.L.I. These officers will be required to embark for India within two months from the 28th April.

A marked improvement is noticeable in the manner in which appointments to ships are now notified at the Admiralty, and thanks are due to Mr. Swainson for having taken the matter in hand, upon our calling attention to it.

A variety of infractions of the regulations with respect to uniform having been brought under the cognizance of Admiral Ryder, Commanding-in-Chief at Portsmouth, he has addressed a circular to the captains of her Majesty's ships, ordering them to see that the regulations are implicitly carried out by the officers under them. He also appends full instructions with respect to the dress, which he insists upon being observed for social and evening wear as well as for service purposes, and patterns are exhibited in his office for the inspection of officers. The sleeve buttons are to be worn on all occasions.

An order was received at Portsmouth on Monday, directing the Bacchante, Captain Lord Charles Scott, to be prepared for further sea service within a month. It is expected that Prince George will take another cruise in her, as far as Australia and other distant stations.

Much difficulty is, it is stated, being experienced in fitting H.M.S. Swiftsure, at Devonport, for the reception and stowage of the 60-ft. steel torpedo boat and the 42-ft. wooden "picquet" boat she is to carry. The mainstays of the ship have had to be shifted close to the funnel to enable the derrick by which the boats are to be got in and out to be worked. During the last commission of this ship it was felt that her sail power was a mistake, as also that had she been barque rigged she would have behaved better under sail.

A Naval pension of £50 per annum falls vacant by the death of Retired Commander Ashley La Touche.

The comments on the state of the Navy at the beginning of the year are, we are glad to see, bringing forth good fruit. The Admiralty has abandoned the attempts to reach the "extreme limit" of armour-carrying capacity. Small, handy vessels are to be constructed, in lieu of unwieldy monsters. Foreign nations are adopting the same course, and orders have been given to suspend the construction of the Italia and Lepanto.

We hear that five hundred workmen are employed on the repairs of the Duilio, and it is not expected that the vessel will be again ready for sea before August.

The proposal made by Lieutenant Brooke-Hunt, one of the survivors of the ill-fated Orpheus, that the British public should erect a memorial to those of his shipmates who so nobly died at the Manukau Bar in the execution of their duty, is one which should meet with adequate support. The sad tale of the loss of the Orpheus is one that should never be forgotten. For eight long hours death stared the crew in the face, but all the time the strictest discipline was maintained, until, in the words of the inscription on the tablet at Hobart Town, "the ship breaking up, the crew gave three parting cheers, and the last words uttered by the gallant Commodore were, 'the Lord have mercy on us all!'" In a despatch to the Duke of Newcastle, Sir George Grey, at that time Governor of New Zealand, says:—"The conduct of Commodore Burnett, his officers, and men, was perfectly heroic. I have never heard instances of greater courage, carelessness of self, and efforts to save the ship and others than have been detailed to me. At about 8.30 the mainmast went overboard, the other two masts following in less than twenty minutes afterwards. Those of the crew (and they were a great number) who had not been washed overboard or killed by spars and ropes were on the masts and rigging, and the poor fellows, as these went, gave three parting cheers, and then perished. I am told that not a murmur or cry was heard from the wounded or dying, and yet the manner of some of their deaths was terrible. Altogether, it is one of the most affecting events that I have ever heard of, and yet one that excites admiration from the courage, self-devotion, and energetic resignation, both of the many who perished and the few who were saved." The effort now being made to provide some fitting memorial of such gallant conduct certainly deserves support, and we shall be happy to receive subscriptions, pending the formation of a committee to carry out the proposal of Lieutenant Brooke-Hunt.

Another of those unfortunate squabbles with native chiefs on the West Coast of Africa has cost us the lives of two men landed with a Naval brigade, and the Commodore rather narrowly escaped. It is reported that he was struck by a Martini-Henry ball, but we can scarcely credit the statement, as no ammunition of that pattern can well have got into the hands of the natives. If it be true, it would seem that a stray bullet from our own side must have found a billet in the Commodore's breast. It is satisfactory to learn that the arrival of the Boadicea at the Cape has been reported to the Admiralty by telegraph by Commodore Richards, who is still in the land of the living, and probably quite recovered from the effects of his wound.

Captain Morant, of the Valorous, has been left in temporary charge of the Irish relief squadron on the coast of Galway, during the absence from that duty of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, who has returned for a short time, to transact business at the office of the Coastguard and Naval Reserve.

There is an old sea-song of which the refrain is "Rolling home, rolling home!" and some sailors of the older school have been inclined to say that in these days of ironclads and steam the new Navy has little experience of that sort of thing, which belongs rather to the old sailing days. At Portsmouth, however, it is evident that the Naval Authorities are anxious that our young seamen shall gain some experience in rolling, parties of them being employed daily on Governor's Green in rolling the tennis-ground. This is the way to make seamen of them, if varied with a turn at "dockyard horse."

Unless any unforeseen vacancy should occur before the 30th inst., Captain Samuel T. Collins, of the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, will be retired under the Order in Council of January 15, 1878. This officer, who is in his 25th year of service, was present throughout the last Chinese war, and was wounded at the attack on the Peiho Forts, while saving a Marine from drowning in the advanced ditch.

The relief squadron now employed on the coast of Galway consists of the Valorous, Bruiser, Hawk, Imogene, and Goshawk. The Coastguard cruiser Amelia has been withdrawn, and returns to her duties at Kingstown.

More than one application has been made by the unfortunate half-pay officers who have joined the torpedo class at Portsmouth, for some allowance in lieu of the quarters generally provided at the College. But their Lordships are obdurate, and compel these officers to pay their own travelling and lodging expenses, while they are employed on a duty undertaken for the benefit of the Service.

Should there be any intention of issuing a Birthday gazette of honours, we hope that the services of Dr. Colan, now Deputy-Inspector-General at Jamaica Hospital, may not be overlooked. Sir George Nares would, we feel sure, bear testimony to the zeal and skill of Dr. Colan when employed with the late Arctic expedition. His well-earned promotion was too long withheld from him after his return to England, and his former services, during the Russian, China, and Ashantee wars, surely entitle him to some further recognition.

"There are," to use the quaint illustration of Mr. Drummond, "more little pigs than there are teats for," and the little pigs which have got no teats to suck are squealing consumedly. Some, indeed, have sought relief in "notices of motion," others utter the voice of complaint in private circles. It is in reference to the smaller appointments in Pall Mall and Whitehall that the greatest disappointment is felt. When a little pig gets a teat, his claims are jealously scanned and his merits discussed by his less fortunate comrades, and it must often be admitted that, as "kissing goes by favour," it would be difficult to recognise any other rule in the selection, which does not appear always to be that of the fittest, to some of the berths for which a change of occupants was necessary at the Admiralty and the War Office. Admiral Hoskyns is by all accounts a very excellent officer, but we doubt whether if Admiral Glyn had sought the post he would not have got it from the political friends whom he has served so well. It is said, indeed, that Lord Northbrook felt the gallant Admiral had such claims on account of his position and services, and in virtue of Lord Wolverton's eminent support of the Liberal cause, that he found it necessary to explain to Admiral Glyn why it was he had not been appointed to the Board, as he had a right to expect he would. There are other officers left out in the cold who might reasonably have looked for the post, but no one will question Lord John Hay's service and other qualifications for the appointment which has been conferred on him. It will all come right in time, and if we ventured to carry out our simile, we would express our confident belief that teats will be manufactured from time to time, and that all the little pigs will be eventually provided for, if they do not prove troublesome.

The budget for the administrative department of the Imperial German Navy for the financial year 1880-81 shows a slight increase (£75,000), the steady growth of that Navy involving a continual augmentation of the administrative staff. From a table appended to the estimates, we perceive that in the year 1880-81 17 ships are entered for foreign service, the same number for evolutionary movements, while 12 vessels are intended for service at the naval stations. Three ironclad corvettes, two armoured gunboats, and one corvette will be ready this year for service. In consequence, the German Navy List will be augmented by two full captains, five captains of corvettes, ten captain-lieutenants, and seven lieutenants. Besides three corvettes and one gunboat already on the stocks, one additional corvette and two gunboats will be laid down. It appears as if all hope of raising the Grosser Kurfürst had been abandoned by the German Admiralty, the sum of £50,000 set apart for that purpose last financial year having been withdrawn. It is intended to erect a new naval hospital at Yokohama, the present building having proved insufficient for the increasing requirements of the growing German Navy in the East.

The intention of the Admiralty to endeavour to retain in the Service a greater number of pensioners than has hitherto been allowed, was alluded to in these columns a short time ago, and the rules under which pensioners may re-engage have now been issued. This move is in direct opposition to that which was inaugurated by Mr. Childers, his great desire being to get rid of every pensioner, so that a reliable reserve of these men might be available in addition to the numbers borne in the Fleet. But the cry has been that our ships have been manned by boys, and it has been found that the retention of a few more old hands would be of advantage. The offers first made to pensioners to re-engage were scarcely likely to attract many, and more liberal regulations have now been issued. Petty officers and men of the seaman class and stokers who re-engage in future will, in addition to receiving the extra sixpence a day, be allowed to reckon the time thus served for an increase in pension, for good-conduct medal and gratuity, and for badges. In fact, their having served and earned a pension shall no longer place them under any disadvantage as regards their further service, but every additional year served shall carry with it those advantages which would be enjoyed by them if they were still working for their pension. This is no more than fair and just, and doubtless many pensioners who declined to serve afloat, where the pay was not very good and no further benefits were to be expected, will now stick to the Service, in preference to trying their hands at some new employment on shore. But even now there is more to be done by the Admiralty with respect to re-engagements. They have tried to satisfy the pensioners, but they have forgotten an almost more important section, namely, the men who complete their first term of ten years. Those are the men we really want to keep, for it is their secession from the Service so soon as they are free that leaves us with such a number of boys on board our men-of-war. It is by the discharge of the seaman who has completed ten years and declined to enter for a further ten, that causes so great a drain from the able-bodied type, and this fearful waste has to be met by keeping a much larger number of boys under training than should be requisite. It is the youngsters, too, who give all the trouble, for very few men in their second term of service are to be found in the defaulters' book, in comparison with the first-term men. We feel sure that if a careful calculation were made as to the cost of the waste caused by the discharge of the thousands who leave on completing ten years in the Navy, it would be found that even an increase of pay of fourpence a day could be given to men on re-engaging without costing the country so much as training the boys who have to take the place of the men, and who are not nearly so efficient or well-disciplined. We would urge the new Admiralty to look well into this matter, and to give every possible inducement to men to re-engage for the second term of ten years.

Zanzibar is not a pleasant place, as witness the growls received from the crew of the London at being detained more than the usual time. Yet there are some officers who find the place not unbearable, if pecuniary benefit accrues by remaining. One lieutenant, who served more than his usual term in the ship, took service under the Sultan, and even obtained the permission of the Home Government to renew that appointment for another term of three years. The paymaster has been in the ship since 1875, and has settled his family at Zanzibar, and now we hear of another officer having asked for permission to accept a post under the Government of the Sultan. But the men find the perpetual boat-cruising, little or no leave, and absolutely nothing to do on shore, a weary round, and long for home. We hope the relief crew may be drafted to a ship for passage out at the earliest opportunity.

Although Admiral Sir Cooper Key raised no objection to the wearing of plain clothes in Bermuda Yard by certain Naval officers holding appointments there, yet the Board has upheld Sir Leopold M'Clintock's decision, that in future such officers are to wear the uniform of their rank when on duty in the yard. The wearing of plain clothes by these officers had become a time-honoured custom, but Sir Leopold M'Clintock, on paying his first visit of inspection, found that some of the clothes thus worn looked almost as old as the custom, and he thereupon prohibited their being any longer worn on duty. We received from Bermuda strongly worded complaints at the injustice of this new order, but from the first we failed to sympathise with the complainants. They, however, thought their case so good, precedent being their strong ally, that they appealed to the Board to rescind the new Commander-in-Chief's regulations. But the late Commander-in-Chief, Sir Cooper Key, has not seen fit to attempt to interfere with Sir Leopold M'Clintock's decision, and plain clothes on duty are henceforward things of the past at Bermuda Yard.

Major-General the Hon. H. Clifford was, by last accounts, in command of the troops at Cape Town, i.e., some companies of the 91st, and odds and ends of Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and Army Service Corps! It was understood that Sir G. Colley's functions would be restricted to those of civil Governor of Natal.

The new Governor-General of India will have a trying ordeal in the Red Sea, which is usually "piping hot" in May and June, and as his Excellency does not stand heat well, we fear that he will have an unpleasant introduction to the cares of Vice-Imperialism,—not "imperilism," as our printers made it last week.

A letter in an evening contemporary calls attention to the claims of Majors-General to commands which are now given to colonels. It is a system which would be scouted in any other army.

Nothing can be known for some little time as to the Indian reliefs for the season 1880-81, and we would therefore caution those interested against relying too implicitly upon the reports which are circulated on the subject.

The eighth volume of the Despatches, &c., of the Duke of Wellington, edited by his son, which has just been published, contains papers relating to the period between November, 1831, and December, 1832, when the firmness of the Iron Duke was severely tried by great political controversy and change. So far back as 1831, the Duke predicted the overthrow of the Irish Church by a Reformed Parliament. "'Tis the outpost, and will be the first attacked;" and his remarks on the discipline and efficiency of the Army invite our serious consideration:—

> "I entertain," says the Duke, "no apprehensions for the discipline of the Army, excepting from those who look to overturn everything through the instrumentality of the Ministers whom they affect to support, but in reality govern with a rod of iron. The whole question of the British Monarchy now depends upon the discipline and efficiency of the British Army. If the Army should not be in a state of discipline and efficiency, nobody can rely upon it. If nobody can rely upon it, it will be worse than useless. The expense of its maintenance will draw upon the King attacks in Parliament; while its existence will be of no service to protect him, to enforce his authority, or to secure the lives and property of his subjects. But we may rely upon it, that from henceforward we shall never be able to carry on a Government without the assistance and support of a military body. If we cannot have a regular Army in such a state of discipline and efficiency as that the King can rely upon them, we must and we shall have a National Guard, in some shape or other. All men will call for the change. We may then take our leave of the Monarchy!"

It gives cause to reflect, when we read the memorandum on the military preparations against the London mob, in November, 1831, and call to mind that in 1848 the same precautions had to be renewed. We regret that owing to some mistake in the table of contents, we could not find the passage marked "Necessity for the maintenance of corporal punishment in the Army, 333–339." There is no reference to the subject in the present volume in the pages indicated.

We hear that representations to the belligerent South-American Republics from the British Government, in the interests of peace, will probably be listened to, and great bloodshed and destruction of property brought to an end "with honour."

One of our contemporaries, which has changed hands four times in pretty quick succession, has been subjected, we hear, to a new proprietorship, with a "foreign" connection. We do not allude to the Pall Mall Gazette.

It is proposed to hold the third annual Army Rifle Meeting at the Cæsar's Camp Ranges, Aldershot, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 5, 6, and 7. The meeting will be open to the Army, Navy, Royal Marines, and Auxiliary Forces, with special matches for "all comers." The programme of the last meeting comprised 22 matches, in which 265 prizes were offered for competition, the individual prizes varying in value from £10 to 5s. The aggregate value of the prizes amounted to £435, for which there were upwards of 2,200 entries. Those willing to support the meeting by subscribing to the prize fund should communicate with Captain W. Bennett, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, Aldershot.

It is not likely that a quarrel with China, or a war with the Mandarins, will distract the attention of Russia from India. The idea of that rich inheritance, as it is supposed to be, is as fixed in Russian heads as the idea of keeping it is fixed in British policy. But a successful war with China would much improve the position of Russia in Asia, and add to her power of influencing the people of Hindostan; while it would greatly embarrass the Government, and diminish the revenue of India. In fact, it would be very undesirable, in the interests of this Empire, that China and Russia should be engaged in hostility. It could not be expected that Russia would refrain from maritime operations, and the blockade of the principal Chinese ports would be apt to follow a very legitimate, if most annoying, operation of war,—in which our opium revenue and our tea and silk trade would suffer enormously. It is, therefore, all the more agreeable to learn that the latest news from the East gives reason to hope that the Chinese have not altogether repudiated the Treaty, and seem disposed to listen to reason.

The musical entertainment at Newman Street, under Royal patronage, on Wednesday, was most successful. It promises to be a "feature of the season."

A correspondent of the Deutsche Heeres-Zeitung, who was present at the Brighton Review, was very favourably impressed by what he saw. The writer, who is a German officer, says:—"The Volunteers have done in this sham-fight all that could well be expected of Militia. There were the best will, the greatest attention, the fullest exertion on the part of each individual man, as well as the most painstaking devotion to duty as far as the officers were concerned, together with an appreciation of military forms. This much must be conceded to the Volunteers. But as regards the suitable application of those forms to the situation, a harmonious co-operation in observing the enemy, the ground, and the object of the fight, in all those particulars there was still much to be desired. It is in the nature of the case that the officers of a Militia cannot in time of peace attain to more than a certain mediocrity. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, however, it cannot be denied that the Volunteers may be employed tactically, and that they are on the right road to perfection. The faults made are part of the system. The criticisms of the English Press are very favourable on the behaviour of the Volunteer Corps, and rightly so. . . . . . If a certain English paper says that the Volunteers may be made the best soldiers in the world, we must concur in this verdict, but with the sole reservation—a three-years' service." The writer points out various important short-comings, and concludes:—"As is well known, the Volunteer Force is only intended for home defence. It may be called upon by the Crown against interior as well as foreign enemies. Although it is open to many improvements until it will become an effective military instrument, it is already a factor which may be taken into account by the Government in their foreign policy. The Volunteers may safely be trusted with the defence of home garrisons and the coasts, when it should become necessary to employ the Regular Army abroad. And even if England were only able—as has been so often asserted—to despatch two or three Army corps, such a force is not to be despised, even in our times of gigantic Armies. The state of the Continent is entirely different from what it was in the ages of Marlborough or Wellington. Yet an English expedition retains especial importance for a military co-operation, as this small but excellently equipped army may be landed at once at any part of the coasts of the Continent. To affirm that the Volunteer Force would decline to serve when called upon for active service, is to doubt the national feeling of the English people; and such an aspersion is neither founded in fact, nor is it otherwise justified. After the Brighton Review, there is only room for a favourable opinion of the military value of the Volunteer Army."

The attack made by Mr. Gladstone in his Midlothian crusade on Sir Bartle Frere will render the retirement of the latter from his post at the Cape inevitable, if satisfactory explanations be not vouchsafed on the subject. It is understood that Sir Bartle Frere sent home a strong official remonstrance against Mr. Gladstone's invective, which must be on record in the Colonial Office; but Mr. Gladstone will probably "apologise," or "Karolyise," and dismiss the matter from his mind.

How the years flee! There are men, not quite old now, who can remember the sensation in the House of Commons when the late Sir Robert Peel read Lord Hardinge's despatch, in which there was a touching and simple reference to "young Arthur," who rode by his father's side in the stress of the hardest-fought field which ever tried the mettle of the British Army in India, in the old Sikh war. And now we see that "young Arthur's" son has gained the Lothian prize at Oxford. Eheu, fugaces!

Lord De Grey will follow his father, the Marquis of Ripon, to India in a short time, and will probably escort his mother, who will, we venture to say, prove a most gracious and winning Vice-Queen and Empress in Simla and Calcutta.

"A Cadet" writes to say there are no vacancies at the Royal Military Academy, and that a double batch of cadets have not been passed into the Army.

The worthy "Thane of Fife" has inaugurated his rule within St. James's Palace by a couple of dinners, at which Royal personages have been guests, and has done his part of host most admirably.

The position of affairs in Europe causes a peculiar interest to be attached to the defensive powers of Belgium. The conduct of Great Britain in the case of Luxembourg should inspire grave reflections among the "bons bourgeois" of Brussels, Antwerp, Liege, and other towns "good for plunder;" and the Hollander who does not remember the dash made at Amsterdam in the last century by Frederick William of Prussia, may, at all events, have in his mind what occurred in France in 1870. We mention the Luxembourg business just to show that the reading of treaties is a difficult art, and that the results are not always to be depended on. Lieutenant-General Baron von der Smissen, who has seen much service in Algiers and in Mexico, and has followed the autumn manœuvres of our own and other armies with great interest and intelligent appreciation, has published a brochure, "Les Forces Nationales," in which he tells some home-truths to his Belgian compatriots who need them greatly, as they seem to think that an army is useless to a country which relies on the faith of treaties for its safety. We advise the "braves Belges" to act on the maxim, "Aide-toi, et Dieu t'aidera."

The method of enlisting a recruit for the Army and Royal Marines under the Army Discipline and Regulation Acts for 1879 is so different from that previously in force, that it must necessarily have some effect on the energy of the "recruiters," as they are now styled, and consequently on the number of recruits enlisted; while, on the other hand, there can be no manner of doubt that all recruits who now join the standard will do so with a full knowledge of what they are about, and with ample time for consideration before being attested. Before the promulgation of the Act, a recruiting-serjeant visited fairs, races, taprooms, and other places where he would be thrown in the way of young men out of work, on the spree, or otherwise, in a likely mood to enlist; and knowing from experience that the expenditure of a little money would bring grist to his mill, he was not chary of good-fellowship; the result being that perhaps, in the course of an evening, many hands would close on the enlisting shilling, and their owners then and there bound to serve the Queen. The case is now, however, different; the recruiter, by section 77 of the new Act, is to "give every person offering to enlist a notice, in the form for the time being authorised by the Secretary of State, stating the general requirements of attestation and the general conditions of the contract to be entered into by the recruit; and directing such person to appear before a justice of the peace at the time and place mentioned," &c.; and "if he does not appear before a justice, or on appearing does not assent to be enlisted, no further proceedings shall be taken." An explanatory note to this and the following section also provides that "these sections alter the law of enlistment by ignoring everything that takes place prior to attestation before a justice, and a man will be enlisted by the act of attestation. The recruiter's gift of a shilling is no longer necessary. He will give the form authorised by the Secretary of State, directing the recruit to appear before a justice. If the man fails to appear, he cannot, as heretofore, be arrested as a deserter, and if he appears and dissents from enlistment, he will not be liable to pay any smart-money. No account will, therefore, be taken of any man before he is actually attested before a justice." Under the old system many a man took the shilling when boozy from drink, having fallen out with his sweetheart or relatives, or from some other sudden fit of spleen, and perhaps on coming to his rational senses a few hours afterwards, repented his bargain, but at the same time found himself bound hard and fast. Still, he was not sworn in, and until the limited ninety-six hours had elapsed from the time of enlistment to that of attestation, he could obtain his discharge by paying the smart of twenty shillings and expenses. To meet this, and free her son from the Service, many a poor woman has sold her little all in furniture and home comforts, which cannot happen under the present state of the law, since no man can be enlisted unless in his sober senses, and actually in the presence of a justice of the peace, after having had time to read over the notice he has received of the particulars of the engagement he is about to enter into. The recruiting-serjeant will henceforward be less prodigal of his money, as he can have no object in entering a beer-house and treating half-a-dozen idle young men, with the hope of entrapping one on the spot with his proffered shilling. He will now have to plead with them in a more rational way, and although fewer recruits may be enlisted, it is more than probable that a better class of men, on the whole, will be gained, joining the Service with the full intention of making it their profession, to the exclusion of those who might unwittingly accept the shilling, and afterwards find themselves compelled to serve as discontented and disappointed men.

During the course of the Afghan campaign, the Native Pioneer regiments of the Bengal Army proved of the greatest value. They are as well provided as sappers with entrenching and road-making tools, and they literally bridged the armies from the Indus to Candahar, and from the Kurum to Cabul, pioneering the advance in fighting as well as in hard work. The 23rd Pioneers, for instance, distinguished themselves greatly in front of Cabul, where they cast aside their picks and shovels, to chase the enemy with their bayonets from the strong positions which the latter had taken up, and drove them in front of them for some distance, their gallantry being most conspicuous.

A subsidiary portion of the Cabul force, and one which could not be dispensed with under the conditions of Indian warfare, has, strange to say, received no mention hitherto. We refer to the Kahars forming the ambulance corps. There are 900 of these men with General Roberts, and to them has been entrusted the duty of carrying off the wounded in action, and conveying the sick in dandies and doolies on the line of march. They correspond to the bearers of the Army Hospital Corps, but in camp are employed in any rough work which may require to be done. Their behaviour at Charasiab was beyond all praise. They were constantly under fire, and their indifference to danger was very marked, their belief in Kismut supplying the place of steady courage.

General C. T. Chamberlain, C.S.I., Bengal Staff Corps, who was lately relieved in command of a Division of the Bengal Army by Lieutenant-General W. T. Hughes, C.B., has arrived in England.

Colonel J. C. M'Neill, V.C., C.B., C.M.G., half-pay, late 48th Regiment, Equerry to the Queen, has been specially selected by her Majesty to proceed to Canada in the suite of H.R.H. Prince Leopold, on account of his knowledge of the country. Colonel M'Neill left London on Thursday, in attendance upon his Royal Highness.

One cannot but notice and commend the action of the Cavalry during the campaigns in Afghanistan. There is the brilliant charge of Major Stewart, with his little detachment of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, in the Khost Valley; another not less dashing on the part of Captains Shepperd and Gowan, with the 4th Punjab Cavalry, on the Mahsud Waziris, near Tank; the smart cavalry affair near Candahar, under Colonel Kennedy, with the 2nd Punjab Cavalry, the only brush with the enemy which that portion of our invading armies met with; the engagement of Guides Corps in which poor Wygram Battye lost his life, and the ill-fated Lieutenant Hamilton earned the Victoria Cross; and last, but not least, the affair of the 9th Lancers before Cabul, in which six officers and nearly a hundred men were placed hors de combat. We do not see that anything has been done for the officers named in despatches.

One of the suggestions of the Committee on Volunteer Reorganisation was that Line field-officers should be appointed to each consolidated battalion of Volunteers for five years. This suggestion was made for the purpose of utilising the services of those captains holding brevet rank who, after completing twenty-five years' service, would otherwise retire, and their experience in Army matters be lost to the country. There can be but little doubt that the judicious appointment of Line officers of experience to Volunteer regiments would be greatly to the advantage of our citizen-soldiers, and their appointment, it is understood, would find favour with the Volunteers themselves. This year and next will witness the exodus from the Army of a large number of tried and experienced officers, the very ones the Committee wish to provide for; and unless steps are speedily taken to secure them, these officers will not be available.

It is to be hoped that the new head of the War Office will turn his attention to the fact that a very considerable sum of money is expended every year in a most unsatisfactory manner, in consequence of the inordinate number of fraudulent enlistments which are now taking place in the Army,—i.e., the re-enlistment of men who have deserted from other regiments, or who have been discharged therefrom for incorrigible conduct or other causes, and who, when being attested, make oath that they have not previously served her Majesty. By one of those extraordinary dispensations of law, though perhaps not of justice, the meaning of which no ordinary mortal dare seek to fathom, a man who quits without leave any number of regiments, and re-enlists the same number of times, is declared by the Army Discipline Act of 1879 not to be a deserter, because he evinces no desire to leave her Majesty's Service. This is, indeed, encouraging enlistment for general service. On the other hand, another clause of this Act sets forth that if there be reasonable suspicion that an apprehended absentee had meant to desert, he may be tried for that offence, if absent only a few hours. This reasonable suspicion would be excited if the absentee were arrested in plain clothes; but all men present themselves for enlistment in plain clothes, and we therefore have the extraordinary anomaly that if a man is absent for a day, he may be tried as a deserter, but if he is absent for weeks, and in addition, commits the fraud of re-enlisting and perjuring himself before a magistrate, he is not to be charged as a deserter, because, forsooth! he did not mean to leave her Majesty's general Service. This ingenious plan, although it will show, next year, a most wonderful diminution in the number of deserters, has already had the effect of increasing that which used to be called desertion and fraudulent enlistment to a very serious extent. When it is considered that men who leave their regiments and enlist in others do not naturally select the latter among those stationed near at hand, but rather choose the most distant ones, it needs no force of imagination to picture the expense caused to the country and the inconvenience to the Service by the necessity of bringing evidence from place to place to identify them before courts-martial; to say nothing of the loss of the services of these evidences, a large number of whom are always now on the move, and away from their depôts or regiments. As a rule, the men who enlist in this manner do not seem at all anxious, when once fairly in the Service again, to conceal the fact of their having been soldiers before; but as soon as anything happens that displeases them, they give themselves up, declare the fact of their former service, are tried by court-martial, sentenced to be imprisoned, and are usually discharged with ignominy; and then, at the expiration of their imprisonment, a new field, in the shape of another regiment, is open to their enterprise. Another feature of the Service in the present day which may most appropriately be made mention of here, is the enlistment of men at brigade depôts, &c., for different branches of the Service. These men are called district recruits. The most manifest old soldiers, often of very mature age, and not unfrequently of convict life and repulsive appearance, are sent to corps as recruits of 19 and 20 years of age, and the commanding officer who is thus favoured has no choice but to take them. This is a terrible abuse, and Section 34 of the Army Discipline Act has certainly not lessened it, though framed with that object. For goodness' sake, let us do away with miserable cant and affectation of humanity, and let every convicted deserter and soldier discharged from the Service as unworthy to remain in it, be tattooed; or, better still, let every soldier, and, if needs be, every officer, on entering the Army, be so marked. Few, if any, would object, and none to whom the good of the Service is an object. We have terrible arrears, as far as the Budget goes, to pull up. Why not, then, reduce the cost of the Army, and increase its efficiency enormously, by such a simple and inexpensive means as a tattooed broad arrow?

A court-martial of an important character came to a close the other day at Warsaw. Major-General Offenberg, aide-de-camp to the Emperor, was charged with embezzling regimental funds while commander of the 5th Kargopol Dragoon Regiment, and Captain Tsinserling was accused of concealing the defalcations. The court was opened to the public at nine o'clock, and in the afternoon, both prisoners having confessed themselves guilty of the charges brought against them, General Offenberg was sentenced to be imprisoned two years and eight months in a fortress, to be dismissed the Service, and to pay a fine of 100 roubles; and Captain Tsinserling was ordered to be dismissed the Service, without, however, being deprived of his rank. In publishing the account of the trial the next day, the Official Gazette announced that, in consequence of the military services of the accused, the sentence on General Offenberg has been remitted to dismissal from the Army, and that on Captain Tsinserling mitigated to one month's arrest, without affecting his military position or prospects.

A French military writer has lately complained of the complete stagnation which reigns in the Army, promotion being altogether too slow. In 1831, a law was passed by which officers were required, before being able to retire on a pension, to serve for 30 years. In 1872, this period was reduced to 25 years; but three years afterwards, the old law of 1831 was re-enacted. Now there is a cry to return to 25 years, because it is absolutely necessary to have younger officers and to quicken promotion, so that the non-commissioned officers qualifying in the special schools may obtain the epaulette. It is remarked that when the law of 1831 was passed, the captain did not hold so important a rank as at present; in time of war, he had seldom to command more than 70 or 80 men, while now he is called upon to command 250. The natural consequence is, that younger and more vigorous captains are required. The question, however, is one of finance, and unless serious economies are effected in other quarters, it is not likely that Parliament will reconsider the decision at which it arrived in 1875. In Germany, there is a system of proportional retirement,—that is to say, an officer can retire after from 15 to 20 years' service on a minimum pension, after from 20 to 30 years on a maximum, and between 30 and 40 years on a maximum pension with a supplement. In Italy, the 25 years has been adopted, and within the last few years thousands of veterans have been permitted to retire on a little more than their laurels. One of the recommendations made in France is that officers should be allowed to retire from active service after 25 years, on the condition of serving in the Reserve or the Territorial Army for 10 years. As there are too many officers for the Active Army, and too few for the Reserve and the Territorial Army, this would doubtless be a desirable reform to accomplish.

The Committee of Inquiry which has recently been sitting in Vienna for the purpose of reporting on the proposed reorganisation of the Mountain Artillery of the Austrian Army, having recommended that step, a scheme for carrying it out has been elaborated by the Austrian General Staff, and the change has now been ordered to be carried out at once. The Austrian Mountain Artillery will in future be separated from the Fortress Artillery, with which it has up to the present time been incorporated. It will consist in future of 13 batteries, be attached to the 13 regiments of Field Artillery of the Austrian Army, and have the same numbers as their respective regiments. Batteries 11, 12, and 13, however, will exist only en cadre, and be completed only in case of war. The new arrangement, it is said, will greatly facilitate mobilisation, and remedy many of the evils exposed in the Bosnian campaign. In fact, the experience gained in that little war provided the impulse required for the thorough change now introduced.

In the Austrian Army Estimates for 1880 there are several items which attract particular attention, because they relate to measures of great political import. Among these are several demands for the strengthening of frontier fortresses. Thus, another 100,000 florins are required for provisional works in the fortress of Cracow. The Minister of War points out that, as the construction of permanent works is far from complete, it is necessary to provide for them temporarily by field-works, especially as he is not in a position at present to ask for the large sums required for the great works intended. A similar sum is wanted for "provisionally" fortifying the passes of Transylvania, next at Przemysl, and finally in Southern Tyrol, at Trent and Riva. Those fortresses, it is stated, would prevent enemies from interfering with mobilisation. The immediate completion of the fortifications of Pola Dockyard is insisted on, on the ground that the works must not be delayed; and of the 600,000 florins required, 200,000 florins are wanted at once. The existing works of Pola are obsolete, and would no longer protect the dockyard against an enemy. The latter demand is accompanied by the significant statement that, "as Pola would be threatened almost in any war, and that but few days would be left for preparing its defence, it is imperatively necessary that the works required should be finished in time of peace, to prevent consequences of indefinite bearing."

It is a fact not generally known that a corps of Marines existed in the Roman Army, but it is, nevertheless, a fact; and also that a Marine cohort was stationed in England. In Bruce's "History of the Roman Wall," which divided England from Scotland, the author states that, "In ascertaining the number and the names of the stations, a most valuable document has come down to our times from the period of the Roman occupation. The Notitia Imperii was, probably, written about the end of the reign of Theodosius the Younger, and was certainly composed before the Romans abandoned this island. It is a sort of list of the several military and civil officers and magistrates, both in the Eastern and Western Empires, and the places where they were stationed. It may, in fact, be regarded as the Army List of the Roman Empire." The portion of the section containing the information we quote is headed, Item per Lineam Valli—"Along the line of wall,"—and after detailing seventeen cohorts or wings of cohorts, with their stations, arrives at "The Tribune of the First Marine Cohort, styled Ælia, at Tunnocelum." Thus there was a first, and therefore a second, and possibly many other Marine Cohorts, in the Roman Army.

The catalogue of the library of the Russian Etat Major, which has made its appearance, furnishes interesting details respecting the institution. The library was founded in 1811, by Prince P. M. Volkovsky, who persuaded the Emperor Alexander I. to grant an allowance, and gave 500 volumes. The following year Colonel Eichen presented the institution with 1,000 volumes, and, after the entry of the Russian army into Paris Colonel Danilovsky was despatched to buy the best foreign works dealing with the art of war. His purchases exceeded 3,000 volumes, and the Emperor was so pleased with the exertions of the founders of the library, that he ordered a yearly grant of 500 gold ducats. In 1820, the Etat-Major purchased the library of the historian Vichmann; in 1822, it acquired the rare collection of books of Count Lobanoff Rostovsky; in 1831, it received from the executors of Prince Tchartoryski a present of several thousand works; and later on, it was increased by the addition of the library of the Staff of the Imperial Guard, numbering 4,000 volumes. The most important addition to the library was made, however, in 1850, when the Emperor Nicholas presented to the institute the 20,000 volumes composing the collection of Count Soukhtelion. Later on, the Etat-Major acquired 1,500 volumes from the library of the historian Smith; and in 1866, it secured the unique collection of works dealing with Turkey belonging to State Secretary Liprandi, and numbering over 3,000 volumes. At the present moment, the library consists of 37,843 works, of which 11,144 deal exclusively with the operations of war. The Censorial Regulations render the presentation of a copy of every work dealing with the jurisdiction of the Etat-Major obligatory. Besides this, the sum of 2,500 roubles, or £300, is annually spent on the purchase of foreign works, of which a large number are English. The collection is not kept exclusively for officers only, but is open to any civilian who may obtain permission from the Ministry of War.

The Select Committee on Heavy Ordnance, of which Major-Gen. Gordon, R.A., is president, are now engaged in preparing a report of a series of trials concluded at Shoeburyness at the end of last week, which have taken place with a view to testing the range and velocity of the new 6-in. and 8-in. Armstrong guns, designed for siege and garrison purposes. So far as their investigations have already gone, the results have, it is stated, far exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The 6-in., with a 35-lb. battering charge and an 80-lb. shell, attained a velocity of a fraction over 2,000 ft. per second, while the 8-in., with a 90-lb. battering charge and a 184-lb. shell, a velocity of 2,300 ft. per second. With a shell of an improved pattern the velocity was increased to 3,000 ft., which is said to be far beyond that which has ever been previously obtained by any gun now in use in the Service.

INDIA.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs:—"The Commander-in-Chief's memorandum on the Army Commission Report has been published. His Excellency begins by expressing regret that the sittings of the Commission continued after the departure of four of its members for the front. Gens. Phayre and O'Connell arrived late, and Gen. Lumsden was fully occupied with other matters; so that there were few meetings at which all the members attended. After this preliminary protest, Sir F. Haines goes on to state at length his reasons for dissenting from most of the more important recommendations of the Commission. He strongly objects to the proposal that the Commander-in-Chief should cease to be a member of the Council, and should have no direct command of troops. This proposal would, he thinks, make the Commander-in-Chief a purely bureaucratic personage. Neither does he approve of the suggestions as to the Territorial Army Corps. He considers that the existence of three separate governments and of three separate armies under them is a distinct source of safety and power such as could not be given by an army corps slightly connected with the local power. He sees no possible advantage to be derived from an amalgamated Staff, and considers the appointment of a Chief of the Staff unnecessary for the ordinary administration of the Army. The German system of army corps is, in Sir F. Haines's opinion, wholly unsuited for India, and he thinks that the localisation of troops in the districts to which they belong would be most mischievous and dangerous. He is averse from diminishing the cadres, which would necessitate the frequent division of regiments into detachments, thereby damaging their efficiency and discipline. The number of horse and field batteries ought, in his opinion, rather to be increased than diminished. He is especially opposed to the proposed reduction in the Madras Army. He believes that some of the proposals as to the abandonment of stations will have the effect of sacrificing a real and efficient control over the country with the view to a more compact and symmetrical distribution of troops. One of the few points on which he concurs with the Commission is its condemnation of the Staff Corps system, which he regards as being in a great part the cause of the inordinate cost of the Army in recent years."

According to the Times, "Great difficulty is being felt in recruiting for the Native Army. This is generally attributed to the somewhat shabby way in which the Government has treated the Native regiments on service in the matter of pay and allowances. Attempts are now being made to re-enlist pensioners under 40 years of age, but hitherto they have not met with much success."

A general court-martial assembled at Sherpur on March 12 to try Major H. H. Rankin, 28th Bombay N.I., on a charge of having "been drunk when on duty, when field officer of the day, in the 1st Brigade, 1st Division, Cabul Field Force." Our military readers will regret to learn that the court deemed it necessary to sentence the unfortunate officer to dismissal from her Majesty's service, and that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has, on a review of the case, approved and confirmed the sentence. The severity of the punishment seems to necessitate the publication of further details.

BREVET RANK.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The Services at the present time are more than usually indebted to the Army and Navy Gazette for its advocacy of the claims (for such they will become) of those officers, both majors and captains, who, unless some consideration is shown to them, will be very hardly hit when the month of October next arrives, and they find themselves cut off from all further advancement "by brevet for length of service;" for in future, promotion by such will be largely mixed with the element of favouritism, inasmuch as that which seems to prevail now, is to volunteer for any active service that may be going on: result, those with the most interest will be accepted, and in due course gain promotion. I have noticed that much of the sympathy, by anticipation, on this question is bestowed on the Purchase captains, and on those majors who were promoted in the compensation brevet of 1872; but may I be permitted to try and enlarge this sympathetic feeling towards the captains (although now majors) who were left out in the cold at that time (and who, everybody said, were equally entitled to promotion). The sympathy for these latter should, in a measure, be greater, as they will now feel themselves punished, as it were, a second time, and in this latter, more severely, as they will now be hopelessly cut off. This may be of small moment to the fortunate ones of the Service, but surely it is not asking too much that some selection should be made of a few hard cases, and as this doing away with breveting for length of service is an exceptional proceeding, so the Horse Guards should make exceptional cases, and promote such on or before October next. It was suggested in the Times of the 10th inst. that before the new system takes effect, and as an act of grace, all majors of 26 and captains of 20 years' service should receive their next step of rank by brevet. This certainly is the best idea that has been made, as the carrying of it out would, in a measure, cut the Gordian knot of much of the difficulty, and would be a means of equalising the promotion of the Cavalry and Line officers with those of the Ordnance and Staff Corps of India. As an example of the nature of the list of majors at present, the number to the end of the year 1875 is 520, or thereby. Now, out of this number, only 130 belong to the Cavalry and Infantry; the remainder, viz., 390, being entirely made up of Ordnance and Staff Corps officers. It is, therefore, much to be desired that consideration may be shown to many exceptional cases before the present system of breveting passes away.—I am, Sir, &c.

Junior U.S. Club, May 12. CATHAY.

The Gold Company of Southern India, of which a prospectus appears elsewhere, ought, if the calculations and data prove true, turn out a most profitable and successful undertaking.

SCENES ON SERVICE.

BY A FUTURE HISTORIAN.

[Time—Not very long ago. Place—Among the heathen. Dramatis Personæ—Officers and gentlemen, soldiers, natives, &c.]

[Scene 1.—The top of a hill. A couple of staff officers on horseback, reconnoitring through their glasses. Officers and mounted escort in background.]

General (speaking).—He is in the devil's own hurry! riding like mad! Who the —— can he be?

Brigadier.—It strikes me he is making for us. He never turns his head to look behind. Why, he is galloping for bare life!

General.—By Jove! There are some troopers behind him riding as hard as he is. Here he comes!

[Officer gallops up, panting, gasping, horse covered with foam.—]

Officer.—Oh! he's killed! he's killed! We were surrounded—hundreds of 'em—rode for our lives! I've escaped! so have some of the escort—four or five! Here they come! Phew! It was an escape, I can tell you (mops his face).

General.—Do, Sir, collect yourself, and tell us what this means. You do not mean to say you've left the young fellow to his fate? Where did it take place?

Officer (perspiring with valour).—Fought like lions! Killed a lot of them. Sword of the Lord and Gideon! But they were in swarms! It's four miles away, I'm sure, and never was the distance covered in a shorter time.

General (sternly).—How many were they, Sir? How many did you see?

Officer.—Couldn't count 'em! It was all so sudden, you see. Quite useless pulling up to see what became of him, or to fire on the enemy,—deceitful, treacherous wretches!

Brigadier (contemptuously).—And all you mounted men galloped off, and never drew rein for four miles! You ought to be shot on the spot, that's my opinion!'

Officer.—Oh, I dare say! I wish you had been there, that's all.

General.—Well, let us go back to dinner. To-morrow, we'll take active measures, and send out a strong force to get the body. I must say I think you acted, Sir, with great promptitude, and with a true appreciation of the rules of war. (Exeunt.)

[Scene 2.—A Court-martial sitting.]

President (reading finding).—On all the charges, "Guilty!" We find that the accused misbehaved in presence of the enemy, and did not do all that his duty required of him.

[Scene 3.—General-in-Chief at Head-quarters, loquitur.]

I disagree with the finding on every point! As the officer is a religious young man, I approve of the proceedings of the Court, and order the accused to return to his duty.

No. 2.—Act I.

[Scene 1.—A British regiment on the march. General and staff, natives, commissariat train, &c.]

General.—Very well, then! We'll halt here. Tell Colonel Fizzle to laager at once! Don't let him lose a moment.

[The column halts. The camp is formed. The men set to work with feverish haste with spade and pickaxe.]

General (excitedly).—Why, what a time they are! Do make haste and throw up that trench! (Shouting) I tell you all, if the Zulus come, they won't leave a man of you alive! (The men ply spade and pickaxe in a frenzy.)

[Scene 2.—A British Camp on a river, tents pitched on both sides. Time—dawn. A shot is heard on the left bank. Officer pops his head out of tent on the right bank.]

Officer (loq.).—By all that's horrible, there are the enemy! They are actually attacking our men! My horse! my horse! my kingdom for a horse! Have mercy, Heaven! (Mounts.) Sergeant Jones, fire away, as hard as you can! Don't let 'em come over till I get away for help. Bravo, Captain M——! See how he fights, poor man! Ah! he's down! I'm off. (Rides away.)

[Scene 3.—Another Court-martial.]

President (reads finding).—We find on all the charges "Not Guilty," and that the accused behaved with courage and coolness, and did his duty on all points.

General-in-Chief (reading finding).—I disagree with the Court on all points! But under all the circumstances, I approve of the finding, and desire the accused to return to his duty. It's the effect of the climate.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY REGIMENT.

A correspondent sends us the following article, which we publish for the ventilation of the subject to which it refers:—

"When the reduction of several batteries of Horse Artillery has been decided on, seems a fitting time to consider the whole question of Field Artillery; when it might be found not only possible to effect a saving, but at the same time to increase the efficiency of the whole arm, any scheme combining these two characteristics would scarcely need further argument to commend it, at least, to notice. In many of the various papers in which Horse and Field Artillery have been discussed, there appears to be an undercurrent of thought contemplating the necessity of maintaining Horse Artillery as a distinct branch from Field Artillery. By degrees, perhaps, the line of separation shows less defined. 'Foot Artillery' is allowed to be a misnomer, but all more or less clearly divide the two. To cite a case, I would allude briefly to the Royal Artillery Institution Prize Essay of 1878, by Lieutenant Trotter. My object is not to criticise the essay in its entirety; neither is it to detract from its general merit. I merely cite it to show how the thought I allude to seems to exist, and to show, if I can, how very little grounds there are for it in actual fact. Lieutenant Trotter says, in the concluding part of his essay:—

'I cannot agree with the theory occasionally expressed, that even the lightest calibres equipped on the field-battery system, with gun axle-tree seats, should ever take the place of Horse Artillery. In the first place, the gun-axle-tree-seat system is not the lightest possible. To work a gun properly at least six men are required, and to bring those six men upon the field-battery system involves carrying three men on the gun limber and two on the axle-tree seats, in all three men more than are carried by the Horse Artillery. This is equivalent to adding 36 stone or 4·5 cwt. permanently to the weight behind the team. This might not tell in a battle, or in a day, but it surely would in a week's marching.'

This is reason number one. Let us accept as beyond dispute that 36 stone or 4·5 cwt. is added to the weight behind the team. Well, what does it prove? Does it prove that to carry these three men, eight to ten horses and a mounted detachment are necessary or even desirable, or does it show in any way that another pair of draught horses would not more than compensate for the additional weight of three men? Secondly, he says:—'It is unscientific and unpractical to reduce the Field Batteries to the Horse Artillery calibre.' Now, we may fairly ask, did any Artillery officer in his serious moments ever contemplate reducing the whole of the Artillery required in the field, to the calibre which appears to suit best that portion which is required to move with the greatest celerity? It is not likely. For the sake of discussion, let us call Horse and Field Artillery one name,—the Artillery required in the Field. Then, let us see, first, what necessities of existence it has to fulfil; and secondly, how they can be best fulfilled. Firstly, then, one incontrovertible fact may be accepted, viz., that Field Artillery should be armed with the largest calibre consistent with the mobility required; secondly, though not so incontrovertibly, that a portion of the Field Artillery will be required to move with greater celerity than the rest. Assuming, then, these to be the only necessities, how can they be best arrived at efficiently and thoroughly, and yet not be overdone? I will take it for granted that six men can work a gun, the number mentioned by Lieutenant Trotter, from which I see no reason to differ. Then a gun with a mounted number one, three gunners on the limber and two on the axle-tree boxes, fulfils the necessary conditions, so far at least as numbers are concerned, no matter whether the gun is to move at a walk or a gallop. Now, if a gun is only required to move at a trot, as the ordinary pace, then let it be of a large calibre as is consistent with this pace. If, on the other hand, it is to manœuvre ordinarily at a gallop, then reduce the calibre. Again, I take it for granted that the existing Field Artillery must not be reduced in calibre, and as carrying three additional men would increase by 36 stone, or 4 cwt. 5 lb., the weight behind the time of the lightest class, I would simply hook in one additional pair of horses, or better still, never hook in more than three pair, but with the fourth pair make a daily change, easing altogether any pair on which the work was telling most; and, if I do not greatly err, this will leave a large balance on the advantage side; if so, condition number two is fulfilled. Now, if the desired end is obtainable as I have said, it follows that there is no further need of the eight or ten additional mounted men. The gun of the same calibre as now, as well and efficiently driven, with a somewhat lighter permanent weight behind the team, can be brought into action with sufficient gunners to work it, and 'what would you wish for more?' Horse Artillery as it now exists—i.e., with mounted detachments—is a glorious spectacle, and I do not for a moment underrate its powers of coming into action as fast and well as now proposed. But can it do so faster? I think not. Is it not uselessly expensive, as it now exists? Is it not a fact that you utilise a horse's power in the least productive way when you put one man on his back, instead of making him draw several men, and is there not a question of mouths to feed in the field? Nay, further, and more important still. Is it necessary, is it even desirable, is it not morally wrong and utter waste, to bring habitually 14 horses and 13 men under fire when the same object can be as well obtained with seven horses and nine men? A passing word here regarding the Field Battery as it now exists may not be out of place. What can be more ridiculous than the present drill, manœuvring and coming into action, with its waggons close to its guns, and teaching this in book and field as its proper, recognised drill? Why should it be the only portion of the British Army which is taught, on its private parade, that which is manifestly absurd, and not even contemplated in the field? If, as is sometimes said, it is to teach the drivers, then why is it confined to the Field Battery? This is not the real reason, though a prudent officer would always dismount his men when he had any object in easing his horses, and when time, &c., admitted, at a hill, for instance, as any one in every-day life would; yet no one in his senses would, on service, bring his gun into action except with his gunners mounted, fit and ready to do their work, not blown and unsteady. And if this be the end for which we drill, why are we not thus taught, why is the drill not real, not the cock-tailed absurdity that has existed too long already? Waggons have no more connection with one calibre than another in the field; their rôle in either case is to be at hand, within reach, but out of fire, to supply men or material, no more, no less. Let us put away all preconceived notions as to the necessity for one part of the Field Artillery wearing a smarter uniform than the other part; a smart uniform always did, and always will, add to the individual pride of the soldier, and so in the aggregate will tend to make the whole machine smarter. But it is as essential to one part as to the other. Away with all ideas which have no origin save in tradition! Let not one part be any longer unduly exalted, to the detriment of the whole. But let us have all up to the required standard, all reality. Let the day be no more seen when selection is made from one portion for transfer of its best and smartest men to the other. All Artillery used in the field ordinarily is permanently mounted, and its component parts, as regards men and horses, should be interchangeable, likewise its material, so far as possible. And if, as some contemplate, less galloping and more shooting be the future, it is on the cards that all Field Artillery might be armed with the largest calibre. Think what an advantage this would be on service in the supply of casualties, always a reserve to be counted from some place; and yet, with this power of rehabilitation at hand, never a man or horse more than actually necessary under fire, all the reserves, men, horses, or material, with the waggons, under cover, habitually and permanently, until required. This alone must reduce the casualties in action, in horses by half, and in men by one-third, because that number less are brought under fire. Oftentimes when any change is proposed, there are, for a time at least, reasons which at any rate appear sufficiently strong to bar progress. I need scarcely say that the most common is expense. To effect what I here propose, would be saving. A few strokes of the pen, the abolition of a little not unnatural prejudice, a greater similarity in the chalk lines and even of the scissors at Pimlico, and in a few months it is done, and all the Artillery used in the field is dressed and equipped alike, call it what you will, Horse Artillery, Field Artillery, Mounted Artillery (I wish to remove no prestige attaching to an old and honoured name, for this alone has its use), but let it be a common name. Much has been done of late years to assimilate the two existing branches, much that is positively grotesque has been done to further this end, and in time, I have no doubt the end will be arrived at; but I much fear this must be looked for from without. There are too many prejudices, too many preconceived notions, too many conflicting personal interests, to make it likely that the change should come from within. Yet I venture to express (in conclusion) my hope that the day is not far distant when Field Artillery shall have one name, one organisation, one drill, one dress, one faith."

MADRAS OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In the approaching Birthday gazette, I sincerely hope some notice will be taken of Madras officers. The fortunate participators in the Ashantee, Zulu, and Afghan wars have hitherto monopolised most of the honours, but on looking over the war services of Madras officers, I notice that one or two C.B.'s have got a longer record to their names than several of the recently made K.C.B.'s, notably in the case of one who has been a C.B. for 22 years, during the whole of which period he has held important commands. There is not a K.C.B. in the Madras Army. Gen. Keyes, who has recently been made one, has put in the most of his service in Bengal. I write this, hoping it will attract your attention, and thereby that of his Royal Highness and the War Office, to what I deem the neglected claims of some officers of this Presidency, who won their C.B.'s after years of hard fighting, at a time when such honours were distributed with a more sparing hand than they are now. Though retired for many years, I look back with affection to the old coast army, and this must be my apology for occupying so much of your valuable space.—I am, &c.,

RETIRED.

Ootakamand, April 15.

A dinner in aid of the funds of the Princess Helena College, an old-established charity, formerly known as the "Adult Orphan Institution," will take place on Saturday, the 22nd inst., at which his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has graciously consented to preside, and will be supported by Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, K.G. There is no endowment, and an effort is now being made to obtain support to carry on, as well as, if possible, extend, the useful and important work of educating, as governesses, the orphan daughters of the clergy, officers in the Army or Navy, and of civil servants.

A return made to the House of Lords shows that the annual cost of the brigade depôts, including the permanent staff of Militia actually formed, is £964,160, of which £611,250 is for pay, &c., of all ranks; £215,000 for provisions, forage, fuel, light, travelling expenses, lodging allowances, &c.; and £49,000 for clothing and necessaries

ROYAL HORSE GUARDS (BLUE). Capt. the Hon. W. C. FitzWilliam left England on Thursday for India with the Marquis of Ripon, as aide-de-camp.

1ST (KING'S) DRAGOON GUARDS. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Marter had the honour of an interview with her Majesty at Windsor Castle on Saturday last, when he presented the Queen with some relics of the 24th Regiment from the battle-field of Isandlwana.

2ND DRAGOONS (ROYAL SCOTS GREYS). Lieut. C. A. B. Turnor died in Dundalk Barracks on the 4th inst. He joined the Army Sept. 5, 1877. While riding in the Tantivy Plate at Baldoyle on Tuesday, 2nd Lieut. Middleton received a severe fall, but, according to the latest accounts, he has almost recovered from the effects of the accident.

4TH HUSSARS. The first race meeting held by the regiment since its return from India took place last week at Sellinge, near Hythe. Owing to the difficulty in procuring suitable ground at this season in the vicinity of Shorncliffe, the stewards gladly availed themselves of the kind offer of Mr. Bayden, over whose farm an almost entirely natural course was flagged out, well adapted for testing the cross-country skill of both horses and riders. The day was cold and dull, with frequent rain, making it rather slippery work at the fences; but with the exception of the sad accident to the Rake, who broke his leg, no contretemps occurred to mar the day's sport. Amongst the company present were Lady Headley, the Earl of Guilford, Gen. Lord A. Russell, and a large gathering from Shorncliffe, Dover, and Canterbury garrisons. The stewards were Col. Moore, Majors Montague, Phillips, Capt. Hutchins, and Lieuts. Skinner, and Blacker; clerk of the course and scales, Lieut. and Adjt. Farmer; hon. sec., Major Phillips; starter, Capt. Hutchins. The meeting opened with the Chargers' Race—A sweepstakes of 3 sovs. each, with £25 added; about two miles. Mr. Blacker's Lord of the Isles (Owner), 1; Mr. Skinner's Spicebox (Mr. Critchley), 2; Mr. De la Cherois's Flash-in-the-Pan (Mr. Kincaid-Smith), 3. The Regimental Challenge Cup—Value, 100 guineas, added to a sweepstakes of 5 sovs. each: Capt. Underwood's Maud (Mr. Wilson-Todd), 1; Mr. Follett's Cricklade (Owner), 2; Major Phillips' Blanche (Owner), 3; Major Montague's Earl (Mr. Matthews), 4. Farmers' Cup (Steeplechase)—Value 25 sovs., for maiden hunters: Won easily by Mr. Bayden's Aunt Sally. An Open Sweepstakes, of 3 sovs. each, with 30 added, for hunters—Mr. Peters' Punchbowl (Mr. Matthews), 1; Capt. Bullen's Swordsman (Owner), 2; Mr. C. D. Holmes's Cinderella (Owner), 3; Hon. L. White's Elvino (Owner), 4. The Subalterns' Challenge Cup—Value, 200 gns., added to a sweepstakes of 2 sovs. each: Mr. Blacker's Brunette, (Owner), 1; Mr. W. Todd's Hafiz (Owner), 2; Mr. Peters's Phlorenza (Owner), 3. Polo Pony Steeplechase—Capt. Underwood's Kitty (Mr. Wilson-Todd), 1; Mr. F. Blacker's Erin's Pride (Mr. Matthews), 2. Kitty made the running throughout, and won by two lengths. This was the prettiest race of the day, as throughout a table-cloth would have covered the lot which fenced at racing pace to perfection. Consolation Stakes—Won by Mr. Skinner's Sago (Capt. Hutchins). There was an elaborate luncheon provided, and the splendid band of the regiment discoursed music during the latter part of the day, which was concluded by a race dinner at Shorncliffe, at which several old officers of the regiment were present.

8TH HUSSARS. The regiment left Muttra on Dec. 23 last, to join the Reserve Division, Cabul Field Force, Peshawur, where it arrived on Jan. 15. It advanced to Jumrood on Feb. 10, where it remained till March 29, having, however, in the meantime detached two troops (G and H), under Major Burke, to Basawal and Dakka. Head-quarters and the remaining four troops arrived at Basawal on April 2, picking up the detachment at Fort Dakka, and the regiment is now attached to the first section of the Khyber line force, under Brigdr.-Gen. Gib. Basawal being deemed unhealthy for the summer months, the European troops, consisting of the 8th Hussars, L-5th R.A., and the 1st Batn. 8th Fusiliers, moved on the 17th ult. to Pesh Bolak, about 10 miles forward, and to the left of Basawal. Capt. Sutton rejoins from Peshawur, having recovered from a severe illness. Lieut. Clowes has proceeded on to Cabul, in charge of a transport convoy, and Lieut. Fell has rejoined head-quarters from Gundamuck, where he has been employed on a similar duty. Considerable annoyance has been given by the Shinwaris, who almost nightly fire into the camp.

9TH LANCERS. The World says:—"Col. Cleland, of the 9th Lancers, who was lately reported on his way home to England on sick-leave, was found, I regret to say, in so precarious a condition on his arrival in the plains that the voyage to England was prohibited, and he has been sent up to Simla, in the hope that there he may regain strength sufficient to enable him to return home. I fear his state is dangerous; the bullet that struck him when charging the Afghans in the Chardeh Valley remains in the stomach, and occasions much discomfort. Another victim of Afghan bullets in the same combat has fared better. Capt. Chisholme, of the 9th Lancers, has reached England on sick leave, but wonderfully fit, notwithstanding the limp that will stick to him, probably for life, from the bullet-wound in the thigh. The Raleigh greeted Capt. Chisholme with mighty enthusiasm."

10TH HUSSARS. Lieut. Rose and 2nd Lieut. Allsopp are on passage home from India, in H.M.S. Jumna, which left Bombay on the 18th ult.

11TH HUSSARS. Pensioned Serjt.-Major W. William has just died at Portsmouth. He and his eldest brother, now Governor of Birkenhead Workhouse, were in the charge of the Light Brigade, both belonging to Lord Cardigan's regiment, and both came out of the memorable conflict unscathed. The deceased, however, on one occasion, when sleeping on the wet ground, became frozen to the earth, receiving such spinal injuries that eventually, during last year, symptoms of insanity presented themselves, and he died in the borough lunatic asylum.

12TH LANCERS. Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Russell is to be placed on the establishment, vice Capt. Hayes, retired.

13TH HUSSARS. Lieuts. Doyne and MacDougall, and Qrmr. Lewis left India on the 24th ult., in H.M.S. Euphrates, en route to England.

15TH HUSSARS. Lieut. Gavin, a probationer, officiating squadron-officer, 2nd Sind Horse, is about to be admitted to the Bombay S.C., from Oct. 10, 1878.

17TH LANCERS. No promotion takes place in the regiment in consequence of Capt. Alexander's retirement, Capt. Kevill-Davies having been placed on the establishment.

19TH HUSSARS are under orders to proceed to the Curragh towards the end of this month for the summer drills.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

The following officers, arranged according to seniority passed the final examination of the Seventh Advanced Class, in March last, viz.:—Major E. D. Tarleton and Capt. W. B. Hemans—Honours: Steam and mechanism. Capt. G. W. Hawkins—Honours: Steam, mechanism, and physics. Capts. G. Mackinlay, R. S. Watson, H. Crofton, and W. P. Blandy—Honours: Chemistry, metallurgy, steam, mechanism, and physics.

K Baty. B Brig. R.H.A. will leave Canterbury and arrive at Bristol on the 18th inst., and embark in H.M.S. Assistance for Dublin on the following day.

Brevet Col. F. T. Whinyates, C Brig. R.H.A., has been ordered from Woolwich to Dublin.

Lieut.-Col. W. Booth, 4th Brig. R.A., has been ordered from Newcastle-on-Tyne to Athlone, to assume command of the field batteries at the latter station.

H Baty. B Brig. R.H.A. moves from Newbridge to Exeter, embarking at Kingstown to-day.

E Baty. C Brig. R.H.A. has proceeded this week from Woolwich to Canterbury.

M Baty. 3rd Brig. leaves Limerick for Dublin on Monday next, and embarks on the 24th inst. for Portsmouth, from whence it will proceed to Woolwich.

A correspondent writes:—"When Lieut.-Col. the Hon. A. Stewart was transferred to the command of the Riding Establishment a short time since, it was rumoured at the leading clubs that some hesitation existed as to whether Major Magenis or Lieut.-Col. Hazlerigg should get the vacant 'jacket.' This surely cannot be the case, as Lieut.-Col. Hazlerigg has already been rewarded for his services in Afghanistan by a brevet, and it would be manifestly unjust to pass over so many of his seniors, who are waiting their turn for reappointment to the R.H.A., but have not had his good-luck. We hear much anxiety is felt as to the disposal of the two jackets which will be vacant on the promotion of the two senior majors on the Bengal List."

Capt. F. O. Barrington Foote sailed for India on Thursday with the Marquis of Ripon, as aide-de-camp.

The following officers are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which sailed from Bombay on the 18th ult., viz.:—Brevet Col. D. J. MacGregor, 8th Brig. (late Bombay); and Majors J. F. Meiklejohn, 10th Brig. (late Bengal), and A. Dixon, C Brig. R.H.A. (late Bengal). The following are taking passage in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed on the 24th ult., viz.:—Lieut.-Col. E. F. Lewes, 4th Brig. (late Bengal); Brevet Lieut.-Col. Hon. A. Stewart, Riding Establishment; Major D. V. Shortland, 1st Brig. (late Bombay); and Capt. W. N. Lockyer.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Brevet Col. G. Gordon, C.B., left London on Thursday, en route to India, in company with the Marquis of Ripon, to whom he will act as private secretary.

Lieut. H. H. Barnet is en route from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which sailed from Bombay on the 18th ult., and Lieut. J. B. Sharpe in the Euphrates, which left on the 24th ult.

The Standard says "the Intelligence Department of the War Office is engaged in collecting all possible information with regard to the Chinese frontier, in view of a probable rupture between Russia and China, and the duty of compiling the data has been entrusted to Capt. W. Gill, R.E., who lately contested the borough of Nottingham in the Conservative interest."

Capt. W. A. H. Hare has been transferred from the Intelligence Branch at the War Office to Ireland, for special employment under the Board of Works.

For the third year in succession, the "Professional Papers" of the Royal Engineer Institute have been published, and the volume extends to a size considerably beyond that of any of its predecessors. Mingling with subjects of especial interest and value to the corps, papers and lectures of a more general character are included; and among these is an address which was delivered at the Royal Engineer Institute, Chatham, by Professor Huxley, on the geographical distribution of animals. No part of such distribution, the great biologist says, has been more neglected than the crustaceous fauna of the rivers of remote parts of the world; and it is to this branch of study that his remarks are chiefly directed. Major R. H. Vetch, secretary of the institute, has edited this book, which is copiously enriched with plates and maps.

Our readers will remember the attack made a short time ago in the camp of Lieut. C. F. Fuller, near Quetta, whilst he, with others of his corps, was engaged in surveying the line of railway from Quetta to Candahar. The defence organised by the young engineer seems to have been very creditable, as the following account, given by a local correspondent, will show:—"The camp of Lieut. Fuller was situated in the midst of the hills N.E. of Quetta, and about 20 miles off as the crow flies. He had with him at the time of the attack, an escort of one jemadar and seven rifles 28th Bombay N.I. The attack was made at early daybreak on March 28, by a party of some hundreds of Pathans rushing down from a commanding hill, (where it seems they must have been concealed the greater part of the night) on to the tents. The noise they made in advancing awoke Lieut. Fuller, who at once falling in the escort commenced to return the fire. This made the enemy retreat to the top of the hills. Once there, the enemy lined the crest and commenced a heavy fire. Finding it impossible with such a few men to dislodge the enemy, Lieut. Fuller made his men lie full length on the top of a sloping bank leading to the river, and return the fire slowly and carefully. Half an hour had elapsed, when suddenly a considerable body of Pathans opened fire from the top of a commanding hill on one side and rather to the rear of the camp. Lieut. Fuller sent Serjt. Grant, R.E., overseer, with four rifles, to reply to this new attack, but the serjeant was immediately wounded in the neck. As Lieut. Fuller had seen that most of the hill-tops on either side of him were occupied by the enemy, and as he had lost a good many men, he thought it advisable to retire. He ordered the wounded and camp-followers to clear out, and brought up the rear with eight rifles, including himself, retiring four at a time. The enemy followed up for a mile or so, but never attempted to come to close quarters. They then went off to loot the camp. Everything in the camp is destroyed or taken away. Government instruments, Lieut. Fuller's and Serjt. Grant's horses, &c., everything was lost. It is evident, I think, that, had it not been for the coolness and presence of mind displayed by Lieut. Fuller, the first rush of the Pathans would have succeeded, and every man in the camp would have been murdered."

GRENADIER GUARDS. 2nd Lieut. Darby-Griffith, who has just been gazetted from the Royal Berks Militia, is the son of Mr. Darby-Griffith, of Padworth House, Berkshire, who was for 12 years M.P. for Devizes. His grandfather, Major-General Darby-Griffith, served for many years in the Grenadier Guards, and was very severely wounded at the battle of Corunna; and his uncle, Gen. Darby-Griffith, was for 17 years in command of the Scots Greys, and commanded them through the Crimea.

SCOTS GUARDS. Lieut. Brett left England on Thursday for India with the Marquis of Ripon, to whom he has been appointed aide-de-camp. The adjutancy of the 2nd Battalion is vacant by Lieut. Brett's appointment to the Staff.

1ST, OR ROYAL SCOTS. Col. Watts (retired) and Capt. Isaacson, 2nd Batn., are on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed from Bombay on the 24th ult.

2ND QUEEN'S. Capt. Montgomery is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn. on promotion, and Lieut. Atkinson from the 2nd to the 1st Batn. Lieut. Dawson, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 9th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

4TH KING'S OWN. Major Middleton and Capt. Little remain with the 2nd Batn. on promotion. Capt. Sawyer is posted to the 2nd Batn. on transfer from the 43rd Foot. Capt. Leggett, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, which left Bombay on the 24th ult.

5TH FUSILIERS. Capt. Hargreave, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs. Capt. Gall, lately promoted to an unattached company, is en route from India in H.M.S. Euphrates.

6TH REGIMENT. Capt. O'Beirne remains with the 1st Batn. on promotion. Lieut. King, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which sailed from Bombay on the 18th ult., and Lieut. Maunsell, 1st Batn., in the Euphrates, which sailed on the 24th ult. Lieut. Ostrehan and 2nd Lieut. Dawson, 2nd Batn., are candidates for the Indian Staff Corps, and have been posted to the 9th and 8th Bengal N.I. respectively, on probation.

7TH FUSILIERS. Lieut. Rodick has been recommended for the appointment of Musketry Instructor to the 2nd Batn. Lieut. Donald, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed from Bombay on the 24th ult.

8TH KING'S. Lieut. Taylor obtains his company, vice Brevet Major Brown, retired.

9TH REGIMENT. Lieut. and Adjt. James obtains his company, vice Capt. Ind, retired. Capt. Stockley, 2nd Batn., has been recalled to regimental duty from Brigade-Major, 1st Brig., Southern Afghan Field Force, in consequence of the paucity of officers at head-quarters. Qrmr. Reeves, 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which sailed from Bombay on the 18th ult.

12TH REGIMENT. Lieut. Perceval, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Euphrates, which sailed from Bombay on the 24th ult.

13TH LIGHT INFANTRY. The London correspondent of the Irish Times writes:—"The health of Lieut.-Col. Gilbert, who commanded the 1st Batn. 13th Light Infantry throughout the operations in Zululand, has been so seriously shattered since his arrival in England that he has been recommended to retire from the Service. It was Col. Gilbert of whom Sir Evelyn Wood spoke in such flattering terms on the occasion of the Chelmsford presentation. And from all accounts the eulogiums passed upon the officer were no more than he deserved. Col. Gilbert was over and over again advised to seek change of climate, but he absolutely refused to quit the field whilst yet operations were proceeding. At length, however, he completely broke down, and his constitution is so shattered that fears are entertained lest he may be permanently incapacitated." Major Gillett becomes Lieut.-Col., vice Lieut.-Col. Brown, retired upon half-pay, Brevet Major Allfrey obtaining his majority and Lieut. Justice his company. Capt. and Pymr. M'Laughlin, 2nd Batn., sailed from Bombay on the 24th ult., in H.M.S. Euphrates, for England.

14TH REGIMENT. The first regimental dinner took place at the Criterion on the 7th inst., when the following officers were present:—Gen. Sir James Alexander, C.B.; Major-Gens. Trevor, C.B., and Hammersley; Col. Drew, C.B.; Lieut.-Cols. Cope and Saunders; Majors Macdonnel, Dixon, Bradley, Laing; Capts. Carlyon, Patton, Firman, Van Heythuysen, Pigott, Hosack, Ruttledge, and Robinson; Lieuts. Dalton, Walker, C. Mills, Cox, Burke, Carter, Lowry, Wemyss, MacAdam, Salmonson, and Crofton; Surg.-Gen. Moffatt; Surg. Scanlan; and Mr. T. Mills. A handsome centre-piece, designed by Messrs. Elkington and Co., which has just been presented to the 1st Batn. by officers on promotion, was exhibited on the dinner-table and was much admired. Lieut.-Col. Cosby, late of the 2nd Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which left Bombay on the 18th ult. Lieut. Hewett, 1st Batn., a probationer, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., with effect from June 25. Lieut. Fry also takes passage in the Jumna, en route to join the 1st Batn.

18th Royal Irish. Capt. Tufnell, 1st Batn., is on passage home from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which sailed from Bombay on the 18th ult.; and Lieut. Slater in the Euphrates, which left on the 24th ult. Capt. Graves is transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Batn., on promotion.

21st Fusiliers. Capt. Hewat, 1st Batn., is en route to England from India in H.M.S. Jumna, which left Bombay on the 18th ult.

22nd Regiment. Capt. White remains with the 1st Batn. on promotion. 2nd Lieut. Montgomery, 2nd Batn., is a candidate for the Indian Staff Corps, and has been appointed to the 34th Bengal N.I., on probation.

24th Regiment. During the recent visit of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh in Cork, he availed himself of an opportunity of visiting the fine cathedral of that city. Associated with the many works of art which now make that cathedral most attractive for visitors to the South of Ireland is the memorial to the late Lieut. Coghill, who fell at Isandlwana, and this received very special notice from his Royal Highness. Much desire having been expressed that a memorial to Lieut. Melville should be associated with that of Lieut. Coghill, about half the needful amount has been subscribed in Cork towards the obtaining of a stained-glass window and tablet for this purpose, side by side with that of his gallant brother-in-arms. The Bishop of Cork has written a letter to the public press in advocacy of obtaining the completion of this double memorial, and has offered to receive contributions for this purpose. The cathedral of Cork is in a prominent position for such memorials, and a large number has lately been added to it.

While quartered at Singapore a detachment of the regiment took part in the suppression of the Malay revolt, and did good service in the Perak campaign under Gen. Colborne. The 80th was subsequently ordered to South Africa, and after taking part in the operations against Sekukuni in 1878, was engaged in the Zulu war. Under Col. The Globe says:—"Some of our military contemporaries have announced that a Royal Warrant will shortly be promulgated for the purpose of ameliorating the position of the medical officers of the brigade of Guards, who are at present the worst paid doctors in the Army. These officers, although they are selected from the Army Medical Department for special service witth the Household Troops, are denied the advantages which other Army doctors obtained by the last Warrant, and are neither promoted to the rank of surgeon-major after twelve years' service, nor are they eligible for promotion to the higher administrative grades of the department. It seems an anomaly that alone amongst all ranks in the Household Troops, the doctors should be worse paid than their brethren of the Line, a piece of economy, however, by which the Government save at least several hundreds per annum. We hope, therefore, that the proposed or hoped-for Warrant will not be long in making its appearance, and that it will remove such serious drawbacks as we have alluded to in connection with some of our most distinguished regiments." Surg.-Major S. Alder, on the Half-pay List, died on the 8th inst., from the effects of Ashantee fever. He entered the Army as assist.-surg. in Nov., 1854, and served with the 62nd Regt. in the Crimean campaign of 1854-55, for which he received the medal with the clasp and the Turkish medal. Reviews.

Mr. Archibald Forbes and the Zulu War. By N. L. Walford. (Samuel Tinsley.)—Mr. Forbes's article, in a recent issue of the Nineteenth Century, seems to have attracted no small amount of notice. In Fraser Col. Harness contributes a paper on the Zulu campaign, "from a military point of view," in which he criticises Mr. Forbes's strictures on the conduct of the war. We have also received Capt. Walford's pamphlet, in which he deals with Mr. Forbes's criticisms forcibly, though it may be rudely. Having paid some well-merited compliments to that gentleman in his character of a war correspondent, and at the same time questioned most distinctly the utility, in a military point of view, of his most brilliant sketches, Capt. Walford proceeds to consider Mr. Forbes's criticisms and views as to the way in which the campaign should have been worked out. In the first instance, Lord Chelmsford's plan of invasion was in four columns,—by Etshowe, Middle Drift, Rorke's Drift, and Utrecht. Mr. Forbes would have preferred the mode of invasion to be on only two lines—Etshowe and Utrecht—which would have avoided the subdivision of force, and the consequent weakness of the columns. It seems now to be generally admitted that the invasion by separate invading columns was a grave error, a fact proved by the subsequent action of Lord Chelmsford when he invaded Zululand for a second time, and with two columns only. It seems a fair conclusion to arrive at that the original plan with which the Commander-in-Chief attempted to work out his ideas was radically wrong, and, it may be added, was the cause of the two great disasters of the war. Capt. Walford contends that if Mr. Forbes's plan had been adopted, there would have remained a large intervening space which could neither be cleared nor observed, but would have been available for use by the Zulu army, or even by a mere detachment of a few thousand men, who might easily have occasioned the retreat of the invaders by a sudden inroad into Natal. The next objection to Lord Chelmsford's plan taken by Mr. Forbes was the difficulties of intercommunication and mutual support, a difficulty which Capt. Walford contends would have pressed even more heavily on the columns if they had been moved according to Mr. Forbes's plan, since the distance between the lines of advance would have been so much greater. The next question is that of "interior lines." In dealing with it, Capt. Walford complains that Mr. Forbes writes as if the Zulu army was a coherent mass, bound together by organisation and amenable to discipline, "whereas he must share the now common knowledge that after an action, whether victorious or not, the custom of the Zulus is to disperse." If this be so, the question may naturally arise, What, then, of invasion by them, invasion such as was absurdly assumed to be contemplated by the Zulu King, an assumption which proved, no doubt, a powerful factor in deciding the question of peace or war? The next argument is, that the event showed the faultiness of the strategy. Referring to this, Capt. Walford lays down the maxim that strategy depends for its eventual working out upon tactical successes, and contends that in the present case the plan fell through owing to the tactical failure at Isandhlwana, at the same time observing that, had the lines of invasion been limited to two, a tactical disaster would have been equally possible, provided the other conditions of the fight at Isandhlwana had been fulfilled. Having referred to some other points in which he differs from Mr. Forbes, and having minutely described "entrenchments" and "laager formations," Capt. Walford marshals the charges which Mr. Forbes brings against Lord Chelmsford, with regard to the period of the campaign which extends from the relief of Etshowe to the combat of Ulundi, in the following order :—First, the stay of the 1st Division on the Tugela. Second, the direction and plan of the advance into Zululand. Third, the delay of that advance. Fourth, the tactics of Ulundi. We must refer our readers to Capt. Walford's pamphlet for the particulars as to the first three of these charges, passing on to the last and most important,—the tactics at Ulundi, and the occurrences from that event down to Lord Chelmsford's resignation of the command. Mr. Forbes's charge is that after the victory of Ulundi, Lord Chelmsford, by withdrawing his force from its forward position, "threw to the wind" the results of the battle. Capt. Walford replies that had the Commander-in-Chief remained at Ulundi, his infantry would have been useless, his cavalry too few for the purpose of catching the fugitive King; and this useless force must have been fed from the frontier. Moreover, nothing remained of the Zulu army after Ulundi, and Lord Chelmsford retired knowing that he had fully accomplished the object for which he advanced, and that the capture of Cetewayo was not his affair. Lord Chelmsford had provisions for a fortnight, but that period would not have sufficed for the capture of Cetewayo; and what was then to happen? The choice lay between a leisurely retirement on the 5th of July, and a precipitate retreat a fortnight later under the pressure of hunger. Capt. Walford still further contends that the results of Ulundi were the utter destruction of the Zulu army as a body, the consequent opening up of Zululand to small detachments of troops, the ultimate capture of Cetewayo, and the saving of money, as well as lives. In concluding his pamphlet, the author informs his readers that he has no personal acquaintance with Lord Chelmsford, was not present in Africa during the Zulu war, and has no interest in giving publicity to his views, other than that of expressing regret at seeing a gallant officer and an honourable gentleman placed in a false position by the snarls of a "self-styled military critic." It seems, however, a pity that its author should have thought it desirable to sneer at Mr. Forbes's assuming the position of a military critic, admitting that he is "an entertaining person," as well as an "excellent war correspondent," but "fearing that he has gained but very little (military) honour in his own country," and asserting that "among officers who have studied their profession, no importance would be attached to the expression of Mr. Forbes's adherence to either side of a disputed question." This is all really bad "form," and might with advantage have been omitted. Mr. Forbes has made a name not only as a "war correspondent," but as one who from long experience has gained a right to form conclusions on military questions, and the high reputation he has gained will not be lessened by the criticism of the author.

Cetshwayo's Dutchman. By Cornelius Vijn. (Longmans and Co.)—This handy little volume, with its quaint title, is simply a private journal of a white trader in Zululand during the British invasion. It, however, gains additional value from being translated from the Dutch, and edited, with preface and notes, by the Right Rev. J. W. Colenso, Bishop of Natal. We learn from the editorial preface that Mr. Cornelius Vijn is a young Hollander, 23 years of age, who has been trading for a long period in Zululand, and acquired a thorough knowledge of the language and of the customs and habits of the people, and that he submitted his manuscript to the Bishop of Natal, who approved cordially of its being made accessible to English readers. The series of notes which have been appended by the editor serve to throw further light on the several matters referred to in the journal, and more especially on the character and conduct of Cetshwayo. The editor expresses in strong, plain language his striking conviction "that the Zulu King has been grossly misrepresented, by those who have wished to find some support in his doings for waging, in the name and with the power of Christian England, the late most unjust and wicked war." He points particularly to Sir Bartle Frere, as having been most unceasing in his efforts to blacken the character of the Zulu King, and to make him appear odious in the sight of Englishmen. Having referred minutely to the several despatches of Sir Bartle Frere, which do not contain a single recognition of any one redeeming quality in the nature and conduct of the King, he goes on to say :—"It has been horrible to see this great wave of wretchedness rolling on, and to be powerless to help it,—to be debarred of all possibility of showing the injustice of the war until it was too late; too late to prevent the shedding of innocent blood, and the ravaging of a whole country; too late to save the lives of 2,000 of our own soldiers and natives, and of 10,000 patriotic Zulus; too late to prevent the name of 'Englishman' from becoming, in the native mind, the synonym for duplicity, treachery, and violence, instead of, as in days gone by, for truth, and justice, and righteousness." The private journal of Cetshwayo's Dutchman is written in a plain, unassuming manner, which must sensibly impress the reader with a conviction that it is trustworthy. At the close of October, 1878, he set out from New Guelderland, accompanied by six Natal Kaffirs, on a purely trading expedition. It was, however, almost the eve of the commencement of war, and consequently Mr. Vijn's adventures were of an unexpected and exciting character. There can be no doubt that on very many occasions he was placed in a position of extreme peril, and that he could not have overcome the difficulties he encountered, were it not for his tact and his energy. The story of his experiences from the breaking-out of the war to the capture of Cetshwayo will be read with much interest, particularly so as the reader has the advantage of referring to the Bishop of Natal's notes, which throw, in many instances, a new light upon matters of importance. Referring to the descriptions given by Lord Chelmsford and others of the disaster at Isandhlwana, the following important fact is mentioned in the Bishop of Natal's notes, although it does not appear in Lord Chelmsford's, Colonel Crealock's, nor in any official statement. Colonel Harness, R.A., with four guns, two companies of the 2nd Batn. 24th Foot, and about 50 Natal native pioneers, on its way to a rendezvous in advance, by a different route from that taken by the rest of the column, had just halted about noon on some rising ground, when they heard cannon-firing, and saw shells bursting against the hills to the left of the camp, and a large body of natives appeared on the plain below, between themselves and the camp. Capt. Church, with Col. Harness's approval, took a horse and galloped towards them, when an officer rode out to meet him, and said that they were Browne's contingent, and that he was sent to say, "Come on, every man, for God's sake! The camp is surrounded, and will be taken, unless helped at once." Capt. Church galloped back and told Col. Harness, who at once said "We will march back," but Major Gosset, A.D.C., said, "It is all bosh," and advised him to carry out his orders. Col. Harness then asked Major Black and Capt. Church to give their opinions, and then both, without hesitation, agreed with him. Whereupon he at once gave orders to return to the camp, and started at 1.30, Major Gosset riding away in the direction of the General. Col. Harness had accomplished about two miles of his way to the camp, when he was overtaken by Major Gosset with an order from Lord Chelmsford to march back to the rendezvous, which order he obeyed, and the Zulus had their way in the camp undisturbed. The following account of the death of the Prince Imperial also appears in the Bishop of Natal's notes :—"Mnuka, a household officer of the King, says, 'We were watching as scouts, though not by the King's orders, and were seated on a small rise, when we saw the white men coming, late in the afternoon. There was a river there, and several small gullies at the place where we killed them. We went into a gully unseen by them, and crept along it, being in numbers about forty to fifty men. When we got near to them without their seeing us, just as they were about to mount their horses we fired many shots, but they all missed. Four white men had already mounted, and those escaped, but the other three and a dressed native had not yet mounted. The Prince was in the act of mounting, when his horse threw him, being startled at the noise of our guns. When the horse had thrown him, it ran away with his gun, which fell out some way off. When he had fallen on the ground, he drew a revolver, and fired twice, but missed. Xabanga, one of ours, flung an assegai at him as he sat on the ground, and struck him in the breast. Then Gwabinkana came and stabbed him, and the son of Maganga also, and others. He never made the least attempt to run away. We assegaied the other three also, including the dressed native. We did not shoot any. Then I took up from the ground the Prince's sword, which had been left by our people, who were plundering his articles of dress.'" We have not space to quote the interesting account of the capture of Cetshwayo, which is taken from a statement that appeared in the Cape Times, September 11, 1879, but strongly recommend its perusal. This very interesting volume is brought to a close by an account of the Zulu military system, as furnished to the Bishop by two Zulu soldiers.

Indian Notes. By F. R. Hogg, M.D. (Churchill and Co.)—Several of these papers have already appeared in the Medical Times and the Indian Medical Gazette, but considerable additions have been recently made, in the course of which health facts of importance to Europeans are described, as well as places. At the close of a very pleasantly-written tour throughout India, the reader will find some interesting and useful hints and facts as to medicinal plants and mineral waters, neither of which subjects has, in the author's opinion, hitherto received sufficient consideration.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1880.

A CORRESPONDENT, who "says" he "knows," demurs to our estimate of Mr. Childers as a "strong man," and asserts that "he is in reality a very weak one, where social influences are brought to bear upon him." We wonder whether "the gentle suasion" of the gentlemen of the fixed establishments in Pall Mall is included among social influences, by our correspondent. It is obvious that in all matters relating to the personnel of the Army, a Minister like the right honourable gentleman who is now Secretary for War must be as innocent as he is of the warrants, circulars, and paper machinery on which the working of the Army depends. If our readers will look to the extract from the Duke of Wellington's opinion of the necessity of maintaining discipline in the Army, which is given elsewhere, they will observe how the great soldier insisted on the maintenance of the efficiency of the Army as the guarantee and guardian of the existence of the Throne. It is still the fashion to speak of "her Majesty's Army"—and long may it be so!—but year after year the power of the Crown, as exercised by its representative, diminishes, and year by year the active surveillance of Army administration by the House of Commons becomes more constant and grasping. In Colonel Stanley's time, there was a perceptible improvement in the relations of the Horse Guards and War Office. The "Duke" was either more easy to please or had more of his own way, or Colonel Stanley could yield or insist upon a point with better grace than some of his predecessors; but any way, things worked smoothly, and except in the case of some South-African and Indian appointments, there was little friction between the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief and the Secretary of State for War. The late Military Secretary, on whom there is, we are pained to observe, a gross and utterly unfounded attack in a soi-disant Service magazine—which gives promise of losing, under its new management, the little consideration it ever possessed—no doubt by his personal contributed to the harmonious working of the machinery of office. The Adjutant-General, who is not so much brought in contact with the civil administration of the Army, if we except the Judge-Advocate's department, is a master of blandness, if not of blandishments; and Sir D. Lysons is as courteous as he is gallant, so that it would be hard to quarrel with the Horse Guards for the last few years. In General Whitmore's personal qualities there is a sure pledge that the office of Military Secretary will not lose any of its amiable characteristics, but we are not quite so sure that the changes which are impending in other departments will tend to perpetuate the friendly co-operation which has, on the whole, been observable between the two divisions of the military bureaucracy. Sir Garnet Wolseley possesses great frankness of manner, and a cordial, genial address; but no amount of personal amiability will enable a man to stem a current of ancient prejudice and preconceived antipathy, and it is only by an entire devotion to the Service, to the Queen, and to the country, that the influence of such sentiments can be kept in subjection, and rendered properly subordinate to the interests of the State, which demand the best man in the right place. The Duke of Cambridge has given too many proofs of his zeal for the service of the Crown and for the good of the Army, to cause us to doubt for a moment that he will not establish the relations with the incoming Quartermaster-General which shall be most conducive to the efficient administration of the Military establishment of the Empire.

We understand that the appointment of chief instructor at the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, rendered vacant by the promotion of Colonel R. Curtis, has been offered to Lieutenant-Colonel J. F. Betty, now serving in India.

A correspondent of the Times, signing himself "Fair-play," suggests that "all majors of 26 years and all captains of 20 years' service should be promoted to their next step of rank by brevet on or before October next." If such a proposal met with favour at the War Office, it would act most unfairly on the Purchase majors and captains, many of whom would be superseded by their non-purchase brethren, and thus lose the very privilege for which they purchased their respective grades, viz., to obtain Army promotion before those officers over whom they purchased.

This time it is the turn of the Royal Engineers to give a chief to the Royal Military Academy, and we hear that Major-General T. L. J. Gallwey is likely to succeed Sir J. Adye at Woolwich. There are competitors, or at least there are other officers, of high claims; so that the Authorities have not yet decided, we believe.

The appointment of Major G. S. White, 92nd Highlanders, as Military Secretary to the Marquis of Ripon in India, is entirely due to his war services lately in Afghanistan, which have brought him prominently to notice as an officer it is desirable to encourage. Major White, we understand, will most probably be given unattached promotion as a Lieutenant-Colonel shortly, at least the offer will be made to him, and he will thus qualify for the higher walks of a profession from which, under ordinary circumstances, he would have been removed in December next, after 27 years' service.

We regret to learn that General Rowan, C.B., has been for some time in an unsatisfactory state of health, at his residence in London.

Sir Donald Stewart's star is in the ascendant. Long may it shine! Not two years ago he was in the Highlands, on a visit to his old friend Tod Brown, who has beaten his sword into a ploughshare—or a sheep scissors—and is farming in Sutherland; and the General was then bitterly lamenting the sad necessity which forced him to leave the placid scenery of Loch Brora, and to return to India, to grill the remnants of his liver, in order to secure his full allowance, and the goods the Indian gods of the Exchequer provide for those who are faithful to the end, in "off reckonings," and the like. "But," said some one, "there is a great chance of your having something to do! The Afghan business may prove to be serious." "If it does, I shall have nothing to say to it! I have no such luck! I would give a good deal to change with Tod Brown." And now the man is the conqueror of Candahar, and the victor of Guznee, and the master of Afghanistan, and he may be lord of what he likes, if peace be solidly established. And there is no one who knows Donald Stewart who will not be glad of any good-fortune which may befall him, and who will not say it was well deserved; and there is no man in the world who would be more eager to share his honours with his friends, or who would do more to serve those who need it and deserve it, and among whom not the least, in Donald Stewart's mind, would be Tod Brown.

Second Lieutenant E. Vincent, Coldstream Guards, has been appointed private secretary to Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice, the British representative on the Eastern Roumelian Commission; the Foreign Office having specially applied to the Horse Guards for his services on account of his local knowledge and acquaintance with modern Greek and Turkish.

Lord Skelmersdale's (now Earl of Lathom's) retirement from the command of the Yeomen of the Guard is deeply regretted by all ranks of the corps. His lordship has evinced the greatest interest in his command, and the officers and men will long remember him as a most able and liberal "chief," who has thoroughly identified himself with those with whom he has been associated, and has in a thousand ways earned their good-will. The old members of the corps speak of him as the best Captain the corps has ever had at its head.

The conferring upon Colonel Sir G. P. Colley of the rank of Brigadier-General in command of the troops in Natal and the Transvaal,—he was originally gazetted colonel on the Staff, and it will be as such that he will draw pay,—was agreed upon in order to give the officer an aide-de-camp, which he could not otherwise have claimed. The appointment has been accepted by Lieutenant R. H. Elwes, Grenadier Guards.

H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar will to-day inspect the Hampshire Artillery Militia at Fort Rowner, and we hope that his attention may be called to the circumstance that a large number of eligible recruits have been compulsorily refused, owing to the present limited establishment of the regiment. It was only last week that we referred to additional batteries being authorised in the case of four regiments of Artillery Militia, and we would suggest that a similar increase in the establishment should be extended to the Hampshire Artillery. Application for authority to raise two additional batteries has, we learn, already been made, and the War Office has so far met the request as to give permission for the enrolment of supernumeraries to fill any anticipated vacancies in the ranks. But we would point out that in no place can artillery be more requisite than in the Portsmouth District, with its extended chain of fortifications, and it would be an advantage to the Service to direct the Hampshire Artillery to be augmented, for when a regiment has been worked into such a state of efficiency, and is truly popular in the district, it is worse than folly to keep it down to so limited a strength as to necessitate the rejection of eligible recruits. Nearly 20 per cent. of the strength of this regiment go annually into the Regular Service.

Captain R. Pole-Carew accompanies Lord Lytton from India, and resumes duty with his regiment, the Coldstream Guards.

The appointment of General J. A. Lambert to the colonelcy vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General Percy Hill, C.B., is a tardy act of justice to an old and most deserving soldier. Old 85th men will feel gratified at finding that the strong claims of General Sir Henry de Bathe to transfer to the regiment have not been overlooked. Sir Henry was born in the regiment at Malta, when his father was serving in it as major. The late Sir William served with the corps in the Peninsula, and afterwards in America, including the capture of Washington, New Orleans, and Bladensburg.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. T. B. Brown, C.B., Royal Artillery, has been selected to succeed Colonel C. E. Oldershaw, C.B., in command of the Militia Artillery in the Cork District.

Brevet Major C. L. Harvey, 71st Highland Light Infantry, lately appointed Garrison Instructor at Edinburgh, has been transferred to Dublin, vice Captain J. W. F. Buxton, 27th Regiment, who has been appointed to the York District.

The Inspectorship of Warlike Stores at Halifax, N.S., is vacant, consequent upon the promotion of Major M. Tweedie, R.A.

The following appointments have been made to the Staff of Earl Cowper, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, viz.:—To be Equerries: Captain W. D. S. Campbell, 79th Highlanders, and Captain J. M'Calmont, Denbighshire Yeomanry Cavalry. To be Aides-de-Camp: Captain H. Paget, 7th Hussars; Captain D. G. A. King, 69th Regiment; Lieutenant W. D. M. Farrer, Grenadier Guards; Lieutenant G. A. H. Howard, 23rd Fusiliers; Lieutenant F. T. R. Hamilton, 9th Regiment; Lieutenant J. D. Barry, Royal Artillery; and Lieutenant the Hon. A. J. G. Byng, 7th Hussars.

The only changes at present approved among regiments in the United Kingdom are as follows, viz.:—The 1st Battalion 7th Foot, from Cork to Pembroke Dock; 36th Foot, from Fleetwood to Cork; 37th Foot, from Pembroke Dock to Cork; 42nd Foot, from Parkhurst to Aldershot; and 103rd Foot, from Cork to Bradford.

The gossip journals wage incessant feud with each other for making unauthorised announcements, but the printers often cause a deal of trouble. Who, for instance, would think they could print "Mr.," instead of "Sir," before "Edward Sullivan," as they did in our last week's paper? Truth announces that "Colonel White goes to India with the Earl of Ripon, as military secretary." But he is not a colonel, and he does not go to India, for he is there—or in Cabul—already. And who is the Earl of Ripon? Again, who was Lieutenant-Colonel Turnor, of the Scots Greys, whose death "T. T." announces? These are "details." But the statement that Mr. Greenwood was offered money by the Carlton Club to start a paper is entirely untrue.

It is probable that a programme of colonial reliefs will be drawn up at the Horse Guards, to be carried out during the ensuing winter, but the details are not worked out, and certainly no changes of station have yet met with official approval.

A correspondent, whose name is known to us, and whose temperate criticism we value, points out what he considers a discrepancy in the references in this journal to Sir H. Havelock Allan, as an official representative of the Army at the War Office. The gallant General, whose opinion is of great weight with us, does full justice to Sir H. Allan as a soldier in the field, but he scarcely does justice to ourselves, for he confounds our appreciation of the claims which the hon. Member for Sunderland ought to have on the consideration of a Liberal Government, with our exposition of the difficulties which would follow his appointment to office at Pall Mall. The difficulty of overlooking his claims, and of setting him aside for another, is forcibly illustrated by the notice of motion which the gallant officer has given of his intention to submit for the consideration of Parliament the anomalous working of the Short-Service System, the principle of which he has strenuously advocated. It is evident that he attributes to the administration of the system the defects which have been so painfully apparent in its results, and that he intends to attack the Horse Guards, as the responsible branch of that administration.

The South-African papers generally deplore the increase of burglarious crimes in the colony, and the inefficiency of the local police.

The Natal Mercury, of April 5, puts out a feeler anent the annexation of Zululand, which was seen by every man of sense to be the inevitable result of Sir Garnet Wolseley's "settlement," which must be regarded as preposterous, if there were not behind it the thought of rendering that measure necessary. The Mercury says:—"If it be, indeed, the design of Sir Garnet Wolseley to set up a subdivided dynasty of Kilkenny cats in Zululand, it is well that the world should know how little the colonists approve that design, and how persistently their representatives have striven to thwart and to repudiate it."

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Volunteer Commanding Officers on Thursday, Lord Ranelagh presiding, it was unanimously decided to ask permission of the Military Authorities to hold a review of the Metropolitan and provincial forces this summer, to celebrate the 21st year of the existence of the force; and should this be acceded to—as there is little reason to doubt it will be—it is proposed that her Majesty should be asked to be present, at such time and place as she may graciously appoint. There is no place so suitable as Hyde Park, and as there would be a full muster of the Metropolitan body, representing at least 30,000 of all arms, it may be anticipated that the provinces would send at least 20,000. Such a display of a portion of our Citizen Army would serve so many useful purposes, that we cordially hope no difficulties will be allowed to stand in the way of its being successfully carried out. The meeting, we observe, was thoroughly representative of the City, Tower Hamlets, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex; and it has long been known that the provincial regiments have only been waiting action in London, to signify their willingness to co-operate.

We learn from Cronstadt that considerable talk has been occasioned there by the arrival of information from St. Petersburg of the desire of the Government to despatch, if possible, the ironclad frigate Peter the Great to the Pacific. No actual particulars have transpired, but it is known that Admiral Popoff, the designer of the vessel, is strongly in favour of an extended cruise for the ironclad, the seaworthiness of which he considers to be beyond question. The Peter the Great is the most powerful vessel of the Russian fleet, being a frigate of 9,660 tons, protected with 15 inches of armour, and provided with four 40-ton guns, besides Whitehead torpedoes and torpedo boats. Russia is also fitting out four other men-of-war at Cronstadt for a cruise in Chinese waters.

A Dublin paper reports that there has been picked up on the shore at Dalkey a piece of deal 9 in. by 12 in., on which was written in pencil, "H.M.S. Atalanta going down, with all hands on board, in latitude 48·60. (Signed) J. Steward." The word "right" was written on the left-hand corner in a different hand from the rest of the inscription.

About eleven acres of the land forming a portion of the site of the old Portsmouth fortifications have been granted by the War Department for the use of military officers of the garrison. Application was made by officers of the Navy and Marines for permission to use the ground, and after negotiations between the War Department and the Admiralty, the former agreed to open the ground to Military, Naval, and Marine officers, if the Admiralty would contribute £2,000 towards the expense of draining, levelling, erecting a pavilion, &c., and find some of the labour. Terms have been agreed to, and a hundred men of the Marine Artillery have joined the military working parties.

The long-anticipated reorganisation scheme connected with the store departments of the Royal Dockyards has been promulgated. The scheme abolishes the office of shipwright foreman for stores, and creates a new office—foreman of storehouses. The salary of this official at Portsmouth and Devonport Dockyards commences at £150, and rises £5 per annum to £200. At Chatham, Deptford, and Sheerness Yards, the salary commences at £130, rising to £180 per annum. The leading men of storehouses will receive 6s. 6d. per day for the first four years, 7s. per day for the next three years, and 7s. 6d. per day afterwards. First-class storehouse men will receive 5s., rising to 6s. per day; second-class men, 3s. 9d., rising to 4s. 9d. per day; and labourers, 2s. 9d. to 3s. 6d. per day. Boys are to be paid 1s., rising to 2s. 6d. per day. The new scheme has given very general satisfaction. An increase of pay has also just been granted by the Admiralty to the wheelwrights employed in the dockyards, the first-class hands in future receiving 5s., and the second-class 4s. 6d. per day.—Hampshire Telegraph.

THE ATALANTA.

The following memorandum has been communicated to the Press by the Secretary of the Admiralty:—"Little hope is now entertained at the Admiralty that the Atalanta is still afloat, and a full and searching inquiry will shortly be held with the object of ascertaining whether the ship was by her build, rig, and equipment, including the officers and crew, in all respects fitted for the service on which she was employed." It seems somewhat strange that a training ship could be fitted out and sent to sea, without an inquiry having been previously made to ascertain "whether the ship was by her build, rig, and equipment, including officers and crew, in all respects fitted for the Service on which she was [to be] employed." The above memorandum may be regarded as removing the last vestige of hope as to the fate of this unfortunate training-ship, supplemented as it is by the order to prepare the steam-frigate Newcastle as a training-ship for ordinary seamen. The announcement of the determination of the Admiralty to employ in future as training ships vessels having auxiliary steam-power has been received with much satisfaction by the public, whose confidence in modern seamanship does not appear to be very great. But what can practical seamanship avail, when it is sacrificed to the theoretical dogmas of self-willed permanent officials? That Captain Stirling was a good seaman no one will deny. But of what use his seamanship, when his recommendations as to the requirements of the Atalanta remained unattended to? It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless true, that Captain Stirling applied officially to the Admiralty to have the Atalanta's spars reduced, considering the vessel to be seriously overmasted. He also applied to have ports cut to relieve the ship of water in case of her shipping heavy seas in "the stormy region of the Atlantic," whither she was sent to cruise. But these requests were refused. Whoever declined to allow these alterations to be made is morally responsible for the lives lost in the Atalanta. Indeed, it is generally believed throughout the Service that this old vessel carried the spars of a 44-gun frigate, and it is considered a scandalous shame that officers should be forced against their better judgment, and after the experience of the ill-fated Eurydice, to take such craft to sea. The question we desire to have answered is,—"Who declined to allow the alterations recommended by Captain Stirling to be made?" The barque Swansea Castle, from Talcahuano, arrived at Falmouth yesterday, and the master reports that about a month since, when in lat. 37° N., long. 40° W., he passed a white lifebuoy, the same shape as used by men-of-war, also several pieces of plankage, some of which appeared to have been panelling, and a cask which was apparently partly filled, as it was not very buoyant. It will be seen that the position given is in a direct line between Bermuda and the Azores.

THE "INFLEXIBLE."

The placing of the glacis plate of the fore turret of the Inflexible, at Portsmouth, has just been completed, and though the massive angle-iron which surrounds the upper edge of the armour is still unfinished, she is ready to receive her armament of two 80-ton guns, the slides for which are in their places. The armour of the after-turret is also completed, and the turret will be set rotating in a few days. But the work which is of the most interest at the present time, and which will probably occupy the whole of the summer, is the erection of the gear for launching the Whitehead torpedo. This is of a most elaborate character, and exhibits a great advance upon the various systems at present adopted in the Service. The Inflexible is pierced with four torpedo ports forwards, two upon each bow, of which one is situated above and the other ten feet below the water-line. The means adopted for discharging the Whitehead from below the water-line is as great an improvement upon that of the Glatton, as the Glatton's is an advance upon that of the Vesuvius. The machinery will prove very costly, and additional expense has been unexpectedly incurred by reason of heavy brass castings.

ASSISTANT-PAYMASTERS, R.N.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The First Lord of the Admiralty, when introducing the Navy Estimates, stated it was undesirable that officers should be kept in the position of sub-lieutenant after attaining 23 years of age. I also observe by the papers that a committee has been nominated to inquire into the position, &c., of naval medical officers. These two announcements, taken together, have induced me to pen you a few lines to point out the hopeless prospects of the assistant-paymasters of the Navy, especially as during the last couple of years, presumably weary of trying to get justice from a board of Executive officers at Whitehall, the whole body have lapsed into silence. I wish some one more competent to speak on their behalf had addressed you, for I am a very "young" assistant-paymaster, as they now run, and am frequently told by my seniors that I am a "youngster," and have not been "a dog's-watch in the Service." Still, I have more service and am considerably older than the sub-lieutenant, whom it is not considered advisable to keep in that rank after he is 23. Now, Sir, I rank with a sub-lieutenant, and shall for some years yet. I sleep in a hammock, and am obliged to confine all my worldly possessions in a chest, taking care that none are left about the steerage, unless the first lieutenant, a former mess-mate of mine, now somewhat oblivious of the fact, should ignominiously order them to the scran-bag. I am obliged to get up at 6.15 a.m., for no apparent reason, unless it be that it is thought necessary to give gun-room officers an appetite for breakfast. My mess-mates are chiefly composed of cadets, who came into this world just about the time I was thinking of the brilliant career I should shortly enjoy in her Majesty's Navy. I have had my chances of promotion calculated by an eminent actuary, and have been informed by him that, even allowing a large margin for deaths and other contingencies, I shall be forty before becoming a paymaster, and obtaining the same rank as the lieutenant to whom it is not considered expedient to deny that rank after twenty-three. I might go on endlessly, but my grievances and those of the class to which I belong are well known, and admitted by every executive officer to whom I have spoken on the subject. The fault lies at head-quarters, where even now they permit none but compulsory age-retirements among the paymasters, whilst young lieutenants have every inducement held out to them to go. Is there any sense of fairness or justice amongst my Lords? I am afraid not, or I should not now be in my present ignominious position. I shall return to the question, with your kind permission, at some future date.—I am, Sir, &c. HOPE DEFERRED.

THE ORPHEUS MEMORIAL FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Having lost two dear friends,—old messmates,—by the stranding of the Orpheus, allow me to hand you my mite towards erecting a memorial to the memory of gallant Comdre. Burnett and those who perished with him on the Manukau Bar.—I am, &c., IN MEMORIAM.

The Admiralty, with a view to the extension of instruction in navigation and pilotage duties to junior officers, has decided that the provisions contained in Article 998, page 320, of the regulations, to the effect that the navigating officer in each ship shall instruct the junior officers appointed for navigating duties in pilotage and the practice of navigation, is to be in future extended to all the junior executive officers who have not passed their examination in navigation at the Royal Naval College. The captain of each ship in which junior officers are borne is to appoint one or two of such officers, for periods of from two to three months to assist the navigating officer in his special and other practical duties connected with navigation and pilotage. During the time that a junior officer is appointed for these duties, he will not necessarily be exempted from attendance for instruction by the Naval instructor, but the duties above specified will take the place of his ordinary duties, such as watch-keeping, boat-duty, &c.

A serious accident occurred at Devonport Dockyard on the 8th inst. A number of seamen engaged on the repairs to the Newcastle were hoisting the main shroud, when the rope gave way, and the shroud came down with a run on the men below, three of whom, named Sydney Stephens, Charles Upfold, and Frederick Strickland, were severely injured. They were removed to the surgery in the yard, and attended to by Staff Surgeon McMorris.

A party of United States engineers has recently taken soundings of the Niagara river below the falls. The lead-line gave 83 ft. near the shore. Further down stream the lead told off 100 ft., deepening to 192 ft. at the inclined railway. The average depth of the Swift Drift, where the river suddenly becomes narrow with a velocity too great to be measured, was 153 ft. Immediately under the lower bridge the depth was computed to be 210 ft.

The Liberty (Lieut. O'Connor), Nautilus (Lieut. Blennerhasset), and Sealark (Lieut. Bromley), training brigs, have been inspected by Capt. R. Bradshaw, C.B., of the Impregnable, after their first month's cruise, prior to changing their crews of boys.

The new vessels at Chatham Dockyard comprise the Agamemnon, four guns, 8,492 tons, 6,000 horse-power, launched last autumn; the Nelson, 12 guns, 7,023 tons, 6,000 horse-power, built by Messrs. Elder and Co., and completed at Chatham; the Orion, 4 guns, 4,720 tons, 3,900 horse-power, one of the "purchased squadron;" and the Superb, 16 guns, 8,760 tons, 7,430 horse-power, also one of the "purchased squadron." Neither of the two latter vessels has yet been in commission. There are under construction the Conqueror, turret-ship, and the Polyphemus, torpedo-ram; the Penelope and the Audacious are to undergo repairs. The Pallas and the Research are moored in one of the basins, but it is expected they will be sold. The Ajax is ordered round from Pembroke to be completed.

The telephone is now in use at Chatham. Eight have been fitted up at the School of Military Engineering, and the Pembroke, flagship of Admiral-Superintendent Brandreth, is to be brought into communication with the Medway Steam Reserve office, a distance of about a mile and a quarter. The instruments in use are the Gowar-Bell telephones.

If a gentleman presently be heard, at his club or elsewhere, asking for "Bilin' water," we hope it will not be supposed that his education has been neglected, and that he is labouring under the imperfect ideas as to pronunciation in connection with water at 212 deg., which prevail in the washing-woman classes. The demand will be met by the production of a bottle of a natural mineral water, still or effervescent, which comes into the world of taste with strong testimonials. The water is, we are assured, Bismarck's table water, and the Duke of Teck is thoroughly satisfied with its results, and in such good company we mean to be included, and to test the merits of the new mineral waters and the Digestive Pastilles in case of need.

THE NEW BOOT POLISH.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. PROPERT, Battersea Park Road, London.

PURCHASE CAPTAINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is worthy of note that in the Gazette of the 7th inst. (last Friday), the vacancies created by the promotion of three colonels to the rank of major-general were not filled up, as usual, by the promotion of three captains to brevet majorities. Is this a good omen for the Purchase captains or not? Is their case under consideration on its just merits, or even on a generous desire to make amends for eight years' neglect? Or are their claims going to be ignored altogether? Deducting interest on the sums paid by most of these officers for their commissions when Purchase was the rule, they have been serving for the last 13 or 14 years for less than £100 a year, while the Artillery and Engineers, who superseded them in 1872, have had their full pay as regimental majors, without loss of interest, and are now being transformed into regimental lieutenant-colonels. The Purchase captains, on the other hand, cannot even now, after eight years' supersession, obtain brevet majorities at the trifling cost of 2s. a day, and in four months will lose all chance of advancement. Look for a moment at the contrast between the two. Among the superseded captains of 1872, most of whom paid £2,000 or £2,500 for their commissions, are 1 of 28 years' total service, 1 of 26, 12 of 25, 3 of 24, 7 of 23, 24 of 22, 12 of 21, 7 of 20, 7 under 20, but not less than 17; the senior majors of artillery (virtually regimental lieutenant-colonels) being only 26 years in the Army, and the senior captains (virtually regimental majors), only 20. Very few days ago, £150 a year extra retiring allowance was granted to 12 colonels and majors, generals of this highly-favoured corps, to induce them to retire, so as to give promotion to their juniors. In fact, money is always forthcoming for the special advancement of the Artillery and Engineers. Through their influence at the War Office and elsewhere, and through their possession of the ears of the Press, rules are frequently set aside for their benefit, only to raise a cry for more. The Line on the contrary, scattered throughout the world without representatives, and unable to offer the compact organisation which Woolwich presents, are treated with indifference, contumely, and neglect. Warrants are constantly changed to their disadvantage, so much so that very few now serving can tell what they are entitled to, or what they could claim on retirement. Let me conclude by saying that in the Army and Navy Gazette their only hope of obtaining justice lies. Neither the Press, nor Parliament, nor the War Office will condescend to plead their cause or to demand redress. The Purchase officers have no votes, represent no interest, have no advocates in Pall Mall, have no rights, and are never heard of except among the killed and wounded. To you, sir, alone, they look for justice, and especially in this pressing matter of the seventy superseded Purchase captains.—I am, sir, &c., MILES OLIM.

"Justice" writes:—"As the time approaches for brevet promotion by seniority to cease, it is only right that the grievances and claims of the Purchase captains should be fully and fairly considered. These officers entered the Army with the intention of purchasing their majority and lieutenant-colonelcy, and as a preliminary measure invested £2,500 in the purchase of their lieutenancy and company. Suddenly, by Royal Warrant, Purchase was abolished, their hopes of promotion, for which they had already partly paid, were dashed to the ground, and the return of their purchase-money, though reasonable enough and strongly urged at the time, was refused; since which they have suffered a rather wholesale supersession by officers of Engineers and Artillery, and even their regimental juniors, namely, the Non-purchase captains, are in a far more satisfactory position, for their £2,500 is safely invested, and they are annually drawing the interest on it. It appears, then, to me that this is an opportune moment, and that the Purchase captains can be in some measure compensated, either by gazetting them all to brevet majorities on October 1 next, after which date promotion by brevet is to cease, or to gazette them each to a brevet majority on their completing 20 years' service on full pay."

DEFENCES OF CANADA.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Edward Selby Smyth, K.C.M.G., in his Report on the state of the Militia of Canada, 1879, says:—"The successful attempt to manufacture rifled guns in Canada has been justly mentioned in the English Press as 'an event of Imperial importance,' for a nation which depends on the supply of such weapons from a source 3,000 miles distant, must always be in a more or less dependent position. Canada not only requires an armament for coast defences, but also to have a sufficient number of guns of position in store. A foreign Power has lately adopted such a system of armament for offensive purposes on large trading fleets, as to demand the most serious attention of England and her colonies, but more especially of Canada, as one of the greatest trading countries of the globe. The armaments referred to consist of numerous swift merchant steamers, which have been purchased and fitted up for war purposes. The design, as openly admitted, is that they are to burn and destroy the merchant fleets of the greatest carrying power of the world, in case of war breaking out. It has been announced in the English Press that the result hoped for is the forced separation of the powerful colonies from England. The power of the British Empire is, owing to the increasing growth of the Dominion of Canada, of Australia, and of New Zealand, becoming capable of an overwhelming development, if it were armed. It is not so at present, and for that reason, probably, we hear of these alarming preparations. To expect Canada and the colonies to fit out men-of-war would be unreasonable and unnecessary,—England can deal with such; but it would hardly be possible for her to account for the numerous merchant cruisers which are now at sea and in course of preparation. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that the ocean-going steamers of England, Canada, and Australia, would soon dispose of these, if they were armed and prepared for the occasion. The Admiralty have already placed themselves in communication with the Canadian Government regarding the system of preparation of large steamers for their armaments, on the plan so successfully carried out by them in the case of the Hecla, a merchant vessel purchased by them, and fitted as an experiment. What has now to be dealt with are the rifled guns, with which the ships should be armed. There are only fifteen now in Canada; but it is satisfactory to know they can be made here. The armament selected for the Hecla are the 64-pounder Palliser rifled guns, the very guns we have shown we can make without any difficulty. Messrs. Gilbert offer to make by May 1 next, six 9-inch 14-ton rifled breech-loading guns, complete, with sights, for $4,000 each; six 7-inch 8½-ton rifled B.L., complete, $3,000; two 68-pounder 5-ton, to be converted to 90-pounders, including long barrels, $650; six eight-inch 65-cwt. converted to 64 rifled, $500; twelve 32-pounder 5-cwt., $500; 500 rounds projectiles, Woolwich prices. Double-plate iron American carriages for all the above, cheaper than English or wood; all subject to approval of the Inspector of Artillery. I am happy to announce that the Government has been pleased to authorise the General Officer commanding to arrange with Messrs. Gilbert, of Montreal Engine Works, for the construction of two 7-inch 8½-ton guns, and the conversion of ten 32-pounders to 64-pounder rifled guns, which may be considered an auspicious commencement to a great work in creating a home supply of heavy ordnance. The experimental gun, as I have before noticed, was put through a formidable programme. After passing the usual proofs, it was fired as before stated with 24 lb. powder and a 62-lb. shell. It was perfectly right to test the first gun with heavy charges, though it is usual now to chamber guns for large charges. Sir William Palliser explains that this is done by enlarging the bore of the gun at the seat of the powder charge, so as to avoid an immoderately long cartridge, which fills up the bore and causes a very heavy strain on the gun."

THE ABOLITION OF BREVET RANK.

"Fiat Justitia" writes:—"The remarks in your issue of the 3rd inst., relative to the impending spoliation of the remnant of the Purchase captains who shall not have obtained their brevet rank as majors by October next, will have been read with lively satisfaction by those whose interests you would advocate. You have thus tersely and pointedly given expression to a wide-spread feeling of dissatisfaction that exists in regard to this threatened wrong, and, happily, in time to afford an opportunity for reconsideration of the question. On what earthly principle, as you fairly suggest, of reason or equity, is this step of promotion admitted to be due to those who may attain it by a fanciful date, if it is afterwards to be withheld from the remaining few, whose right to it accrues under the same conditions of service and upon identical grounds, viz., as an interest vested in the Purchase captain's commission, to which it attaches on the occurrence of a certain contingency? In legislating, it has ever been apriniple to mitigate, as far as possible, whatever hardship may be entailed on the individual whose rights or interests must unfortunately be invaded in pursuance of the common welfare. Is the present to be a case for exception from this time-honoured rule? Such harsh, not to say unjust, treatment of a body of officers, none of whom can at the least number less than 20 years' service—a period which, by-the-by, the Act itself fixes as a maximum to qualify for the substantive rank of major—could never have been contemplated by the Legislature when accepting the declaration of Lord Cardwell that the Act of which he was the author was not intended to operate so as to place officers in a worse position thereafter than they occupied before the passing of the Act, and where it was almost directly promised that no officer should be brought under the compulsory or debarring clauses of the Act until he had attained one step in regimental rank higher than that held by him on the day Purchase was abolished. It is scarcely necessary to advert to that other point upon which you touched, viz., the supersession by the Scientific Corps, as though the fact exists as an aggravation of the case. There is reason to believe that the question is still sub judice, and some redress may yet be hoped for."

"Senex" writes:—"Will you, ere it is too late, once more raise your powerful voice in behalf of the old Purchase captains, many of whom are over twenty years' service, more than half of which has been passed in their present rank. All they ask is a brevet majority before the final abolition of brevet rank in October next. This would put them all on a proper footing, soothe the heart-burnings of those who wished to serve on, and at the same time act as a powerful inducement for others to go, and make way for the new school."

RIDINGMASTERS, ROYAL ARTILLERY.

"Justice" writes:—"Thanking you for inserting my last communication with regard to the honorary rank of captain being given to quartermasters in the Royal Artillery after a certain term of service, may I again trespass on your space, in order to make known some of the disadvantages which the ridingmasters labour under in the same branch of the Service? Why should they not be placed on the same footing in regard to retirement and promotion as the officers of the Coast Brigade, whom I understand also rise from the ranks? Eight or ten of the senior Royal Artillery ridingmasters, whose average length of service is over 15 years—in fact, one is in his 21st year—could be promoted to the rank of captain, and their retirement could be made compulsory at 55 years of age, on the full pay of their rank. The cavalry ridingmasters have an infinitely better chance than those in the Royal Artillery. If they (the cavalry) have a first-class certificate of education, and have passed an examination on minor Military matters, they can, after having been promoted twelve months, be posted as effective lieutenants, and take their chance of promotion in their regiments. Instances of this have occurred in the 5th Lancers, 10th Hussars, and 20th Hussars. In common fairness, I contend the same advantages should be held out to the ridingmasters of the Royal Artillery, who are—and I speak from personal knowledge, although I am not in the Army—fully as capable of carrying out the duties of a captaincy as those in the cavalry. Then, again, the duties of artillery ridingmasters are identical to those of the Army Service Corps, yet they get 3s. 6d. per day less pay. Surely this is not justice!"

AN EXHIBITION OF WAR MEDALS.

An exhibition of medals collected by Lieut.-Col. Eaton, of the Grenadier Guards, was opened to the public on Monday, at 168 New Bond Street, for the benefit of the Guards' Industrial Home. Great interest was shown in this large and varied collection by those who were invited to a private view on Saturday, the Prince of Wales, attended by Capt. Stephenson, Lord Strathnairn, Lord Mark Ker, Gen. Sir Richard Wilbraham, and Gen. Sir Patrick Grant, being among the visitors during the afternoon. Begun many years ago, with the object of preventing the loss and disappearance, through the death of the owners, of honourable decorations granted for good services, the collection has grown until now, in the dozen or more cases on the walls of this exhibition, there are about 1,000 medals, badges, and other decorations, which would serve to illustrate very fully a history of the war medals of this country from 1650 to the present time. The memories of events of national importance are here associated more distinctly than in most numismatic museums with a personal element of interest, for almost every medal in the collection bears the name of the soldier or the sailor to whom it was given, and while it was obviously impossible to tell in every case the story of the owner's daring, there is enough recorded in the carefully-prepared and instructive catalogue, compiled by Lieut.-Col. Eaton, "to remind the reader that brave men are found in all ranks of the Army and Navy." The classification has been judicious, and whether to the military or naval officer, the medal collector, or those who go merely with an untrained but intelligent curiosity, the exhibition will well pay a visit. After two ornamental medals bearing the bust of Queen Elizabeth, and some stamped with portraits of Charles I., Henrietta Maria, and Halifax, chronologically the war medals proper begin with one supposed to have been struck after the battle of Dunbar. This curious relic has on the obverse the head of Cromwell, with the date Sept. 13, 1650, and on the reverse a representation of the House of Commons in Session. Among worthy of note is the Culloden gold medal bearing the head of the Duke of Cumberland, the specimen in this collection having belonged to Brigdr.-Gen. Fleming, who commanded the 36th Regiment in that battle. The war medals issued from 1793 to 1814 are put together in case 1. In case 2 are Waterloo medals—one from every British regiment, and one from each regiment in the German Legion present. Case 3 contains the East India Company's medals given from 1784 to 1857. The next case, containing medals granted for service in India during the Mutiny and since, also holds some commemorating the deeds of our troops in South Africa, China, New Zealand, Abyssinia, and on the West Coast of Africa in the Ashantee campaign. The Crimean medals are placed in case 5, and those of a more immediately personal character, as for long-service, good-conduct, distinguished service in the field, the Victoria Cross, &c., in case 6. Those in case 7 are of a similar kind—regimental medals and decorations bestowed in earlier days for conspicuous daring or exceptional service by the officers of regiments. Navy war medals fill cases 8 and 9, and, carrying back the records of our seamen's services to the great victory of Lord Howe over our good friends across the Channel in 1793, come down to 1840. Navy war medals from that date, with some for Arctic exploration, are placed in case 10. The badges and medals in case 11 have a different and additional artistic value. These have been presented to officers and men of the British Army by foreign rulers. The last numbered case contains the distinctions of officers and men who have gained more than one decoration.

Prince Gortchakoff's alarming illness is said to be a most severe attack of gout. We have heard upon unquestionable authority that a London physician, who is well known for the discoveries he has already made, has found a remedy by which an attack of gout may be cured in two days. The first application removes all pain and suffering, the second all traces of the disease, without leaving any effects whatever behind, either from the disease or the remedy itself.

Amusements.

At the ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, Mdlle. Turolla has appeared for the first time as Selika, in Meyerbeer's grand opera of "L'Africaine," and with M. Lassalle as Nelusko, the character in which he made his first appearance last year on the English stage, a decided success in both instances has been secured. "Il Trovatore," "Le Prophète," and "Rigoletto" have been repeated, and this evening (Saturday), Madame Adelina Patti will make her first appearance this season in Gounod's opera, "Romeo e Giulietta," accompanied by Signor Nicolini.

This (Saturday) evening also, Mr. Mapleson opens HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE for the season, with Gounod's opera of "Faust," in which Madame Christine Nilsson reappears as Marguerite and Mr. Maas as Faust.

The new grand ballet, "Les Sirènes," produced at DRURY LANE as a supplementary attraction to the brilliantly-revived "La Fille de Madame Angot," shows the resources of the capacious stage to the best advantage, and the effective result of a numerous troupe of graceful dancers being brought into active requisition. The story, entirely expressed in action, tells how a fisher-boy on the shores of the Mediterranean fell in love with the Queen of the Sirens, and how, when lured to the submarine retreat, he becomes perfectly reconciled to his fate. Mr. Wallenstein has arranged some appropriate music, Mr. John D'Auban some elaborate dances, in which Mdlle. Palladino prominently figures, and Mr. Cuthbert's new scenery is as picturesque as the airy costumes of the sea-nymphs are light and fanciful.

The special morning performance on Monday of "L'Aventurière" at the PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE on Monday was graced by the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and proved such a marked success that frequent repetitions will be demanded. It is the only instance on record of a French play being entirely performed by English actors and actresses speaking French. Miss Geneviève Ward delighted the fashionable audience by her highly artistic embodiment of Clorinde, a character studied by her in Paris under the guidance of the famous Regnier. Mr. Beerbohm Tree distinguished himself as Monte Pradi; M. Marius, whose long residence in this country gives him a fair claim to be called an English actor, was excellent as the brutal brother, Don Annibal; and Miss Hébert (Mrs. Emden), Mr. Horace Wigan, Mr. George Power, and Mr. Ian Robertson helped to secure for Emile Augier's impressive play a complete rendering that would have satisfied the most critical Parisian auditory.

The OLYMPIC has varied its programme with Mr. John Hollingshead's adaptation, called "The Grasshopper," produced at the Gaiety last year, and now represented with the original cast. The next novelty will be a drama by Mr. F. C. Burnand, entitled "Society and the Stage," being a version of a French comedy by MM. Meilhac and Halévy.

A special entertainment, comprising selections of the most popular pieces played under the management of Mr. Walter Gooch, will be given at the PRINCESS'S on Wednesday, May 19, the last night of the existence of the present building.

Plays in Dutch will be performed at the IMPERIAL THEATRE next month by the Rotterdam Dramatic Company. The series will commence on Monday, June 7, and be continued on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

Miss Ellen Terry takes her benefit at the LYCEUM on Thursday, May 20, when, after the "Merchant of Venice," will be produced a dramatic idyll, called "Iolanthe," adapted by Mr. W. G. Wills from Henrik Herz, whose poem of "King René's Daughter" has been already transferred to the stage by Sir Theodore Martin, Miss Ellen Faucit appearing, as long ago as 1848, as the blind Princess, now to be impersonated by Miss Ellen Terry.

Concerts at this time are unusually numerous, but attention may be specially called to the grand evening concert of Madame Louisa Graham, which will take place on Tuesday evening next, May 18, at Langham Hall, Great Portland Street. In addition to Madame Louisa Graham, the vocalists will include Mdlle. Petrelli, Miss Eugénie Kemble, Mr. Charles Wilbye, and others of high repute. The conductors are Herr Kuhe, Mr. Edward Holmes, and Mr. Lansdowne Cottell.

MR. WEIL, of 14, St. George's Place, Albert Gate, has now Cigars of the Finest Brands for the coming Season, and his celebrated Belgrave Cigarettes were never better, for delicacy of flavour and aroma. The popularity of these cigarettes is now well established, both at home and in the colonies. ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Tramways authorised to be constructed under the special Act incorporating this Comprny (which received the Royal assent in August last) will, with the extensions for which application is being made in the present Session, form a system about eight miles in length (part of which is a double line), passing through one of the most populous, active, and increasing districts in London, and will, in addition, serve an enormous population on all sides of the district.

The Line already authorised commences at Plough Lane, Battersea, passing Belmont (the extensive works of Price's Patent Candle Company), it is continued along the York and Battersea Park roads, by Battersea Park (often visited by 15,000 persons at one time), and the two stations of the London, Brighton, and South-Coast, and London, Chatham, and Dover Railways in these roads, and thence to a point near the Steamboat Pier, Nine Elms.

The population is of a class requiring tramway accommodation, and is increasing at a greater rate than any other Metropolitan district.

The extensions being applied for in the present Session received the sanction of the Metropolitan and Local Boards of Works, and the Bill has passed all stages of the House of Commons without opposition, and stands for the formal third reading at the sitting of the House.

It will be seen by the map that, by means of this system of Tramways, the whole district is put into direct communication with no less than seven important railway stations. Clapham Junction (where over 850 passenger trains arrive and depart every day). Wandsworth, Battersea, York Road, Battersea Park Road, Queen's Road, and Wandsworth Road. These stations belong to different railways communicating with the termini at Waterloo, London Bridge, Cannon Street, Ludgate Hill, Victoria, and the Crystal Palace, and in fact with every railway system in London, North and South of the Thames.

The Lines will be laid with steel rails and granite setts, firmly embedded on a thick layer of concrete, and in the most durable manner, so that the large outlays for renewal rendered necessary in the earlier Tramways will be avoided.

None of the conditions requisite for the complete success of a Tramway are absent from the present enterprise, and the Directors believe that the Company will be a more than usually prosperous undertaking.

The Act incorporating the Company, the Bill for the Extensions, and the plans and sections of the whole of the Tramways, can be seen at the Solicitors' and the Company's Offices.

Copies of the prospectus and forms of application can be obtained at the Offices, or from the Bankers and Solicitors of the Company.

These Wines are strongly recommended by several of the leading medical men, both in London and the Provinces. They are free from any added alcohol (which makes other wines so injurious to health), and are almost a sure cure for Gout and Rheumatism.

In the leading cities of Australia, and also in the country districts, the greater part of the Hospitals and other sanitary institutions use the Australian Wines, almost to the entire exclusion of Port, Sherry, and other foreign wines.

In introducing these Wines, MESSRS. WILKINSON and Co. have placed the prices as low as possible, so as to be within the means of all classes.

BANKERS.

SECRETARY.
Mr. Joseph Wykes.

Since the first allotment of Shares, the Directors have the pleasure to announce that the Company have secured the very valuable Freehold Estates of "Lackadie" and "Madutelia," in the Wynaad District of Southern India, the very heart of the Gold-bearing region, comprising an area of about 900 acres for a sum of £40,000, payable £20,000 in Cash and £20,000 in Shares, at the option of the Company.

As an instance of the daily increasing demand for Gold properties in Southern India, the Directors need only inform the Shareholders, that since the securing these Estates, a much larger price has been offered for them, which, taken with the restrictions placed upon the grant of the Leases by the Government, and the limitation to 30 acres, renders the acquisition of these Properties most advantageous.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the circumstance that the Property the Company has acquired is Freehold and without restrictions.

About 250 acres is under cultivation as a Coffee Plantation, and in the sale to the Company is included the Growing Crops, Buildings, Stock, &c. The Estates possess a plentiful supply of labour, water, and timber, and are easily accessible to the Imperial and district roads, and water carriage.

At the earliest opportunity the Directors purpose erecting sufficient machinery to crush 150 tons of quartz per day, which it is estimated will give the following result:—

150 tons of Quartz crushed per day for 300 working days, yielding 10 dwt. of Gold per Ton, at the selling price of £3 15s. per oz.

The Directors, in conclusion, have much pleasure and satisfaction in submitting the Investment to the public, and that in order to avoid disappointment to applicants for shares, they will allot the shares strictly in accordance with the order in which they are received.

PARTNERSHIP or INVESTMENT.—WANTED, a Gentleman with from £4,000 to £5,000, to take an important position in a well-established and high-class manufacturing firm. The principal will be amply secured, with interest at 5 per cent.; and a salary of £400, rising to £600 per annum, will be paid, with the option of partnership at an early date, on terms to be agreed upon.—Apply, by letter, to Mr. FRANCIS G. GORTON, Solicitor, 46 Bedford Row, W.C.

TO CAPITALISTS.—A FIRM of over 150 years' standing have just arranged the PURCHASE of a splendid LONDON PROPERTY, which, judiciously worked, will treble their profits. To find the increased capital, they intend to form themselves into a Limited Company, but they wish to avoid having the Company promoted in the ordinary way, and for this end would be glad to find a few Gentlemen with capital, who would join them, after the strictest investigation, in forming a Company on the same principle as other eminent firms have recently done, without, in the first instance, offering shares to the public. The investment is of the most bonâ fide character, will pay from the first a very high per-centage, and the shares must eventually reach a high premium.—Address to "X," 39 Basinghall Street, London, E.C.

NEW ZEALAND.—To Farmers, Gentlemen's Sons, with capital, Guardians, &c.—A block of land has been set apart within the "MANCHESTER SPECIAL SETTLEMENT," 75 miles north of Wellington, for the SETTLEMENT of a number of YOUNG GENTLEMEN with CAPITAL of from £2,000 to £10,000 each on favourable terms. Good opportunities will be given for the purchase of land, and facilities for gaining Colonial experience.—For further particulars, apply to the SECRETARY, Emigrant and Colonists Aid Corporation, Limited—Chairman, His Grace the Duke of Manchester—25 Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster, S.W.

REPORT.

The Directors are glad to meet the Shareholders again, and to submit to them as usual, a Statement of the Bank's affairs.

There were five changes in the published rate of the Bank of England during the year, giving an average rate of £2 10s 2d as against £3 15s 7d for the year 1878. This reduction in the value of money, together with the general depression in trade, has very materially affected Banking profits. The result of the year's operations enables the Directors to recommend:—

That the Dividend and Bonus now to be declared be 10 per cent. for the half-year, being the usual 4 per cent. dividend, with a Bonus of 6 per cent., making, with the distribution in January last, 19 per cent. for the year, leaving a balance of £21,757 4s 9d of undivided profits to be carried forward to the account of the current year.

REST or UNDIVIDED PROFITS at 31st December, 1878, as exhibited at the Annual Meeting in May, 1879, viz.:		£1,048,125 0 0

Leaving		£1,089,857 0 0
Out of these profits the Directors propose to declare, in addition to the foregoing Dividends and Bonus paid to Proprietors as above stated, a further Bonus of 6 per cent. payable in July next, making the division of Profits for 1879 in all 19 per cent. upon the Paid-up Capital, free of Income-tax, amounting to		104,625 0 0
Leaving Reserve invested in Government Securities		£985,232 0 0

Of the 28,125 new Shares issued in terms of the last Annual Report, certain Shares from various circumstances were not taken up. These, having been forfeited and subsequently sold, yielded a profit of £7,756 5s, which it is proposed to carry to credit of Profit and Loss Account for the present year.

The measure for limiting the liability of Joint-Stock Companies, which was under consideration of Parliament at the time of our last Annual Meeting, subsequently became law, and the Directors prepared a scheme as a basis on which to register this Bank as a Bank with Limited Liability, under the Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1879. A circular letter was addressed to each Shareholder, and two Extraordinary Meetings were held, the first on February 5, and the second on April 8. At these Meetings the £50 Shares were divided into two Shares of £25 each, £10 10s paid; the liability of each such Share was limited to £75, and that of each £20 Share to £60. It was further agreed that 16,875 new Shares of £20 each should be issued at a premium of £10; £12 to be called up and paid in the following order:—

15th Jan., 1882	,, 2	,, ,,	2
15th Jan., 1883	,, 2	,, ,,	2
15th Jan., 1884	,, 2	,, ,,	2
15th Jan., 1885	,, 2	,, ,,	—

The amount derived from this premium will be added to the Reserve Fund, and invested in Government Securities, as on previous occasions.

At the Meeting of Shareholders, held on the 8th day of April last, it was unanimously decided to register this Bank as a Bank with Limited Liability, under the Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1879, with an increase to the Subscribed Capital of £8,025,000, which will form the Reserve Liability of the Bank. Power was given to the Directors to register the Bank on or before the 31st July, and in pursuance thereof they propose to effect registration on the 1st July next.

When the above arrangements, approved by the Shareholders at the Meetings referred to, are completed, the Capital and Reserve Fund of the Company will be Thirteen millions, four hundred and seventeen thousand, five hundred pounds, as under:—

Ditto uncalled	1,785,000
Reserve Liability	8,025,000
Reserve Fund invested in Government Securities	1,380,000
	£13,417,500

It is very satisfactory to state that since it was determined to register the Bank as a Bank with Limited Liability, there has been an accession of many wealthy and influential Shareholders, which fully confirms the wisdom of adopting the measure.

It is gratifying to observe that the Bank continues to widen its connections, 5,962 new accounts having been opened during the year.

YORK.

Circumstances having occurred favourable to the establishment of a branch at York, the Directors decided upon opening there, appointing Mr. R. W. Hartley as their Manager. The business is progressing very satisfactorily.

REDCAR.

Hitherto banking facilities have been supplied from Middlesborough, but the increased business of the locality has justified the Directors in establishing a branch of which Mr. R. H. Dodds has been appointed Manager.

In conformity with the provision of the new Act, it will be requisite for the Meeting to provide for the audit of accounts, and to elect Auditors for that purpose.

The following Directors go out of office by rotation, but being eligible for re-election, offer themselves accordingly, viz.:—Hon. ELIOT THOMAS YORKE, R. WIGRAM, Esq., CHARLES BARCLAY, Esq.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—
By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B. L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

Teeth from 5s; sets, 5 to 30 guineas. Only addresses, 312 Regent Street, opposite the Polytechnic; and 49 Moorgate Street. Established 1820. Consultation free.

IN the Report of the Royal Commission on the London Stock Exchange, dated May 31, 1878, a prominent place has been given to the following recommendations:—"That a Book or Register should be kept on the Stock Exchange, in which Brokers should be invited to enter from time to time the names and quantities of any Securities of the character we have been considering, which they may have instructions to buy or sell, with or without a price at which they are ready to deal. . . . . . In whatever form such a scheme be carried out, it cannot fail, we think, to possess the great advantage of bringing buyers and sellers into immediate contact, and by the exclusion of the middleman, for whose services there is no need, of saving to the parties the profits, sometimes unreasonably large, which he secures for himself."

The London Stock Exchange having failed to adopt the system recommended (the benefit of which to the public is too obvious to require comment), this Association has been established upon the principle indicated by the Royal Commissioners, as a

by means of which Sellers and Buyers will be enabled to conduct their transactions directly through one agency instead of three, and consequently at a greatly reduced rate of brokerage. Another great advantage derivable from the Register will be that of providing a ready market for that class of Securities called "Non Current," the value of which is estimated in the Report above quoted at 562 Millions, and for dealings in which, in consequence of their not being quoted on the Stock Exchange, great difficulty is now experienced.

In addition to operations through the Register, the Association is prepared to effect the Purchase and Sale of Stocks or Shares in the open market, as well as to negotiate Mortgages, on exceptionally favourable terms. Deposit Accounts, bearing Interest, can be opened, and Coupons and Dividends collected, for the convenience of Members.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of extending the sale of the Bilin Natural Mineral Water, and the Bilin Digestive Pastilles, and for acquiring the business now carried on by Mr. Ludwig Epstein, at the Bilin Water Depôts, at 27 King Street, Cheapside, and 46 Gresham Street, London, and 12 King's Road, Brighton, and his rights in respects of sale of these articles in the United Kingdom, its Colonies and Dependencies, and the continents of and islands of America, both North and South, and also for the sale and manufacture of mineral, gaseous, and aërated waters generally. Powers are also taken for the sale of wines and spirits and other drinks, whether alcoholic or otherwise, in case it should ever appear desirable to exercise such powers.

Mr. Epstein has recently entered into an agreement for a term of fifty years with His Serene Highness Prince Lobkowitz, Duke of Raudnitz, the proprietor of the springs at Bilin, in Bohemia, for the exclusive supply to him for sale in the British Empire, its Colonies and Dependencies, and on the continent of and islands of North and South America, of the Water and Pastilles, contained in an agreement and supplementary agreement, dated respectively February 24, 1880, and April 4, 1880.

The Mineral Water of Bilin is rapidly rising in the estimation of the public, both as a cure for indigestion and all those diseases which arise from acidity of the digestive organs, and as a delicious and refreshing table-water.

On the Continent it has been known and appreciated for many years, and the first medical authorities have testified to its valuable qualities. Since its introduction into this country its popularity is daily increasing, and it is highly recommended by the Faculty here, as appears from the high testimonials received.

The Bilin Digestive Pastilles possess all the beneficial properties of the water. They have been admitted into the Austrian Pharmacopœia, and their efficacy has been attested by undoubted authorities.

Prize Medals have been awarded both to the Water and the Pastilles at the Exhibitions of London, Paris, and Vienna.

The Bilin Water is imported in its natural state.

From the valuable qualities of the Water, it is not only a luxury for the table, but also a necessity to those who are troubled with indigestion and acidity; and when it becomes as well known in England as it already is in Austria and Germany, it is sure to be in very large demand; and as the agreements with Prince Lobkowitz have been concluded on very advantageous terms, large profits may be expected by the Shareholders in the Company.

The only contract that has been entered into by or on behalf of the Company can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitor of the Company, and is dated May 6, 1880, between Ludwig Epstein, of the one part, and J. A. Partridge, as trustee for the Company, on the other part, for the sale to Mr. J. A. Partridge of the business and goodwill and stock-in-trade of Mr. Epstein and the benefit and burden of his provisional agreement and supplemental agreement with Prince Lobkowitz. Under his contract Mr. Epstein is to receive the sum of £4,000 in cash and £4,000 in fully paid-up shares of the Company. The said provisional agreement is dated February 24, 1880, and the said supplemental agreement is dated April 4, 1880, the said agreement and supplemental agreement are made between Prince Lobkowitz, of Bilin, Bohemia, in the Empire of Austria, of the one part, and Ludwig Epstein, of 27 King Street, Cheapside, of the other part, and were entered into in the German language and in the German form, and under the advice of Austrian lawyers. The said provisional agreement and supplemental agreement and translations into English thereof can be seen at the offices of the Company's Solicitor. The final agreement will have to be deposited with the Imperial District Court at Prague, pursuant to the requirement and practice of Austrian law.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained of the Bankers, Brokers Solicitor, and at the Registered Offices of the Company, where the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be seen.

In case no allotment is made, the money paid on application will be returned in full.

A REWARD of £200 will be given by the Admiralty to the first person who gives such information as may lead to any definite knowledge being obtained of the cause or locality of the loss of the Atalanta, or who finds the first traces of any part of her hull or equipment. Even the most hopeful have at last been forced to admit that they have hoped in vain, and those who have longed for the return of those they loved on board the Atalanta, will never be satisfied. The sea has swallowed up the ship with her chosen officers and promising young crew, and thus far, though months have elapsed since the dire fatality befell the ship, nothing has been cast up to tell one word as to how the ship went down. Possibly when the Blanche returns from her cruise on the Newfoundland coast, and the French and Danish cruisers on the Greenland coast and at Iceland shall have made their reports, we may hear of some relics of the ill-fated training-ship having been picked up; but as yet nothing which might have belonged to her has been discovered. The long-sustained suspense as to the fate of the Atalanta has indeed been hard to bear by those having friends and relatives on board, and it is difficult to say which was most sad, the foundering of the Eurydice within sight of home, or the mysterious disappearance of the Atalanta. That these two training-ships should have been lost in two years, though under totally different circumstances, has caused a feeling of great distrust as to the equipment of the vessel, and there is a strong determination on the part of the country that the steps taken to make the Atalanta a thoroughly efficient and seaworthy training-ship shall be sifted to the bottom. On Monday, the matter will come before the House of Commons, and the constitution of the board of inquiry, or whatever form of committee or commission may be appointed to look into the matter, will be narrowly scrutinised. In the case of the Eurydice, there were two survivors, and, consequently, the time-honoured custom of trying them by court-martial for losing their ship but escaping with their lives was followed. The public was not, however, altogether satisfied with the form of inquiry, and the laborious procedure of a Naval court, and the fact of its being composed solely of officers under the rule of the Admiralty, was not looked upon with favour. As far as we know, the Atalanta has not left behind one soul who can tell the tale of her loss, but all hands have disappeared with their ship, and a court-martial is, therefore, impossible, there being, unhappily, none who can be put upon trial. The mode of instituting an inquiry, which has been entertained by the Admiralty, as nearly resembles a court-martial as can well be, for it is to be composed of Naval officers, and to take place on board the flag-ship at Portsmouth. But if this idea is persisted in, objections will most certainly be raised, for what the country wants to see is an open and public inquiry made by a committee or board, on which there should be some who are free from all control of the Admiralty. It is hoped that the Admiralty will lay before the court all the correspondence which passed between the dockyard officials and the department respecting the fitting-out of the ship, and, more than that, the whole of the reports made by Captain Stirling on the behaviour of the ship on her first cruise, and his suggestions for having alterations made in some important points. There is an idea that all Captain Stirling's suggestions were not complied with, and that he was sent to sea with his ship not entirely as he would have wished her. We believe that the last ship which fell in with the Atalanta and had any intercourse with her was the Bacchante, and it would be well to inquire before she leaves Portsmouth on a further cruise whether any particulars as to the behaviour of the training-ship were gathered from officers or men at Bermuda, whence she started for her homeward voyage, but was never again seen. The few survivors who were saved from being lost in the ship, either by being in hospital or sent to prison, should also be brought home from the West Indies, if they are still absent from England, as their evidence is all-important. We trust that the Admiralty may have nothing to fear by submitting every detail to the closest scrutiny, and we trust that no desire to make the inquiry a purely Service matter may be allowed to prevail. It is of consequence that the country should not lose confidence in the capabilities of those in whose hands the Government of the Navy is placed; and the unparalleled misfortune which has befallen the Service while under the control of Mr. Smith should be so openly looked into, that the Department may be cleared of the suspicion which now attaches to it in certain quarters. In the loss of the two training-ships, there is the slight consolation that the distress occasioned is not so great as it would have been in the case of ordinary men-of-war. The chief part of the crew was composed of young unmarried men, and though many of them helped to support their parents, yet there are fewer widows and orphans than would otherwise have been left behind.

The Afghan Question has two sides—or it may be said rather to have two aspects—the political and the military. If we regard the political side from the stand-point which Lord Lytton or his masters took, and consider the punishment of the Ameer for his dalliance with Russia as the end to be gained—an end to be achieved by the permanent overthrow of Russian influence, and the preponderance of our own in the council chamber at Cabul—it must be admitted that, although the punishment of Shere Ali, followed, as it has been, by that of Yakoob, for some secret crime, was complete, the other results cannot be accepted as satisfactory. We have not obtained any guarantee for the exclusion of Russian influence in Afghanistan. On the contrary, the favoured candidate for the unenviable position of Ameer is one who must, notwithstanding his protestations, be far more disposed to regard Russia with affection than otherwise, for he received protection and hospitality, if not more effective aid, in the dominions of the Czar, and he surely feels that our present overtures are not dictated by any higher motive than a desire to escape with credit from an unpleasant position. Abdurrahman cannot be depended upon as an ally by choice. It would be strange, if he could. He owes to British influences nothing that he has obtained; he owes to British difficulties nearly all that he can hope to get; and when he has got himself in the saddle and has a fair field before him, it will be hard to say how he will go, unless we have something more than an eye on him. But it is clear that the outcome of our advance into Afghanistan, whether it proceeded from a thirst for a scientific frontier, or from the determination to check Russian intrigue, has not yet risen out of the category of doubtful measures, and has not proved that those who from the first protested against it, like the late Lord Lawrence and the present Duke of Argyll, were wrong in their prophecies of evil, and their arguments to sustain their prophecies. The people of India, princes and chiefs, Mahometan and Hindoo, regard the issue of our invasion of Afghanistan with the deepest interest, and no matter what colouring may be put on the withdrawal of our forces from the country by ourselves, there will be but one construction placed on it by them. The misfortune of taking up a position from which we must withdraw is, that the retreat is never ascribed to victory. It is like the case of a fleet which bombards a town and retires. The garrison always say they beat the fleet off, and forced it to give up the contest. In fine, the political aspect of the situation is not seductive, and the financial consequences are very grave indeed. But with the military question there are far more cheerful associations, and if the strategical operations should seem to be open to criticism on several points, the tactical dispositions have generally been sound, and the conduct of the troops in the field has presented a marked contrast to the behaviour of the much-belaagered army of short-service lads in Zululand, just as the war itself has brought to the front several officers of marked ability as Generals. As politicians, they have, perhaps, not been so successful; but they had to make bricks without straw. It may prove that the most arduous part of their work is still to come, for the evacuation of a country in which one invasion has let loose so many evil passions, and disturbed all the elements of disorder which were kept down by the iron heel of Shere Ali, may be well esteemed an operation of considerable risk, and is sure to be attended and followed by remarkable disturbances, not to speak of the anarchy which will prevail after our retreat. The occupation of Candahar is a measure to which the present Government would probably be opposed, if they were out of office, and it is, perhaps, too much to expect that Lord Ripon has as yet any clear views, or that Lord Hartington has quite made up his mind on the subject; but if scientific frontiers have any charm for our Liberal rulers, they will find it no easy matter to resist the attractions with which Indian soldiers and statesmen will wreathe the idea of a Candahar protectorate. Tempting as the occasion may be, and desirable in many respects as the separation of Candahar from the rule of Cabul may be in the abstract, there are such powerful objections to the extension of our imperial responsibilities in India, and there are so many chances of our being involved in the conflicts which the restless spirit of Afghan tribes and clans, and the efforts of religious and political fanatics, render almost inevitable, that it would, in our opinion, be the safer and wiser course to "let Candahar slide." Our position in Afghanistan is like that of the French in the Peninsula,—they were victorious in the field, they had partisans and friends, but the nation was against them. Fortunately, there is no Wellington, to complete the disagreeable resemblance.

Another public body has taken up the question of Nautical Surveying and reform of our Hydrographical Department, for on Wednesday night Lieutenant Temple lectured to the Society of Arts on the subject of "The Trade Routes between England, Norway, and Siberia," and the discussion which followed showed how keen an interest is taken in the important subject of hydrography. It is impossible that this should be otherwise, in a country which possesses nearly half the shipping of the world, which has colonies in every quarter of the globe, and business relations with almost every port. The ships annually lost or disabled through the imperfect knowledge in the possession of the owners, would alone suffice to maintain double or treble the force of marine surveyors which the Admiralty now employs; and, as we have repeatedly pointed out, it is not only the Mercantile Marine which benefits so largely by the accuracy of charts and sailing directions, but the Navy has a direct interest, apart from that of mere safety, in obtaining complete information in reference to the coasts and harbours of foreign countries. A very large portion of the duties of our war-ships in a time of active operations, a much larger proportion than formerly, must consist of inshore work, such as planting torpedoes, mining and counter-mining, blockading, bombarding, and cutting-out, and it is of the highest consequence that we should be in possession of the most accurate information of soundings, of lights, and leading-marks on every coast. It is impossible to predict where this knowledge may be put to the test, as it has recently been on the south-east coast of Africa, when it was found lamentably deficient. Not only were we in imminent danger of losing the Active and Tenedos, but we had to incur enormous expenses in the land transit of stores which might, in all probability, have been avoided, if we had possessed a more accurate knowledge of the Zululand coast. There is no place so remote but that it may one day be of some strategic importance to ourselves or our colonies, either for defence or attack. The first thing, then, for the Admiralty to do, in regard to this matter, is to provide in a manner serviceable to British seamen all the authentic information that has been already obtained, either by foreign Governments, by private surveyors or by our own Imperial and Indian surveys. But it is just this that the Hydrographical Department seems utterly incapable of appreciating. The general idea that is ingrained in the official mind appears to be to spend as little money as possible, and to show with how small an expenditure it is possible to keep up the semblance and shadow of a Surveying Service. It would be incredible, if we had not received it from Lieutenant Temple himself, that the reason the result of his survey of the Norwegian coast has not been given to the world long before this is that the Hydrographical Department has only a limited quantity of type at its disposal, and that a valuable work must be shelved, or at any rate its publication must be postponed, until some of this type can be set at liberty. In the discussion on the paper which Lieutenant Temple read at the Society of Arts, Lord Northbrook's interest in marine surveying, as evidenced by his establishment of the Indian Marine Surveying Service, was well pointed out; and we may confidently rely, it is hoped, upon him and upon Mr. Brassey, who is not only a Member of Parliament taking a lively interest in nautical affairs, but is himself a certificated shipmaster, not to lose any time in instituting a very searching inquiry into the apathy and indifference exhibited by the Hydrographical Department, and in endeavouring to restore the Surveying Service to the proud position it formerly held, under Sir Francis Beaufort.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh inspected the Coastguard and Naval Reserve at Great Yarmouth on Wednesday, and also attended a review of the Norfolk Artillery Militia, of which the Prince of Wales is honorary colonel. His Royal Highness is continuing his Coastguard inspections in the district.

Her Majesty has conferred the blue ribbon of St. Patrick upon H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, to mark the services of his Royal Highness in administering relief on the West Coast of Ireland. The energy and ability with which the Duke organised the arrangements for the distribution of stores by the Relief Squadron under his orders was of the greatest possible service.

We are happy to find that the organisation of the new British Arctic Expedition is progressing surely and steadily. The result of Commander Cheyne recently lecturing upon the subject has been that Captain J. C. Bailey, R.N., has joined the committee, and given £50 towards the fund, and Captain Bedford Pim, R.N., Dr. B. W. Richardson, F.R.S., and Major Duncan, R.A., supported the object in effective speeches. A Sub-Lieutenant in the Danish Royal Navy, a brother of Lieutenant Howgoord, who served in the Vega, has been selected to join the expedition, and Dr. Rink, Superintendent of the Greenland Board of Trade in Copenhagen, has already forwarded instructions to the Governor of North Greenland to afford the same facilities in Esquimaux dogs and stores as has been usual in other expeditions.

Captain Cortland Simpson has decided to retire, although he might have remained on the Active List of his rank yet a little longer. There was, however, no prospect of his reaching active flag-rank, or of being again employed, so he has kindly made way for the promotion of a commander.

Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty, has been absent from the Admiralty on a visit to Truro.

The cruise of the Channel Squadron in search of the Atalanta was watched with some anxiety at Lloyd's, it being anticipated that the ships might fall in with some missing merchant vessels, but the Squadron reports that no derelicts whatever were met with on the cruise.

The proposal to erect an Orpheus Memorial is, we are glad to learn, being very well received, and in a letter from Mr. Brooke-Hunt, which we publish in another column, will be found some particulars as to the formation of a committee. The following interesting extract we take from a letter we have received from a lady, and though not intended for publication, we feel sure the writer will pardon its insertion in this place. She says, "The officers were at a ball in Hobart Town, given to them by some of the ladies there, up to the moment of their leaving harbour, and I believe I was the last lady to whom the gallant Commodore had spoken. He was a most accomplished and excellent man, as courteous as he was brave; but indeed all the officers were much beloved and liked during their short visit, which was made gay and pleasant by numerous entertainments, into all of which they entered with pleasure and amiability. My late husband being in military command in Tasmania at the time of the disaster, we were on terms of cordial intimacy with many of the officers, and, in common with all the other inhabitants of the place, shocked and grieved beyond measure at their untimely fate."

The Admiralty has raised the contribution to the band fund of each of the Divisions of the Royal Marines to £100 per annum. A little generosity towards the bands of ships would be very much appreciated afloat.

Lord Ashley has, we hear, resigned his commission as Lieutenant commanding the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers; he, in his desire to uphold the discipline of the Service, having apparently forgotten that he was dealing with Volunteers, who, when off duty, at a meeting of the corps, did not understand that freedom of speech would be looked upon as insubordination. Lord Ashley suspended an officer, and struck one of the gunners off the strength of the corps; but their Lordships, on looking into the case, found they could not uphold this action, and this being a direct support of the Brigade against the decision of the commanding officer, Lord Ashley very properly deemed it better to resign. The supernumerary Lieutenant, Mr. Thomas Brassey, Civil Lord of the Admiralty, is now again, at least for the time, the commanding officer of the London Brigade.

The submarine mining experiments to be carried out by the Hecla in Bantry Bay, where she arrived on Wednesday, will be witnessed by a representative of the War Office, and Colonel Crossman, R.E., was given a passage in the Hecla for this purpose.

Commander Kerr, of the Kingstown Division of the Coastguard, has, we hear, been informed by the Admiralty that the piece of wood which was picked up by the Coastguard, having written upon it a statement that it was from the Atalanta, then foundering, is not believed to have come from the ship. It is, apparently, the invention of a cruel and mischievous mind.

The Council of the Society of Arts has awarded the Fothergill gold medal, offered for the best means of protecting ships from loss by fire or by sinking, to Mr. Donald Currie, C.M.G., M.P., for the improvement he has introduced into his passenger steamers, having for their object the prevention of loss of life at sea from fire or accident, and exemplified in the ship Grantully Castle. They further recommend that a Society of Arts silver medal be awarded to Mr. J. W. Wood, for his leak-stopper. In answer to the invitation offering the prize, thirty-two applications were sent in.

The Himalaya will probably leave Devonport next Wednesday on her trip to Bombay, with officers and crew for the Ruby, and to bring home Lord Lytton and suite.

Last week we notified that a meritorious service medal, together with an annuity of £10, had become vacant, by the promotion of Quartermaster-Serjeant Samuel Soal, R.M.A., to Quartermaster of the Royal Westmoreland Militia. Had this officer received his commission from the non-commissioned ranks to a Quartermastership in his own corps, he would have retained the medal and annuity, which he has to relinquish, on transferring his services to the Militia.

Mr. Goschen and his brother decided that they would embark in the Helicon at Trieste, instead of Venice, as previously arranged, and the special Ambassador proceeded for Constantinople yesterday.

The idea that the Iris might go to China, in the event of troubles arising between the Celestial Empire and the Western nations, does not seem to be shared by the Admiralty, as she is only being fitted out for a short cruise. She makes a ten days' trial in the Channel, before leaving for the Mediterranean.

It is with deep regret we record the death of Commander Bruce, whose services during the Perak campaign, when in command of the Fly, obtained special recognition. He was recently appointed to command the Berwick Coastguard district, between Dunbar on the north and Amble on the south, comprising about sixty miles of coast. He left on the 13th inst. to visit officially several places to the south of Berwick, and on the 16th his body was found on the beach at Holy Island. He crossed from the mainland to Holy Island in a small boat, and was seen to leave to return, and there is little reason to doubt that in the passage back his boat capsized. Commander Bruce leaves a widow and young family. Commander Bruce had seen good service, having been employed in the Baltic and Black Sea during the Russian war, in the China war in 1857 and in the Perak campaign for which the medal is about to be issued. He had, therefore, already the Baltic, Crimean, Turkish and China medals, and was entitled to that for Perak. He also had the clasp for Sebastopol, at the fall of which he received a wound.

Miss Macdonald, daughter of Sir Reginald Macdonald, K.C.S.I., Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, will name the Constance, on her being launched on the 9th June, to which date this ceremony has been postponed.

Among the additions to the Army Discipline Act, published for the present month under the head of "Examinations for Promotion," it is notified that "General officers will satisfy themselves that previous to the assembly of the examining board, in the case of officers not belonging to a mounted corps, all candidates are in possession of a certificate of qualification in riding. The latter may be either that referred to in Para. 41*e* of G.O. 56 of 1878, or may be granted by the General officer commanding after personal examination by himself or by a field officer specially deputed by him." This latter course is an advantage to all officers concerned, inasmuch as it relieves them of the expense and inconvenience of going through a course of military equitation at Canterbury; and we hope to see the same advantage extended to officers of the Royal Marine Corps.

Mr. Peter Taylor is still undefeated, and although the House, Naval officers, and even the men themselves, have given it as their opinion that the retention of the Cat in the Navy for exceptional cases is advisable, he intends to adhere to his annual motion for its total abolition. Without the everlasting return of the Cat and the Deceased Wife's Sister, Parliament would hardly know itself.

From our interesting Service contemporary of Japan the Hei ji Shimbun, which, being translated, is the name of this paper, "The Army and Navy Gazette," we learn that the training service is a credit to the Japanese Navy. The training-ship Tsukuba Kan will sail for Vancouver's Island about the middle of May, and on the return voyage will call at San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands; it is expected that the cruise will occupy about three months. The Tsukuba Kan will have thirty Naval cadets on board.

We understand that new appointments of Medical Officers of the Navy, for duty at the Royal Marine Divisions, will only be for a period of two years, if not promoted in the interim, instead of for three years, as heretofore.

We notice with some surprise that the Esk has again been selected by the Admiralty for the annual cruise of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, this class of vessel being but ill-adapted for the purpose, for they are not good sea-boats, their steaming powers are small, and their sailing capacity nil. The Slaney was the first gunboat of this class lent to the Volunteers in 1878. Her engines broke down on an average three times a day, sometimes in bad weather on a lee shore, indeed it was almost a wonder that the Slaney ever returned to Sheerness. The Esk, although a little better as regards machinery, is still very unsatisfactory as a cruiser. What the Volunteers require is a serviceable cruiser, in which they can gain some experience in practical seamanship, as well as heavy-gun exercise. It is no small thing for the men to undertake to rough it at sea for ten days, surely, then, the least the Admiralty can do is to send them afloat in a ship worthy of the name, and give the Volunteer crew a chance of gaining that practical knowledge so essential for their efficiency. We hope that this matter will receive proper attention in the right quarter, now that the evil has been made known, and it is not too late even now for the Admiralty to place a larger and better ship at the disposal of the Volunteers for this year's cruise.

As the Ruby is about to be recommissioned at Bombay, the new crew going out in the Himalaya, it seems a pity that this opportunity was not made use of to send out a new complement to the Vulture, now three and a half years in commission on the East India station, nearly the whole of which time has been spent in the Mozambique and Persian Gulf.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., is once again on board his flagship, after a long compulsory stay at Bombay, while his ship was at Malta under repairs. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief embarked under a salute and with a guard of honour.

Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, G.C.B., will preside at the annual meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, which will take place at Cannon-Street Hotel on Thursday next, at three o'clock.

In June last a scheme was organised by the Accountant-General of the Navy for the employment of qualified pensioners from the Royal Navy or Marines in clerical duties in the Dockyards, Victualling Yards, and Naval Hospitals; and we are glad to observe that from inquiries made into the Dockyard arrangements, with regard to storehousemen, &c., by the late Admiralty, shortly before quitting office, a further extension in the employment of those who have served in the Navy or Marines is approved, as a reorganisation is to take place in the staff of storehousemen, and the employés in future are to be selected from the Services. This will be a further boon to intelligent and well-conducted men, as well as an advantage to the Government establishments.

Commander Hunter Kent, who has been awarded a Naval pension of £50 per annum, vacant by the death of Commander Moore, was a lieutenant of 1858, and became retired commander in November, 1875. He is the junior of his rank who holds a Naval pension.

The Vestal is now fairly on her way home to pay off, information having been received of her sailing for England, from Aden, on the 5th inst.

The French frigate Kerguelen recently spent a night, on the reef of rocks at the entrance to the inner harbour of Amoy, but on getting off next morning did not appear to have suffered much injury, for she steamed away to Shanghai.

The King William IV. Royal Naval Asylum, at Penge, is a Royal memorial of our sailor-king, founded by Queen Adelaide in 1847, and consists of 12 delightful little residences, and a nice garden apportioned to each house, for the widows of Naval officers, with a pension to each of £30 per annum. Of late years, however, the ladies have had to pay the gardener's wages between them, and also their proportion of taxes, thus reducing the pension of £30 by some £6 or £7. Queen Adelaide took a very great interest in this memorial, and the late Earl Howe was one of the trustees, and the late H. J. Harrison, H.M.'s Privy Purse Office, was honorary secretary. We hear that H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, previous to sailing for Ireland, paid a visit to King William's Naval Asylum, and called upon the lady who is the correspondent with the Governors, and made many kind inquiries about the asylum. Possibly the Duke was induced to pay this visit in consequence of rumours that there is an idea of depriving this memorial of one of its greatest beauties, and the ladies of one of their greatest privileges, it being stated that the gardens are to be taken away, and sold or let for building purposes. The gardener has been discharged, and the ladies have been called upon to sign a paper giving up their gardens—a sore trial to many, and much against their will. The gardener's lodge is shut up, the grass is uncut, the borders untrimmed, the paths unswept, and the gardens, for so many years the amusement and profit to the ladies and the admiration of all who knew them, are looking very much the picture of desolation, which a few weeks will make still more apparent. We cannot think that such a step should be taken, as that foreshadowed, without very pressing and urgent reasons; and we feel sure it is but to call the attention of the governors, of whom we hear H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh is one, for steps to be taken to remedy the suggested destruction in part of a Royal memorial to our sailor-king. Surely, if funds are needed in such a cause they would quickly be found, to enable the governors to perpetuate the Institution in accordance with the founder's wishes and intentions. The fact of calling the attention of the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Naval profession generally, to the reports afloat will, we trust, result in our doubts being removed, and the place being saved from the auctioneer.

Mr. William F. Peel, who served in the Bacchante as midshipman during her recent cruise, has been permitted to leave the Navy, for the purpose of passing into the Army.

Mr. A. J. Clayton has been appointed private secretary to Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, C.B.; and Mr. John H. Giffard private secretary to Rear-Admiral Anthony H. Hoskins, C.B.

The Director of Engineering Works at the Admiralty, Colonel Pasley, C.B., has been temporarily appointed to fill the post of Chairman of the Board of Advice of the Colony of Victoria, vacated by Mr. Childers on taking office.

Recent affairs in India have raised more than a mere general sympathy for the object of high-handed proceedings, happily almost unprecedented in our military annals. They have awakened amongst officers of all ranks a sentiment of insecurity of position which is likely to take some tangible shape in the House of Commons or elsewhere. We know that the powers of commanders-in-chief and governors of colonies are theoretically of very unlimited extent, these powers being based on delegacy from the Sovereign; but it is very important to officers of the Army to know whether practically they can be recalled from command, injured in character, possibly professionally ruined in career, and exposed to public disgrace and intense mental torture, on the ipse dixit of any functionary, no matter how high, without not merely a court of inquiry or trial, but without being asked or given any opportunity of explanation. We know, of course, that officers have been removed from smaller or greater commands without trial, but we cannot recall to mind any instance where a General in the field has been previously disgraced in the eyes of his comrades and of the world before being told what charges were made against him, and being asked what he had to say in his defence. It must be recollected that suspension, which has sometimes taken place, is a very different thing from recall, and especially a recall distinctly and rudely announced at the time to be a fait accompli, without appeal. Letters from India state that this violently overbearing act, especially against an officer not only innocent of the charges made against him, but who had singularly distinguished himself during many phases of a five months' campaign, has created a profound feeling of alarm and uncertainty, as well as indignation, in both the Indian and British Armies of her Majesty, and that it is determined to take measures to evoke some opinion and some guarantee in the highest quarters on the subject.

A correspondent writes:—"I was not at Aldershot on the Queen's Review day, but all officers tell me the appearance of the troops was melancholy in the extreme—mere boys! The Cavalry could not ride or the Infantry march. Alas! what a change we have witnessed! We shall never again see the splendid set-up men of the Cavalry and the Line, which we were used to before the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny!"

We understand that Lieutenant-Colonel Cleland, 9th Lancers, has gone to Simla for the summer, being unfit to undertake the journey to England at present. If well enough, he will return home in the autumn.

There seems a very remote chance of employment for all the Cavalry officers who are on half-pay. The Purchase Colonels now being retired will, of course, have to be provided for first. Lieutenant-Colonel Le Quesne, of the 12th Lancers, will be placed on half-pay in a fortnight's time—another victim to Lord Cardwell's Warrant! A depôt brigade is no command for a Cavalry Colonel.

Lieutenant Knollys, Instructor of Musketry, 1st Battalion, succeeds Lieutenant Brett as Adjutant of the 2nd Battalion, Scots Guards.

We recently gave a sketch of the Bill on the French Staff which has now been under discussion for the last eight years. After having been tossed backwards and forwards, from Chamber to Chamber, from committee to committee, rejected by this War Minister and modified by that, there now appears a prospect of its being passed. At least, General Farre gave evidence lately before a mixed committee, which, it is supposed, will eventually settle this vexed question,—is the Staff to be a special service, or open to any officer who may qualify for it? The latest report made upon this subject by a committee of the Senate differed entirely from the report made by a committee of the Lower House, and therefore it was at last determined to form what is called a "committee of conciliation," which, it is fondly hoped, will solve the knotty problem which has given so much trouble. General Farre himself wishes to see the present staff corps suppressed, and the new corps composed in time of peace of 300 staff officers and 124 archivists. The 300 officers would, according to his prospect, have to pass through the superior school of war, which would receive yearly 60 captains, lieutenants, and sub-lieutenants. No staff officer would be allowed to remain on the staff for more than four years at a time; he would then have to rejoin the Army, and could only be recalled to the staff after having served with the troops for three or four years. The dissolution of the present staff would be accomplished by degrees, and only be terminated in six years. General Farre is opposed to the idea suggested by the Chamber of creating a permanent general staff as in Germany, being of opinion that such an institution is incompatible with Parliamentary government and ministerial responsibility. It is curious to find the new War Minister more parliamentary than the Parliament, which is, no doubt, struck with the injury done to the Service by frequent Ministerial changes. If there were a chief of the staff, like Field-Marshal Von Moltke or the Duke of Cambridge, they feel that their own versatility would be less damaging to the welfare of the Army. It must greatly impede progress to have a new War Minister every year, the one often undoing what his predecessor has accomplished. Should General Farre be able to get his way, no aide-de-camp or officer employed at the War Office will be allowed to perform his functions for more than three years. At the expiration of that period, they will have to return to their corps like the staff officers. It appears that a number of these favoured gentlemen obtained field-rank without ever having commanded a company. Against this abuse, General Farre protests with the greatest energy. The new Minister has only been in office a few weeks, and it is therefore too soon to pass judgment on his acts, but he appears determined to shake off the fetters which hampered his predecessors, and to prevail against red-tape.

THE SANDHURST COURSE.

"Fair-play" asks:—"How is it that Militia subalterns who could not qualify for Sandhurst are getting so many direct commissions into the Line? Is the 28 days' annual farce to be compared with the year's careful instruction in all Military matters given at the Royal Military College? If not, why is the Militiaman to have this unfair advantage; is it not as much as to say all the instruction given to the cadet is unnecessary?"

MILITIA COMMANDS.

"A F.-O." writes:—"Now that the limit of five years is put to the time that an officer should hold the command of a regiment of the Line, surely something should be done with respect to Militia regiments. In very many cases officers have held the command for years, and a little flow of promotion would do Militia as much good as the Line regiments."

Reviews.

A Manual of Gunnery. By a Gunnery Instructor.—This compact little work has been compiled for the use of non-commissioned officers in the Militia, and certainly would seem calculated to produce the end the author has in view, which, as his preface says, is not "to convey full instruction, but merely to facilitate the attainment of elementary knowledge, with which every gunner ought to be conversant."

Chronicles of No Man's Land. By Frederick Boyle. (Chapman and Hall.)—The author of this very pleasant book of travel, which forms a third series of "Camp Notes," has already introduced himself favourably to the public by his "To the Cape for Diamonds," "Through Fanteeland to Coomassie," "The Savage Life," &c. In his present volume, he has strung together twenty tales, varying in merit, but each entertaining and instructive. We can strongly recommend it to those readers who really like stories of adventure, especially when the scenes are laid inlands which very few indeed can have visited. With respect to the title of this volume, we must let the author speak for himself:—"The No-Man's-Land of which I treat in these pages is not bounded by parallels of latitude. It is the vague realm where human passions work, where the possibilities of life are undefined, so that no one can authoritatively distinguish 'what might have been from what is.' This No-Man's-Land is discovered on all the four Continents, in Europe as in Africa, and I have used the privilege of the Conquistador in shaping its ideal boundary as I please." It may be possible that some readers will feel a little "fogged" in the brain at the author's description of the mysterious region, but this will quickly melt away when he has fairly tackled the stories that are provided for his entertainment.

On Duty. By Parker Gilmore. (Chapman and Hall.)—The author of "A Ride through Hostile Africa" has already published a considerable number of books of travel, among others, "The Great Thirst Land." In it he gave several vivid descriptions of scenery, &c., which in some instances differed from those given by others. However, every traveller is entitled to form his own opinion of what he actually saw, and no doubt the author of On Duty has done so. His experiences as narrated in this bulky volume are taken from his journey into Kaffir-land when in the service of the Imperial Government during the late Zulu war, the object of his mission being to obtain, if possible, natives to assist in the transport of the army. Whether the author succeeded in accomplishing this mission does not appear,—at least, we failed to find any express statement in the affirmative. However, if he failed in doing it, he seems to have accomplished a far more important task, as described in the concluding paragraph of the book:—"Further, I would say, in conclusion, I firmly believe that, but for my appearance among many of the native tribes, and explaining to them the exact position in which our forces were occupied in Zululand, encouraging the weak-hearted and threatening the rebellious, we should have had them invade the Transvaal at a time when we were without troops, and thus least able to offer any opposition; and in consequence those Europeans who were loyal to the Imperial Governmenr would either have suffered massacre, or have been driven out of the land." From this it would appear beyond question that the author of On Duty deserved well of the Imperial Government.

The Chinese Minister has caused it to be announced that he has no information whatever as to the telegram stating the readiness of the Chinese Government to admit Europeans to the Naval and Military services.

It has been notified by the Director-General of Military Education that the next special Army examinations will take place in the several districts at home on the first Monday in June.

In future officers proceeding from or returning to their respective stations from the Staff College examination or any examination for Army promotion will, if they pass a qualifying examination, be allowed their travelling expenses. A certificate of their having so passed is to accompany the claim.

The success that has attended the establishment of the new Provision Market has, as might have been expected, given rise to the formation of another similar society. The name of the new Institution is to be "The Junior Army and Navy Provision Market," and an excellent site has been secured, facing the Army and Navy Co-operative Society at Westminster. The new Market will be established to supply officers of the Army, Navy, and Auxiliary Forces, and their families with all articles required for daily consumption.

THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY.

The Duke of Cambridge deputed the Director-General of Military Education, Gen. Beauchamp Walker, C.B., to distribute commissions to the Gentlemen Cadets at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, on Tuesday. Fifty cadets, a larger number than usual, passed out of the Academy on this occasion, and amongst them was Prince Ibrahim, son of the ex-Khedive of Egypt. A large assembly gathered to witness the proceedings, which commenced with the usual military exercises on the cricket-ground. All the cadets being paraded in the School of Arms, the important business of the day was commenced by Col. Barker, Assistant Director of Education, who read the examiners' reports. These were without exception of a gratifying character, and general testimony was borne to the mental and reflective powers of the cadets, as well as to the increased application which they had devoted to their studies in order to compensate for the shortened period at their command. Col. Marsh, R.E., acting-governor, reported that the cadets who now came up for commissions were well qualified, both in scientific acquirements and in drills and exercises. He recommended Senior Under-Officer M. Nathan for the Pollock Medal, given for distinguished proficiency in study, and remarked upon the self-restraint and well-directed application which had gained for that gentleman his high position. He stated also that the general conduct of the cadets had been very satisfactory, only one case to the contrary having occurred. Adverting to the decision of January last, that the work of the Institution should be carried on without the usual month's vacation, so as to allow of the first class being brought forward in the present month for commissions, and the junior classes to be given class promotion, Col. Marsh reported that these arrangements were in course of execution, and that the gentlemen cadets appreciated the accelerated advancements. They had been prosecuting their studies almost continuously since September last and with increased attention, but it was clear that there must be some loss to the course of studies when the exigencies of the Service called for the sacrifice of the time allotted. Instead of being two and a half years in the Academy, the cadets now ready for commissions had been in residence but one year and nine months, and the average age of the commission class was nineteen years nine months and seventeen days. Prince Ibrahim Hilmy, son of his Highness Ismail Pacha, who had now completed his course, joined in Sept. 1878, with the class now recommended for commissions, with whom he had carried out all his studies, drills, and exercises. He had at all times evinced punctuality and exactitude in the performance of his duties, strict obedience to orders, and great care and attention to his studies, displaying special aptitude for artillery subjects, and thoroughly qualifying himself for the efficient performance of the duties of an artillery officer. His Highness would leave the Military Academy with the respect and good wishes of the staff and cadets. Commissions were then awarded to 49 out of the 50 cadets forming the advanced class, the only exception being Prince Ibrahim, who, though not taking a commission, was called out with the rest, and was placed between Nos. 6 and 7 on the list. The number of marks gained was not given, but the awards were made in the following numerical order, Mr. Benson, No. 2, electing to serve in the Royal Artillery:—

For Royal Engineers.—M. Nathan, A. H. Cowie, H. K. Stothert, O. M. R. Thackwell, T. Stewart.

For Royal Artillery.—G. E. Benson, R. C. O. Stuart, N. W. H. du Boulay, G. S. Mellish, E. M. Perceval, H. S. Horne, F. D. V. Wing, T. E. Carte, E. T. Young, C. T. Head, C. C. Wiseman-Clarke, A. Cooper-Key, G. F. W. St. John, F. H. Crampton, E. Pollock, H. W. W. Barlow, W. R. W. James, D. E. Hoste, A. T. Warre, J. S. E. Le Quesne, M. M. Weeks, A. V. Briscoe, A. E. A. Butcher, A. L. Carroll, C. H. S. Vores, H. T. Hawkins, E. W. Blunt, A. L. Molesworth, W. L. Brook Smith, J. M. Stopford, W. H. B. Morris, R. W. E. Carnegy, J. M. Burt, C. H. Milward, F. A. L. Powell, C. D. King, G. W. Rickman, E. S. F. Walker, D'A. B. Preston, A. J. Baker, W. J. Rogers, W. M. T. Synge, W. E. Kerrick, W. H. C. Bolton.

Of the prizes nearly one-half fell to the share of Mr. Nathan, who took not only the Pollock Medal for proficiency, but also the regulation sword for exemplary conduct, and prizes for mathematics and mechanics, fortification and geometrical drawing, artillery, military history, and drills and exercises. Mr. Benson, senior cadet for the Royal Artillery, received for that distinction the Tombs Memorial Scholarship; and the other prizes were allotted as follows:—Mr. A. H. Cowie, landscape drawing; Mr. Stothert, military drawing and chemistry and physics; Mr. O. M. R. Thackwell, classics; Mr. C. D. King, riding: Mr. E. M. B. Newman, German; and Mr. S. J. d'Ostrozog, French. Gen. Walker expressed his satisfaction at having to present to the Duke of Cambridge so favourable a report of the day's proceedings, and announced that he had been commanded by his Royal Highness to express his high appreciation of the invaluable services rendered to the Academy by Sir John Adye during the five years of his Governorship. The cadets had in him a great example. In entering upon his military service, Sir John Adye probably possessed no more factitious aids to success than others, but his good soldier-like qualities had brought him well-earned honours. Every cadet could not expect to become Surveyor-General, like Sir John Adye, but every one might imitate the line of conduct which he had pursued throughout his career, and succeed, at least, in gaining the approval of a good conscience. To Prince Ibrahim he offered his congratulations upon the favourable reports of his progress, in the face of the difficulty attending the pursuit of study in a language not his own. He carried away with him the good wishes of all who had known him there, and he hoped also some pleasing recollections of the country in which he had received his military education. In conclusion, the Director-General impressed upon the cadets generally the importance of being earnest of purpose in small matters, and wishing them all the happiness that had attended his service for the past forty years, he left them this injunction from the Book of Books—"Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might." Afterwards some gymnastic feats were gone through, and the cadets were exercised at the riding school. In accordance with the "acceleration" scheme, the ordinary vacation is dispensed with, and the studies are continued without intermission. The 49 cadets who receive commissions alone quit the Academy, and the other classes will be moved up a step for the admission to the junior form of another batch of students who have just passed the qualifying examinations.

THE BRIGHTON VOLUNTEER REVIEW.

"Horse Guards, War Office, April 29, 1880.

"Sir,—In forwarding the accompanying report from General his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar on the Volunteer Review held at Brighton on March 29, I have much pleasure in bearing the most favourable testimony, from my personal observations, to the marked improvement that has taken place in this force during the last few years. The splendid physique and soldier-like bearing of upwards of 18,000 men who had assembled for this review were most conspicuous; the manœuvres of the several corps were effected with facility and precision, and the firing was delivered without hurry or confusion. I also remarked that the guns of the Artillery were particularly well served. This gratifying progress in their military duties reflects the highest credit upon officers and non-commissioned officers and men; on the former for the zeal and intelligence which have undoubtedly been shown in the instruction of the rank and file, and on the latter for the care and attention paid to their various drills, &c., during their leisure hours. I also avail myself of this opportunity to record my satisfaction at the orderly demeanour of the Volunteers while off duty. Released from the restraint of discipline in the ranks, each individual member appeared to be conscious that on his own good conduct rested the credit of his corps and the force generally; and I am happy to state that no single exception to this praiseworthy behaviour was brought to my notice. I have now only to state, in conclusion, that I fully concur in the mention made by his Serene Highness of the cheerful submission of all ranks to the severe hardship which most of the corps endured on that day; and I cannot, at the same time, refrain from expressing my entire conviction, resulting from a careful observation of the recent military display at Brighton, that the nation possesses in the Volunteer Force a substantial and trustworthy reserve for the defence of the country.—I am, Sir, yours, George.—The Secretary of State for War, War Office."

From the General commanding Southern District to the Adjutant-General of the Forces, Horse Guards, War Office:

"Portsmouth, April 21, 1880.—Sir,—I have the honour to forward for the information of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief the accompanying reports of the General officers commanding corps and divisions, and of the officers commanding the Artillery, which took part in the Volunteer review held at Brighton on Easter Monday, the 29th ult. I have every reason to be satisfied with the manner in which the 'general idea' was carried out. In the instructions issued to the Generals commanding the opposing forces, I endeavoured to impress upon commanders the importance I attached to rendering the day's proceedings as instructive as possible, and I desired that the greatest care should be taken in placing the outposts, and in explaining to the officers and men the object and plan of the attack and defence. I gave it to be understood that although when the signal-gun was fired the Generals commanding would be left unfettered to carry out their plans, I considered that any display of strategy or tactics should be looked upon as secondary to the careful and instructional handling of the brigades and corps. The relative strength of the attacking and defending forces had been so arranged that the latter had a preponderating advantage, so that Major-Gen. Radcliffe, who commanded the Brighton force, was instructed to keep his 2nd Division in reserve, and to carry out his plans of defence with one division only, until his position became too seriously threatened. I desire to bring most favourably to the notice of his Royal Highness the extraordinary punctuality which marked the proceedings throughout the whole day. The hours appointed for the assembly of the forces at their rendezvouz, and for their being in position, were observed to the minute; so that the time appointed for the commencement of the sham fight and of the march past was punctually observed. I noticed that the Volunteers moved well and steadily, and that they had very much improved in their order and discipline. As a rule they fired low and deliberately, and they were well in hand, and obedient to the orders they received. It is not to be expected that the officers, with so few opportunities of acquiring practical experience in manœuvring under fire in brigade could command their corps and companies without mistakes, nor is it to be wondered at if their men were on some occasions moved in too close order under a heavy direct or flanking fire of the enemy; nor if some confusion occurred when the opposing forces came into close contact. These were errors which, I feel convinced, could and would be speedily corrected were it possible to brigade Volunteer corps together more frequently, and accustom them to drill with larger bodies and with regular troops. The men would thus be made into soldiers as steady and well disciplined as those of the Line in a very short time, while their officers would readily gain the necessary practice and experience. The advance that has been made in their general appearance and efficiency since the Volunteers were last assembled for a review on an extended scale was most marked. There was but little talking or noise in the ranks. Far more attention is now paid to uniformity. A sense of the necessity of greater discipline has been imbibed. The movements were made with greater precision; and the "march past" was highly satisfactory. I wish to call particular attention to the very efficient manner in which the signallers of the 49th Middlesex performed their duty, affording much valuable aid to Major-General Radcliffe, who also received great assistance from the telephone, which was lent and worked on the occasion by Lieut.-Col. Whigham commanding, and the men of the 16th Lancers. Its practical use in the field was satisfactorily tested. On the attacking side, Major-Gen. Turner deserves the credit of securing the assistance of the Crusader captive balloon, which, under the skilful direction of Capt. Elsdale, R.E., afforded valuable aid in reconnoitring, while, at the same time, much practical experience was gained. The report of the officer in charge of the ballooning party is appended. I cannot omit mentioning the cheerful submission of all ranks to the severe hardships which most of the corps had to endure during a very long and tedious day's work. Some regiments paraded as early as two a.m., and could not have reached their homes before 12 at night. I noticed that there was great difference in the arrangements made for the food and comfort of the men in different corps. Some had been provided with an early hot breakfast before starting, while, by the forethought of their officers, arrangements had likewise been made for providing their men with refreshments at the rendezvous at Brighton. Other corps appear to have made no such arrangements, and the men depended solely on what they carried in their havresacks, or on the provisions which they could hastily snatch at the railway stations. Those corps which marched down to Brighton, I consider, deserve great credit, and, from all I could learn and observe, the conduct of all, both on the line of march and during the days they remained at Brighton, was most excellent. The railway arrangements were carried out under instructions from the Horse Guards, and his Royal Highness has already been pleased to express his satisfaction with the manner in which they were conducted."

GOOD-CONDUCT MEDALS.

We have received from the Admiralty Fleet Circular No. 12, defining the qualifications for which the character of "exemplary" should be awarded. Their Lordships state that they have received various representations from captains of her Majesty's ships relative to the difficulty they experience in awarding this character. The Admiralty do not see any sufficient reason for discontinuing the use of the word "exemplary" for the purpose of describing the conduct of men who, in addition to having earned the character of "very good," have so deported themselves as to be considered, both on account of their conduct and the manner in which they have performed their duties, as examples worthy of imitation. Their Lordships have, however, determined that for the future the grant of the good-conduct medal and gratuity shall no longer be conditional on the award of the character of exemplary, and that a continuous character of very good shall henceforth be considered as rendering a man eligible for medal and gratuity. The character of very good must therefore be awarded with greater care and discrimination than has often hitherto been the case. On a man being sentenced to punishment by court-martial, or summarily awarded corporal punishment; imprisonment, if by civil power, see Article 30, Addenda 1880; disrating or reduction to a lower rating or rank; deprivation of good-conduct medal or badge; confinement in cells, or reduction to below the privilege-leave list, his character will, under the accompanying regulations, be necessarily recorded below very good, and therefore the required continuity of very good for medal or gratuity purposes will always in such cases be broken. Ten years of continuous very good character will render a man eligible for a medal, and fifteen years of continuous very good character for a gratuity, provided in each case he has been recommended for the last three years, subject to the provisions of the amended Articles 676, 723, and 1,137 of the Queen's Regulations, 1879. To entitle a man to the medal:—(a.) He must have been recommended for it on his certificate for three consecutive years. (b.) He must be recommended for it by the captain under whom he is serving, when he becomes eligible and has fulfilled the required conditions of service. To entitle a man to the gratuity:—(a). He must have been awarded the medal, and have never forfeited it. (b.) He must have been recommended for it on his certificate for three last consecutive years. (c.) He must subsequently to his receiving the medal, and until pensioned, have always been awarded a character of "very good" or "exemplary." (d.) He must be recommended for it by the captain under whom he is serving when his pension is applied for. In order to carry out this arrangement, it will be necessary that the additional words "medal recommended," or "gratuity recommended," should be entered on the men's certificates accordingly, whenever the characters are required to be recorded on them; the additional words are also to be noted in the ledger, and in the service and conduct book. In noting recommendations for medals and gratuities on the certificates, it is to be understood that the fact of men being eligible by previous notations on their certificates does not make it imperative for captains to recommend them. Invariably very good conduct and the satisfactory manner in which their duty is performed are to be the only guides. Exemplary will, for medal and gratuity purposes, be equivalent to very good. No change is made in the Regulations, reserving to the Admiralty the right of dealing exceptionally with the cases of men who have distinguished themselves in action or otherwise, or of men who have 15 years of continuous very good character. The changes indicated above are applicable to the Coastguard and also to the Royal Marines ashore and afloat. Amended Articles 676, 723, and 1,137, which our space will not admit, are to be substituted for the present articles which are so numbered in the Queen's Regulations of 1879, and which are to be considered as cancelled when these rules come into operation, as is also clause 9 of Article 699. Time served by men who, after completing time for pension, re-engage under the provisions of Article 18 of the Addenda, 1880, will reckon for the medal and gratuity, but the award of the medal after the completion of such time will not count towards increase of pension. Temporary Provision.—Awards of character under the existing Regulations are to be made to June 30 next, inclusive, and no character of very good awarded between July 1, 1876, and that date is to be considered as valid for medal and gratuity purposes.

The Army.

Royal Horse Guards (Blue). Capt. FitzWilliam's appointment as A.D.C. to the Marquis of Ripon will give a step to the subalterns, so that Lieuts. Gascoigne and Wickham will both get their troops, no doubt within the next three or four months.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Brevet Major Stewart will shortly be brought on to the establishment again, on his vacating his Staff appointment at the Cape, filling one of the vacancies created by the appointment of Capts. Bellwood and Lucas to adjutancies of Yeomanry Cavalry. The second troop will be given to Lieut. Yatman.

4th Dragoon Guards. The regiment will be greatly regretted at York, where it has fully maintained its reputation, and is in a very efficient state, notwithstanding all the difficulties against which Col. Gunter and his officers have to contend, consequent on the present system of short service.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The regiment will leave Dublin on the 31st inst. for the Curragh. It is expected that the steps will be given in the regiment on Col. Nugent's retirement, Major Hozier succeeding to the command, Capt. Wallace obtaining the majority, and Lieut. James his troop.

3rd Hussars. Capt. Jervoise goes up for the forthcoming examination for entrance to the Staff College.

4th Hussars. Col. Montgomery Moore leaves the regiment, to the regret of all ranks. Notwithstanding his recent promotion—he was only gazetted in September last —Major Montague will, it is understood, succeed to the command, and promises to prove a most able successor. He certainly will be a popular one, and popularity goes a long way in making a good regiment. Capt. Grant goes up for the coming examination for entrance to the Staff College.

6th Dragoons. Capt. M'Kean is not to be seconded, as he will shortly lose his Staff appointment, on the return of Lieut.-Gen. Maude from India.

7th Hussars. Brevet Major M'Calmont will shortly be brought on to the establishment again, on return from service at the Cape.

9th Lancers. A troop has been vacant for some months past, and will now, no doubt, be filled, seeing that Lord William Beresford is again provided for on the Staff of the Viceroy of India.

11th Hussars. Brevet Major Rivett-Carnac leaves England the week after next, en route to India again, to take up his new duties as acting military secretary to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army.

12th Lancers. Lieut.-Col. Le Quesne will be placed upon half-pay from the 5th prox., on completing five years' service in command, Major Tait succeeding him in the lieutenant-colonelcy, Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Russell obtaining the majority. Lieut. Archdale will then be promoted to his troop.

13th Hussars. Major and Brevet Col. Sir Baker Russell, K.C.M.G., C.B., the Standard says, proceeds to Lucknow early next troop season, to join the 13th Hussars, his name being at the same time brought to the notice of the military authorities in India for employment on the Staff, in some position of trust and responsibility. Lieut. and Adjt. Christie obtains the troop vacant by the transfer of Capt. Maunsell to the Pay Department.

14th Hussars. Capt. the Hon. H. G. Gough has been noted for attendance at the forthcoming examination of candidates for admission to the Staff College. Lieut.-Col. J. H. Todd, late of the regiment, one of the Exons of her Majesty's Yeomen of the Guard, died on the 9th inst., in his 64th year. The deceased served with the regiment throughout the campaign of 1838-39 in Afghanistan, including the siege and capture of Ghuznee (medal). Also throughout the Punjab campaign of 1848-49, including the action of Ramnuggur, passage of the Chenab, battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat (medal with two clasps). Served as brigade-major of Cavalry with the Persian expedition of 1857 (medal with clasp). Also as brigade-major to the 2nd Brig. of the Central Indian Field Force under Sir Hugh Rose in 1858, and was present at the siege and capture of Rahutghur, relief of Saugor, capture of Garrakota, forcing the Muddenpore Pass, siege and capture of Jhansi, battles of Betwa with Koonch, and affairs during the advance on Calpee and action of Golowlie; also the action of Morar, recapture of Gwalior, and pursuit with action of Jowra Alipore; served as assist.-adjt.-gen. to the Gwalior Division in pursuit of the rebels, and at the action of Ranode, also present at the capture of the fort of Powrie (five times mentioned in despatches, brevets of major and lieut.-col., medal with clasp). He joined the Army, April 28, 1837; became lieut., June 14, 1839; capt., Nov. 27, 1848; brevet major, July 28, 1858; brevet lieut.-col., Dec. 20, 1859; exchanged to half-pay as capt., Feb. 20, 1863; was appointed in the following year to the Yeomen of the Guard, and subsequently sold his commission.

15th Hussars. The regiment is looking forward to its return home next winter from India, and will land in England in a high state of efficiency, the excellent system inaugurated by Sir Frederick FitzWygram during his tenure of command having had the effect of maintaining the old reputation of the regiment, which has always held a high place among the light-cavalry corps.

17th Lancers. Qrmr. Shawe, who has exchanged to the regiment from the 5th Lancers, was promoted to the 5th in Feb., 1871, from qrmr.-serjt.

21st Hussars. Major Kaye will succeed Lieut.-Col. Wake in command, Capt. Taylor becoming Major.

B Baty. A Brig. R.H.A. (Brevet Col. H. J. F. Hickes) will leave Dublin for the Curragh on the 31st inst.

I Baty. 2nd Brig. (Major Ward) has been ordered to leave Athlone for the Curragh on Tuesday next.

Lieut. C. V. B. Kuper, 2nd Brig., has passed the lower standard in Hindostanee.

Major-Gen. G. G. Pearse (late Madras), in handing over command of the Artillery of the Mysore Division, on promotion to the rank of major-gen., published the following valedictory address:—"Regimental after-order, by Col. G. G. Pearse, R.H.A., commanding. Bangalore, April 23, 1880.—The intimation of Col. Pearse's promotion to major-gen. having been published to-day in Division Orders, he hands over the command of the R.A.M.D. to Major Gillies, the next senior officer. He bids a kindly farewell to officers and men. The short time of his command has been marked by an absence of anything exciting—which signifies that peace, good-will, and good-behaviour have reigned. To Capt. Brough, his adjutant, be tenders his best thanks for his unflagging zeal, and for his continued and arduous application to his work. Surg.-Major J. Balfour Cockburn has been the most attentive and zealous of medical officers. His attention to his work is perfect. Rdgmr. J. Abbot has always shown that he has his heart in his work, to which he has applied himself diligently. Lieut.-Col. J. C. Tayler, commanding the field batteries, is a good officer, who has always had his charge well in hand. Trusting that all, like himself, may soon be promoted, he says farewell.—By order (signed), J. F. Brough, capt., R.H.A., adjt."

Lieut. J. M. S. Brunker has been a temporary additional Comy. of Ordnance, 3rd Class, from the date on which he joined the Ordnance Field Park at Lundi Kotal, vice Capt. J. A. S. M. Davis.

K Baty. 2nd Brig. (Major J. T. Leishman) will leave Kilkenny for the Curragh on Monday.

Major G. W. C. Rothe, 7th Brig., has been appointed to the Depôt Baty. 4th Brig. at Leith Fort, vice Major McLaughlin, whose period of service therein has expired.

"A Gunner" writes:—"We are all curious to know why the rules of the Service are so constantly set aside in the Royal Regiment of Artillery. The Deputy-Adjutant-General and Inspector-General should be relieved from their appointments, but both are allowed to retain them, pending the very uncertain return of Gen. Arbuthnot from Cabul to take the former's place, when he, in his turn, succeeds Gen. Philpotts. Gen. Arbuthnot, no doubt, is a first-rate man for the place; but there are others quite as good, and it is unfair to the regiment that the two above-mentioned officers should stop the way, to their own great advantage, for a period which may be prolonged to an indefinite time. No doubt, Mr. Childers will have something to say to such abuses."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major and Brevet Col. R. Harrison, C.B., proceeded to Windsor last week, and had the honour of being included in the Royal dinner-party on Friday, leaving the Castle on Saturday.

Referring to the death of Gen. Ballard, of whom we have already given a notice, a Bombay paper says:—"Gen. Ballard was greatly respected in the Bombay Mint, where he will not be forgotten for many years. On receipt of the melancholy news, Col. White, the Mint Master, issued the following order:—'It is with deep regret that the Mint Master has to inform all members of the Mint establishment of the sudden death of Gen. Ballard. Great as a soldier and administrator, he was greater still in the eyes of all who knew him as a noble, disinterested, unselfish man, and the Mint Master is sure that his memory will be cherished by all who worked with him during the many years he was in charge of this Mint.' The Mint was closed at two o'clock in respect to his memory. As a man Gen. Ballard cannot be spoken too highly of; indifferent himself to ease and comfort, he was ever thoughtful of and considerate to the wants and claims of others. In his kindness and charity he was princely, in his ordinary life most unselfish. He was loved by all who knew him well, and amongst his friends his death will cause a gap that will not readily be filled up. He was a gallant soldier and a true gentleman."

The Right Hon. Hugh C. E. Childers, M.P., having, on his acceptance of the office of Secretary for War, ceased to be Chairman of the Board of Advice of the Colony of Victoria, the Colonial Government requested Col. Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., formerly a Minister of the Colony, to hold the Chairmanship provisionally, pending the appointment of an Agent-General. At the special request of the new Viceroy, Sir Andrew Clarke returned to India with his Excellency last week. The Government of Victoria have consequently appointed Col. Pasley, C.B., Director of Naval Works, and formerly a Minister of the Colony, to be temporarily Chairman of the Board.

Grenadier Guards. Col. Burnaby, M.P., vacates command of the regiment in the course of a few days, after a service extending over 35 years, and is to be succeeded in the lieutenant-colonelcy by Col. Napier Sturt, now commanding the 2nd Batn., who is in turn succeeded by Col. Davies, promoted from the 1st Batn.

Scots Guards. Lieut. Drummond has arrived home from Hong Kong, on vacating his appointment as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. Donovan, commanding at that station.

1st, or Royal Scots. Brevet Lieut.-Col. White, who has lately done good service at Cyprus in a civil capacity, will succeed to the command of the 1st Batn., vice Col. MccGwire.

2nd Queen's. Major Waring's retirement gives no promotion, as he has been supernumerary since he vacated his staff appointment in India.

4th King's Own. Major Middleton and Lieuts. Little and Baumann, 2nd Batn., arrived home from Natal in H.M.S. Orontes. Brevet Major Stehelin is retiring.

11th Regiment. Major Birch, Capt. Watson, and Lieut. Stawell obtain the steps in succession to Lieut.-Col. M'Causland, retired on pension.

21st Fusiliers. Capt. Thorburn, 2nd Batn., has arrived home from the Cape in H.M.S. Orontes. Lieut. Hutchins, 1st Batn., a probationer, wing-officer 25th Madras N.I., is about to be admitted to the Madras S.C., from March 5, 1879.

22nd Regiment. Capt. Matterson, 1st Batn., has been appointed adjutant of the 26th Middlesex Volunteers. Capt. Cunningham, 1st Batn., acting adjutant of the Leitrim Militia, has rejoined head-quarters at the Curragh, having been relieved by Capt. Ferguson, 87th Fusiliers.

24th Regiment. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Dunbar is to be promoted lieut.-col., vice Col. Glyn, C.B., retired—Capt. Brander becoming major, and Lieut. Browne, V.C., captain. Major Bromhead, V.C., 2nd Batn., proceeded to Windsor Castle on Monday, and had the honour of being included in her Majesty's dinner-party in the evening. An officer writing from the fatal field of Isandlwana, in March last, says:—"I saw the place Pope, of the 24th, was buried in. Some fellows had scratched his name on the flat part of a meat scale and stuck it on the grave. I will put up a board in the shape of a cross there. His people would like to know."

25th Regiment. A correspondent writes to the Lahore paper:—"By an editorial note in your issue of the 21st ult., regarding the working of the Transport Department in the Kurum Valley, an injustice, to my thinking, is done to Major Terry, 25th Regt., as to the cause of his rejoining his regiment. You say this was the upshot of the friction in the Transport Department itself, and with other departments as well. Now, the fact is that Major Terry rejoined his regiment because he received a telegram from his colonel, who was going home sick, communicating this, and as the regiment had just started for field-service, command of it was obviously far preferable to being cooped up in the Kurum, or at distasteful work. So Major Terry thought at least, and it was this which was the cause of his rejoining."

26th Cameronians. Major Hale is about to be retired.

28th Regiment will proceed by rail from Fermoy to the Curragh on Tuesday.

32nd Light Infantry. Lieuts. Turnbull and Clarke have been offered companies, in the 16th and 98th Regiments, respectively. They have declined to accept the offer, preferring to await their steps in their own regiment, in which they have served for over fourteen years.

33rd Regiment. Lieut. Dunnington-Jefferson obtains Capt. Douglas's company.

41st Regiment. Lieut. Rudman obtains the company vacant by the retirement of Capt. Hughes.

43rd Light Infantry. Mr. Onslow has given notice that he will on an early date ask in Parliament "whether any information has recently been received at the Colonial Office with regard to the graves of soldiers belonging to the 43rd and 68th Regiments buried in New Zealand."

44th Regiment. Lieut. Bell, a probationer for the Indian S.C., has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

47th Regiment. Capt. W. S. Dent, late of the regiment, died at Short Flatt Tower, Northumberland, on the 18th inst., aged 39 years.

54th Regiment. We learn from India that Capt. Maxwell has been appointed adjt. of the Behar Mounted Rifles.

60th Rifles. Col. Hinxman completes his five year ' in command of the 4th Batn. in India, on the 5th prox., when he will be placed upon half-pay. Major Watson is about to be seconded, on receiving a Hythe appointment, with effect from the 9th prox.

62nd Regiment. Lieut. Beatson has been appointed interpreter, vice Lieut. Denniss, promoted.

63rd Regiment. Brevet Major Borradaile is about to retire, under circumstances which should recommend his case to the favourable consideration of the authorities. He came home some time ago in a very bad state of health, and though now convalescent, his constitution is quite shattered by continuous service in India, and he laid for some time almost between life and death. Lieut. Fagan, a probationer, officiating squadron-officer, 14th Bengal Lancers, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., with effect from Feb. 28, 1879. Lieut. Angelo, a candidate for the Indian S.C., has been appointed to the 9th Bengal Cavalry, on probation.

64th Regiment. The regiment will leave Templemore for the Curragh on Thursday next. Capt. Walker, candidate for admission to the Pay Department, attached to the pay office of the 66th Brigade Depôt, has been ordered from Naas to London, to complete his term of probation at the War Office. Capt. J. Sears, Qrmr. on the Half-Pay List, died in Limerick on the 11th inst. The deceased served with the 39th Regiment, in which he rose to the rank of Lieut., during the campaign against the Rajah of Coorg in 1834; the operations against Kurnool in 1839, and at the battle of Maharajpore on Dec. 29, 1843 (medal); was present with the 64th at the landing in Persia, Dec. 7, 1856; at the storming and capture of Reshire, and bombardment and surrender of Bushire (medal). He was appointed to a Qrmrship. Oct. 1, 1847, and retired on half-pay, Dec. 29, 1859.

68TH REGIMENT. Mr. Onslow has given notice that he will on an early date ask in Parliament "whether any information has recently been received at the Colonial Office with regard to the graves of soldiers belonging to the 43rd and 68th Regiments buried in New Zealand."

70TH REGIMENT. Lieut. Pearse is ordered to join the regimental depôt.

MILITIA.

The regiment was disbanded on Saturday, 15th inst. The officers have presented their old Adjt., Major Josselyn, 96th Regt, with a handsome silver inkstand, of the shape of the bugle, their regimental badge, on his retirement from the Service, on appointment as Chief Constable of Bedfordshire.

ROYAL PEMBROKE ARTILLERY. The annual inspection was held last week at Haverfordwest by Col. Gronow Davis, V.C., R.A. The regiment paraded on the drill-field at 9.30 a.m., the parade-state showing a total present of 355 of all ranks, under command of Col. Owen; the other officers were Major Graham, Hon. Lieut.-Col. Douglas-Willan, Hon. Major Cooper, Capt. W. Summers, Lieut. Levett, 2nd Lieuts. Cope, Summers, Wayet, and Thomas; Surg.-Major Brown, and Capt. and Adjt. Lavie, R.A. Capt. Edwardes was absent on the sick-list, and Lieut. Thomas absent on leave. After a minute inspection of arms, accoutrements, and kits, the men were marched to the Castle Square, and from thence to Portfield, for review by the inspecting officer. Later in the day detachments from each battery were put through repository drill, consisting of heavy-gun drill, mounting and dismounting ordnance, &c. Previous to the men being dismissed, Col. THE VOLUNTEERS.

3RD MIDDLESEX ARTILLERY. The Brigade gave over on Tuesday the quarters at Garrison Point, Sheerness, which they had occupied since Friday last, and returned to London. In the four days they have been at the Isle of Sheppey, guards have been regularly mounted day and night, the duties commencing soon after reveille each morning at half-past five, and continuing throughout the day. The standing orders, apart from the ordinary parades, gun and drill-practice, &c., show that the work carried out is, in all respects, the same that is exacted from regular troops. All the arrangements worked well, the Government rations were well cooked and plentiful, there was little, if any, illness, and all seemed to vie with each other in carrying out the allotted duties in the most satisfactory manner.

22ND MIDDLESEX (WESTMINSTER) RIFLES. On the invitation of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster, the regiment paid their annual visit to Cliveden on Monday, leaving by special train from Paddington at half-past nine and arriving at Taplow an hour later. It was seven o'clock before the battalion left Cliveden for the three miles' march to Taplow, where the special train was waiting to take it up. The regiment arrived at Paddington at nine o'clock, and was dismissed.

It is intended to form a camp of instruction at Chatham during the present summer, the site selected being at the foot of Chatham Lines, near the St. Mary's casemated barracks, the ground of the neighbourhood of which is well adapted for the purpose.

The Indian Army.

[The Editor will be glad to receive Contributions from time to time from Officers of Native Regiments who may desire to render this column interesting to friends in England.]

9TH BENGAL CAVALRY. Col. H. L. Campbell, commandant, has been granted leave to England for two years, on medical certificate.

17TH BENGAL CAVALRY. Lieut. G. F. Willes, from the 16th Bengal Cavalry, has been appointed officiating squadron-officer.

5TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut.-Col. R. A. C. Hunt, wing-commander, has been appointed second-in-command; and Major A. Poole, wing-officer, second-in-command, in succession to Col. Des Vœux, retired.

27TH BENGAL N.I. Lieut. E. K. E. Spence, from the 1st Bengal N.I., has been appointed officiating wing-officer, on probation.

28TH BENGAL N.I. The following General Order has been issued, made by the Commander-in-Chief in India, dated Head-quarters, Simla, April 12, 1880:—"At a general court-martial, assembled at Sherpur, Cabul, on Friday, March 12, 1880, Major Henry Herbert Rankin, General List, Infantry, attached to the 28th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry, was arraigned on the following charge:—Having at Sherpur, Cabul, on March 2, 1880, been drunk when on duty, when field-officer of the day, in the 1st Brigade, 1st Division, Cabul Field Force. The Court find that the prisoner, Major Henry Herbert Rankin, General List, Infantry, attached to the 28th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry, is guilty of the charge. The Court sentence the prisoner, Major Henry Herbert Rankin, General List, Infantry, attached to the 28th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry, to dismissal from her Majesty's Service. (Signed), T. D. BAKER, Brigdr.-Gen., president. Approved and confirmed (signed), FRED. P. HAINES, Gen., Commander-in-Chief in India. Simla, April 1, 1880. The name of Major Rankin will be struck off the List from the date on which this order may be communicated to him. A report of the said date is to be made to the Adjt.-Gen."

CORPS OF GUIDES. His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council has been pleased to admit Sowar Zaidulla (Queen's Own) Corps of Guides, Punjab Frontier Force, to the 3rd Class of the Order of Merit, for conspicuous gallantry in action at Cabul, on Dec. 13, 1879.

HYDERABAD CONTINGENT. We learn that the 3rd Cavalry, at Mominabad, ordered to the frontier, are still "waiting orders," and it was not known up to the 14th inst. what will be the result. Why should the wing of the 4th Cavalry be sent with "all speed" to relieve the 3rd Cavalry is a query to be solved. The 5th Infantry is still in camp at Akola, and it is expected they will return to Hingoli shortly.

3RD SIKH INFANTRY. Lieut. E. J. N. Fasken, wing-officer and qrmr., has been granted leave to England for 1 year and 182 days, on medical certificate.

CENTRAL INDIA HORSE. Lieut. E. D. H. Daly has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

1ST MADRAS LIGHT CAVALRY. We have to announce the death of the youngest officer in the Army who wore the Indian medal, Capt. A. N. Chick. Capt. Chick was last year removed from the corps, but when it was ordered to proceed to the Indus, the Commander-in-Chief reappointed him to the regiment; but he seems, however, to have been too ill to march out with it. He was a student at the Martiniere College when the Mutiny broke out, and joined in the defence of Lucknow. He formerly belonged to the 76th Regt.

22ND MADRAS N.I. Lieut.-Col. W. A. Cheke, commandant, died suddenly from heart-disease while at breakfast at Rangoon last month. The deceased entered the Service in 1855, was appointed second-in-command of his regiment about two years ago, and commandant the day before his death. He is said to have been one of the most popular officers in the province.

POONA HORSE. The death is announced at Quettah, of pneumonia, of Major R. G. T. Stevenson, second-in-command. The deceased officer served at the assault and capture of Kotah, and in the pursuit of Tantia Topee in 1858-9 (medal and clasp). He joined the Army, June 20, 1855; became lieut., Nov. 22, 1857; capt., Dec. 6, 1862; and major, Nov. 17, 1873.

3RD SIND HORSE. A correspondent writes:—"In your issue of the 15th inst., I find a commendatory notice of the services performed by the cavalry during the Afghan campaigns. In doing so you have omitted the cavalry action at Khushk-i-Nakhud, when, on Feb. 6, 1878, a force under the command of Col. Malcolmson, C.B., and composed of the 3rd Sind Horse and a company of the 2nd Beloochis, were engaged with 2,000 Zemindawar fanatics. The cavalry, numbering about 140 sabres, charged the enemy and utterly routed them, thus saving the camp. The enemy suffered a loss of 200 killed and wounded, so I think you will agree with me that the 3rd Sind Horse deserve to have their services recorded in a list of good services performed by their branch of the Service."

19TH BOMBAY N.I. Major R. J. Le P. Trench, wing-officer, has been appointed wing-commander, and Lieut. H. Melville, Bombay S.C., wing-officer, in succession to Major Waudby, killed in action.

27TH BOMBAY N.I. Lieut. A. C. Yate has been confirmed in his appointment as qrmr.

The threatening aspect of affairs between Russia and China, says the Morning Post, has induced the German Emperor to give orders for the strengthening and concentrating the German squadron in Eastern waters, in order that German interests may be protected.

Notice is given in the Gazette that preparations are now being made for the intended distribution of the slave and tonnage bounties awarded for 18 slaves and the slave-dhow Mahoulli, captured on Nov. 26 and Dec. 6, 1878, by her Majesty's ship Vestal.

The Daily News says:—"It is understood that the War Office authorities are about to make an extensive change in the Commissariat, Ordnance, and Medical Department of the Army relative to subordinate appointments, which are at present held by barrack-serjeants and civilian storekeepers, and that these duties will in future be performed by warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the Army Service and Army Hospital Corps. It has been found by experiment that this is a great improvement on the existing system, and has also the merit of being much cheaper. It is also rumoured that instructions will shortly be issued from the Horse Guards for the discharge of all soldiers over 21 years' service, as it would appear that great discontent has been caused in the junior non-commissioned ranks by the retention of the seniors for long periods after their services should have been dispensed with."

INDIA.

It is believed, says the Bombay Gazette, that the members of the Indian Army Commission have made a most sensible suggestion as to the conveyance of troops to and from England to India in the ordinary course of relief. If the home authorities agree to it, it will involve the total abolition of the troop-ship service. The proposal is to enter into contracts with the large steam companies plying between England and the principal Indian ports for a term of years to convey the troops at a fixed rate per head to the nearest port to the locality in which the troops are to be quartered. Thus relief intended for the Madras Presidency would be landed at Madras, those for Burmah at Rangoon, and troops intended for Sind, Candahar, and the Punjab at Kurrachee. The average cost per soldier by her Majesty's troop-ships is about £20, and it is pretty certain that private companies would do the same work at a considerably cheaper rate. The present system of landing all troops at Bombay, hurrying them through the city of Deolalee, and then dispatching them by railway to all parts of India is necessarily an expensive, and, we might add, an absurd one. It is notorious that conveyance by water is infinitely cheaper than transport by railway, and as the railway and land journeys would, by the adoption of this proposal, be considerably shortened, it is obvious there must be a proportionately large saving of expenditure. Even if the first part of the Commissioners' recommendations—namely, the abandonment of the present troop-ship service—be not adopted, it would seem to be a very sensible arrangement, if the reliefs and drafts for India could be so dispatched that only those intended for Sind, the Punjab, and Baluchistan could be sent by special steamers to Kurrachee, and those for Burmah and Madras direct to the most convenient ports in those parts of the country. There can be no reason why the troops for Bengal and the North-West Provinces and Central Provinces should be first sent out, and those intended for other parts of India dispatched in batches with special reference to the places to which they are intended to be forwarded. The abandonment of her Majesty's troopships as a medium of transport will, of course, be very strongly resisted by the Admiralty, for the result would throw upon their hands a number of officers and men now employed on these troop-ships who will have to be provided for or placed upon half-pay, and the abolition of what is considered a very popular service would naturally cause a good deal of heartburning and discontent in the Royal Navy.

With reference to the question of abolishing some of the Commissariat offices, with a view to economise the expenditure of the department, orders have been issued to do away with the Benares and Jullundur offices as independent executive charges from June 1. Benares and Jullundur will remain in future as outposts of the Allahabad and Umballa Commissariat offices respectively. These arrangements, it is believed, will effect a present saving of about 4,000 rs. a year.

The Bombay Army head-quarters, including the offices of the adjutant-general, quartermaster-general, and judge-advocate-general, were to be established at Mahableshwur on May 4.

The sections of the Government of India Act III. of 1880, authorising the levying of taxes in military cantonments, have been made applicable to all the cantonments in the Presidency of Bombay, under the Bombay Cantonments Act of 1867.

The grant of the Indian medal of 1854, with clasp, inscribed "Perak, 1875-76," in the case of the troops which proceeded from India, is to be limited to the period between Nov. 27, 1875, and March 20, 1876. The Commander-in-Chief in India has been requested to adopt early measures for the submission of rolls of the officers and soldiers of corps who are entitled to these decorations.

The Times of India says:—"A paragraph has been going the round of the Press to the effect that from next cold season all the troop-ships will go to and from Kurrachee, and no longer, as at present, to and from Bombay. We are, however, able to state that this statement is grossly inaccurate. There is no intention whatever of sending all the troop-ships to Kurrachee in future, but we believe it has been arranged by the authorities at home to have the drafts for Sind and the Punjab collected and sent in one vessel to Kurrachee direct."

The formation of the new Guide Corps has been abandoned for the present from financial considerations.

The Madras Athenæum hears that it is proposed to establish recruiting depôts for the supply of recruits to the Native Army of the Madras Presidency. We do not think that the system of general recruiting depôts is a good one, for the officers of the depôts, having no subsequent interest in the recruits, are apt to prefer quantity to quality, and are not very particular about the sort of men they enlist. It is preferable to allow regiments to recruit for themselves, and recruits for regiments on field service in Afghanistan might be trained at the existing Native Infantry Depôt at Palaveram.

The Horse Guards, it is stated, have protested against the local rank of lieutenant-general being conferred on Gen. Roberts without sanction from home, in contravention of orders to the effect that such local rank is only given after royal sanction and approval.

Capt. W. E. Gowan, Bengal Infantry, has been appointed a paid attaché to the Intelligence Branch of the Quartermaster-General's Department in India, from Feb. 8 last.

Brigdr.-Gen. Baker, C.B., has been suffering at Cabul from an attack of fever.

Col. E. Tyrwhitt, Bengal S.C., is permitted to retire from the Service, from April 15.

The names of the following officers have been placed on the Indian Gradation List as specified, in consequence of the death of Lieut.-Gen. A. Boyd, Bengal S.C., on Jan. 24, 1880:—Major-Gen. G. A. Fisher, Bengal S.C., on the list of lieutenant-generals; Col. D. Boyd, Bombay S.C., on the list of major-generals; Major E. W. Trevor, Bombay S.C., on the list of lieutenant-colonels.

Lieut.-Col. H. M. Nepeau, Madras S.C., is about to retire on a pension of £191 12s.

ERRATUM.—By a slip of the pen, the word "scuttles" was written for the word "scuppers," in our remarks on the Atalanta last week. There were some comments in the issue of the week before on the illustration in the Graphic of the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh to the U.S. frigate Constellation, in which the writer, deceived by the resemblances, fell into the error of supposing that a gentleman in a pot-hat and ulster was intended for the Royal Admiral, whereas the Duke was represented in full dress, cocked hat and all; but we must say the likeness ceased with the correct reproduction of the uniform.

Owing to a great press of matter, we are compelled to leave over a number of letters in type.

The NAVAL AND MILITARY STATIONS are published by the ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE on the first Saturday in each month.

Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1880.

THE tone of the official reports on the late Volunteer Review affords an agreeable contrast to the dry and caustic censures which were so freely applied to former displays, and which at one time, indeed, threatened the Volunteer movement itself with extinction. It would be impossible for any such organisation as that which the Volunteers once lived under to endure under a constant application of official contumely, and it is to the lasting credit of men like Lord Elcho, Lord Bury, Lord Ranelagh, and many others that, having faith in the sterling merit of the materials which they had done so much to form into living organisms, they struggled manfully on, in spite of the cold blast of professional discouragement from the Horse Guards, which has now been changed for the balmy breath of favour and affection. But the change is not without justification. The Duke of Cambridge can now write with something like enthusiasm of the "facility and precision" of manœuvres which were before but occasions for confusion and disorder, and of the qualities of the firing, which was formerly the blazing-away of promiscuous crowds of riflemen. His Royal Highness notes with admiration the "splendid physique and soldierlike bearing of upwards of 18,000 men," which is about three times the strength of the force which Sir Thomas Steele squeezed out of the Aldershot Division for the inspection of the Queen; and the Royal enthusiasm extends even to the service of the guns of the Volunteer Artillery. All this is most gratifying, and will be most particularly grateful to the Volunteers all over the kingdom. They will feel that they have won their moral Waterloo; they have won it by perseverance, and they deserve their reward. But it must be confessed that they have been greatly supported and assisted, first, by popular goodwill and recognition; and secondly, by the fostering care of the very military authorities who sat on them so heavily in the cradle, but who assumed the functions of nursing-mother with assiduity and unction, as soon as they recognised the native vigour and indomitable energies of the immortal infant. The training of the Volunteers, conducted at first by old serjeants and non-commissioned officers, aided by a few officers of the Regular Army, has by degrees been carried on under the supervision of professional soldiers; and as the State relaxed its purse-strings, and let out the nourishing streams of gold on the soil, crops of well-drilled, steady battalions of citizen soldiers responded to the expectations of the State, and justified the predictions of the early cultivators of the crop. It would be invidious to inquire how far the Volunteer movement has caused the deterioration of the materials for the Regular Army which is attributed to it by some, but which is, we believe, greatly exaggerated. What the country has paid for, it has got,—the full value of its money; and has, moreover, secured what is worth many millions, indeed, in the creation of a splendid body of marksmen, imbued with military instincts, and in some measure trained as soldiers for the field; and in the diffusion through a "nation of shopkeepers" of military aptitudes, and a proper appreciation of martial virtues and soldierly duties.

Her Majesty's birthday will be kept on Saturday next.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Monday, the 31st inst., at two o'clock. It is the Queen's pleasure that presentations to his Royal Highness at this levée shall be considered as equivalent to presentations to her Majesty.

The reports as to the pending reduction of the Army Estimates—by, it is said, two millions—must be considered premature, for, as yet, Mr. Childers has not had time to shake down into office, and it is scarcely likely that he will suggest reductions before he has had an opportunity afforded him of looking carefully into matters, and seeing how money is being spent.

We understand that the case of Captain F. W. Butler, 9th Regiment, still remains undecided, and notwithstanding the valuable nature of the services performed by this officer, the Indian Authorities systematically ignore him and, place a deaf ear to all his entreaties to be recouped the expenses to which he was put. Be the merits of the case what they may, it must be seen that this is a very unsatisfactory state of affairs, and when Lord Lytton arrives in England we shall hope to find steps taken to set the matter right, for at present it almost seems as though there has been a miscarriage of justice, for no complaints are made, so far as we can learn, as to the manner in which Captain Butler carried out the duty entrusted to him.

The retirement of Surgeon-General C. A. Gordon, M.D., C.B., will be announced in an early gazette under the age-clause. Dr. Gordon's retirement will be regretted throughout his department, in which he has always commanded the respect of subordinates. He has striven at all times to work the present system harmoniously, and his administration of his department lately in Madras stamped him as a man of exceptional ability, calling forth, as it did, the approval of both Sir F. Haines and Sir N. Chamberlain, as well as of all officers who served with and under him. An officer of Dr. Gordon's experience and attainments can ill be spared.

Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley will enter upon his duties as Quartermaster-General of the Army on July 1, on which date Sir Daniel Lysons, it is arranged, shall relieve Sir Thomas Steele at Aldershot. General Lysons has rented Aldershot Park, about a mile from the camp, which he will occupy until such time as the official residence about to be erected for the officer in command of the Division is ready.

General Sir Neville Chamberlain continues, we are sorry to hear, in a very indifferent state of health, but he has decided to hold on to his command of the Madras Army, and there seems every prospect of his remaining in India until he has completed his term of service, which does not expire until early next year.

Sir Evelyn Wood will arrive in England in a few weeks' time from the Cape, when he will resume command of the Chatham District; Colonel W. Earle, C.S.I., half-pay, late Grenadier Guards, officiating Brigadier at Chatham, then relieving Major-General the Hon. R. Monck, in command at Shorncliffe.

We have reason to believe that the War Office contemplate increasing by nine the number of General officers on the fixed establishment of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, in accordance with the recommendations of the Royal Commission, presided over by Lord Penzance. This will entail no expense on the country, and opportunity will be afforded of absorbing still further the number of Colonels and Lieutenant-Colonels for whom no employment can be found, at the same time creating vacancies in commands for those regimental Colonels, who, promoted since October 1, 1877, and still unemployed, have not five years to serve in that rank before being placed on a reserved list.

Colonels F. W. Ord and C. Hardy, Royal Artillery, have, we understand, applied for two of the vacant pensions now at the disposal of the Authorities. A third pension is available by the death of Major-General Symons, Royal Artillery.

The reduction of a brigade of Royal Horse Artillery is under the consideration of the War Office. Should this be decided on—consequent on a projected increase of the mountain batteries—we believe the head-quarters of a brigade will be withdrawn from Ireland.

We regret to learn that Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon J. Tatam, who came home some time ago invalided from Madras, continues in a very bad state of health; and unless a change for the better takes place, another vacancy may be expected to take place in the administrative ranks of the Veterinary Department, for at present Mr. Tatam is quite unfit to take another tour of service abroad.

Two Brigade commands on the Bengal Establishment are about to fall vacant by the return to England of Major-Generals H. R. Browne and J. Ross, C.B., who complete their five years in the appointments at the end of next month. A third Brigade will have to be filled shortly, Brigadier-General Sir C. C. G. Ross, K.C.B., completing his time on July 10.

We learn from Maritzburg that the commission (Brevet Major J. Alleyne, R.A., president, Mr. Rudolph, Landdrost of Utrecht, and Lieutenant R. P. Littledale, R.E., member), appointed by Sir Garnet Wolseley for the final settlement of all disputes, and for the demarcation of the boundary between the Transvaal territory and the Swazi country, having completed its work, has returned to Natal. There was no foundation for the report which went the round of the local papers that one, if not all the members of the Commission, had been murdered by the Swazis.

A correspondent writes:—"It may not be generally known that the apathy which characterises many officers commanding Militia regiments is, in numerous cases, the cause of second battalions to their regiments not being raised, and of additional companies or batteries not being applied for." This seems to us a subject well worthy of the consideration of the new Secretary of State for War.

It seems from recent appointments that the well-meaning Circular, issued a year ago from the office of the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Artillery at the Horse Guards, calling on commanding officers of brigades to recommend officers for the depôt batteries, was never intended to be acted upon. It would thus appear that these appointments, some seventy in number, are still regarded as snug berths for those officers possessing interest in influential quarters.

It is reported that owing to the detention in India of Brigadier-General Arbuthnot, C.B., R.A., till the autumn, it is by no means certain that the present popular Deputy-Adjutant-General of Artillery will succeed to the Inspector-Generalship as previously arranged.

Colonel R. C. Stewart, half-pay, late 2nd Foot, has arranged to leave England during the first week in the ensuing month for India, to assume the brigade command in Madras, for which he has lately been selected, from the command of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley.

Colonel F. C. Trevor, Royal (late Madras) Artillery, has been appointed to succeed Colonel A. Brendon, R.A., as Inspector of the Auxiliary Artillery in the Dover District, Colonel R. Mackenzie, R.A., succeeding Colonel N. O. S. Turner, C.B., at Portsmouth, promoted to Major-General, and Lieutenant-Colonel J. W. Collington, R.A., taking the place of Colonel C. R. Hill, at York.

There is not much to report this week from Afghanistan. Sir D. Stewart reports all quiet in Logar and Kohistan. The Ghilzai Chiefs lately in conference at Tezin have arrived at Cabul. Sir F. Roberts, whose force was at Hissarak on the 18th inst., is reported to have destroyed Padshah Khan Ghilzai's forts. On the 19th, about 2,000 Safis, making a demonstration at Besud, were successfully cut off by a force sent from Jellalabad, with a loss to the enemy of 50 killed, the British only losing 10 men wounded. Mirak Shah who had been governor of Hariob, being under influence of Padshah Khan, has been removed.

Mr. Trevelyan, on an early day, will move that the organisation of the higher ranks of the Army, embodied in the Royal Warrant of 1877, was contrary to the interests of the officers and a burden to the Exchequer, and that the Active List of Generals ought to be reduced in number to a point which should be adequate, and not more than adequate, to the requirements of the Service, and that thenceforth no appointments should be made to honorary colonelcies.

Colonel North intends, on an early date, to move an address on the subject of the position of captains in the Army under the Royal Warrant.

We hear that at last it has been determined to reduce the Riding Establishment at Woolwich,—that very showy little troop of gunners without guns. It is calculated that every individual taught riding in this establishment costs the country for his equitation alone more than £100.

The Lieutenant-Colonels in the Artillery of over five years' service are about to share the fate just meted out to their brethren in the Cavalry and Infantry, though they will be more fortunate in having a longer notice to quit than that accorded to the latter, who have not been over leniently treated.

A vacancy has occurred among the Exons of her Majesty's Yeomen of the Guard, by the death of Lieutenant-Colonel J. A. Todd, late of the 14th Hussars. Colonel Todd had held the appointment since April, 1864.

At the present moment, the Russian Government is engaged experimenting with the English system of riding, and the Moscow Gazette informs us that it is found to be such an improvement upon the system in vogue with the Russian cavalry, that its proposal has been made to render it universal throughout the Russian Army.

We learn from India that Lieutenant C. T. Barrow, 26th Cameronians, A.D.C. to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, has been appointed (temporarily) Military Secretary to his Excellency. Lieutenant Barrow has but lately returned from South Afghanistan, where he has been employed as Orderly Officer to General Phayre, C.B.

A distinguished-service reward has fallen vacant by the death of Lieutenant-General F. A. Whimper, C.B.

Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. King, Royal Artillery, has been selected to fill the vacancy among the Queen's Aides-de-Camp, vacant by the retirement of Colonel W. J. E. Grant, C.B., R.A. Colonel King served the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the affairs of Bulganac and M'Kenzie's Farm, battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, siege and fall of Sebastopol, repulse of the sortie on October 26, 1854, and was aide-de-camp to General Markham at the final assault of the Redan on September 8 (mentioned in despatches, medal with four clasps, Knight of the Legion of Honour, fifth class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He joined the Army June 19, 1850, and became lieutenant-colonel July 24, 1875.

The officers serving in Zululand were buoyed up with the hope of batta or an allowance to enable them to replace their clothes, torn and worn with the hard service there among thorn bushes and rocks. Their appearance is most unpresentable, of various colours and patches. The expenses are great in the Transvaal, and the carriage of supplies fearful. A steady subaltern, who does not indulge in luxuries, writes his friends, it costs him about £1 a day for food, washing, &c. We hope all this will be taken into consideration, and that the earnestly hoped-for batta will be ordered to be issued without delay.

The Honorary Secretary for the Army Inter-Regimental Rifle Match writes:—"The entries up to date are as follows:—Officers, 146; non-commissioned officers and men, 424; battalions entered for the team prizes, 41. The prize-list, supposing no more entries to be made, will be somewhat as follows:—Team prizes: First, £82; second, £41. Individual prizes—Officers: First, £14 10s. and a gold badge; second, £12 10s.; third to sixth, £5 each; seventh to fourteenth, £4 each; fifteenth to eighteenth, £3 each. Individual prizes—Men's: First, £6 and a gold badge; second to fifth, £5 each; sixth to tenth, £4 each; eleventh to fifty-second, £2 each. Total value of prizes, £344, exclusive of the gold badges. Entries will continue to be received, but subject to a charge of 25 per cent. additional."

It will have been noticed that the unfortunate Colonel Hackett, of the 90th, has been passed over for promotion in his regiment. One would have thought that the circumstances under which the officer lost his eyesight in Zululand would have recommended him to the favourable consideration of the War Office, and that that department would at any rate have saved him the pain which he must naturally feel at finding that, after all his suffering, a junior has been advanced over his head.

Bacchante, Capt. Lord Charles Scott, which is having defects made good at Portsmouth, is ordered to be ready for sea by June 10. During her cruise she lost some zinc sheathing by the rubbing of her anchor chains, and had her capstan disabled. The Bacchante is only being prepared for a two months' cruise.

Beacon was still doing duty at Muscat when last heard from, but was to proceed to Bushire and Bahrein about the middle of May.

Belleisle, Capt. T. Barnardiston, has been placed in dry dock at Devonport for examination.

Dryad was at Trincomalee, and was to leave about May 1 for Rangoon, to relieve the Spartan, which would at once proceed to Trincomalee.

Excellent, Capt. J. O. Hopkins. Com. J. H. Rainier, of this ship is, says the Portsmouth Times, to be presented with a very pretty carriage clock by the lieutenants of the "long course" 1879-80, in recognition of his courtesy and consideration in directing their studies. A pecularity of the clock is the substitution of the names of the donors on the dial-plate for the hours, their names, in order of seniority, being Lieuts. Savile, Windham, Wingfield, Lees, Lowry, Tillard, Evan-Thomas, Langford, Galloway, Reynolds, Marsh, and Burke, with that of Lieut. Lloyd round the centre, immediately over the hands.

Fantome, which had gone for a cruise to the Cayman Islands, was recalled to Port Royal about the middle of April, in order to be sent to La Guayra for the protection of British interests, news having been received of the blockade of the Orinoco. The Tourmaline was to sail for Colon on April 24, and would communicate with the Fantôme off La Guayra.

Firebrand, Lieut.-Com. V. E. J. B. von Donop, left Sierra Leone on the 4th inst., in search of the two remaining missing boats of the American.

Foxhound, Lieut.-Com. W. H. Nowell, remained at Singapore by last accounts. A dramatic entertainment, in aid of the Irish Famine Relief Fund, given in the Town Hall by the officers and men of the Foxhound on April 14, was a great success, and the net proceeds amounted to $250.

Garnet, Capt. Loftus F. Jones, who is appointed to the command of this ship, vice Erskine, entered the Navy in 1849, and served in the Tribune, Capt. Harry E. Edgell, C.B., in the Mediterranean during the late Russian war. On Dec. 26, 1856, he was promoted to acting lieut. in the Termagant, Comdre. Henry Kellett, C.B., on the North America and West Indies station, and on May 25, 1857, was promoted to lieut. He was appointed on Feb. 1, 1858, to the Marlborough, Capt. Lord Frederick H. Kerr, fitting at Portsmouth, for the flag of Vice-Admiral Arthur Fanshawe, C.B., in the Mediterranean; and on Sept. 23, 1859, was transferred to the Imperieuse, Capt. Rochfort Maguire, fitting at Portsmouth for the East India and China station, and was employed as flag-lieut. to Rear-Admiral Lewis T. Jones, K.C.B., successively in that ship and in the Chesapeake, on the last-named station, until promoted to com., Oct. 4, 1861. His next appointment was on July 13, 1864, to the command of the Sparrow, on the West Coast of Africa, which he commanded until the close of 1865. He was inspecting officer in the Coastguard service, successively of the Kilrush and Falmouth divisions, from Dec. 13, 1865, until Jan. 1868, on the 9th of which month he was appointed to the command of the Royalist, fitting at Woolwich for the North America and West Indies station, from which ship he was posted, April 4, 1870.

Growler, Com. E. Willcox. A telegram from Malta, dated May 19, says that the Growler had proceeded for Plymouth.

Hecla ,Capt. M. Singer, left Plymouth Sound on Monday for Bantry Bay, where she arrived on Wednesday, with supernumeraries and stores for the Channel Squadron.

Iris, Capt. E. H. Seymour, made the measured-mile trial of her machinery on Tuesday. As this ship is built entirely for speed, the Iris was very powerfully engined, with a set having each four cylinders—two high-pressure, 41 in. in diameter, and two low-pressure, 75 in. in diameter. The stroke is 3 ft. Although the engines on the contractors' trial more than developed their contract power, considerable disappointment was at first felt at the estimated speed not having been realised. A long series of experiments, extending from Feb. 4 to Aug. 15, 1878, were subsequently carried out, with the object of discovering wherein the defect consisted. Four runs were made at full power, giving a mean speed of 17·551 knots, with 90·66 revolutions of the starboard and 92·82 revolutions of the port engines a minute. The mean horse-power developed was—High-pressure cylinders, 1,723·88 starboard and 1,787·91 port; and low-pressure, 1,645·14 starboard and 1,685·76 port, giving a total of 6,842·69 horses. The safety-valves were weighted at 65 lb. and the average pressure was 62 12 lb. The power that was developed during the runs was not so great as on former trials, the falling-off being accounted for, to a great extent, by the fact of the crank-pin brasses of the starboard engines heating, and the additional circumstance that the boilers required the donkey feed during a portion of the trial. There was very little vibration of the ship due to the screws on Tuesday, and with the exception of the running of the crank bearings the machinery worked very satisfactorily. The highest temperature recorded in the stokehole was 121 deg., and the lowest 83 deg.

Jackal, Lieut. the Hon. R. Bingham, was undocked at Keyham Yard on Saturday, and will shortly sail for Oban.

Jumna, Capt. Parsons, arrived at Portsmouth on the 14th inst., after a very successful voyage, with military invalids and time-expired men. On the outward voyage an able seaman, named Henry Davis, whose friends reside at Devonport, was drowned under very distressing circumstances. The ship had just entered the Red Sea, and the deceased who belonged to the crew of the steam launch, was engaged in the boat which was hanging to the davits, when in reaching over the side he overbalanced himself and fell overboard, striking his head on one of the open port-hatches in his fall. Some women on the deck raised an alarm, and three officers immediately jumped overboard, but were unable to rescue the poor fellow, who sank immediately. He was to have been married on his arrival at Portsmouth.

Liberty, Lieut. G. O'Connor, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

Nautilus, Lieut. A. Blennerhasset, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

Neptune, which was purchased in March, 1878, from the Brazilian Government, was tried in the Solent last week for the first time since she became an English man-of-war. As it was essential, for the purposes of the trial, that she should be as nearly as possible brought down to her sea-going trim, 60 tons of water was admitted into her double bottom, which, with the amount of coal in the bunkers, gave her a draught of 24ft. 10in. forward and 25ft. aft. As she lay deep in the water, her bows pushed ahead, when driving at full speed, a wave from 10ft. to 11ft. in height, and threw great strain upon the machinery as well as retarding the ship. It was also noticed that a broad channel of dead water followed in her wake. The Neptune was designed in 1872 by Mr. E. J. Reed.

Phœnix, Com. Grenfell, returned to Plymouth Sound on the 14th inst., and took up moorings in Barn Pool, after her week's cruise in the Channel.

Pilot, Lieut. J. Giles, was inspected on Monday by Capt. R. Bradshaw.

Ready, Com. Herbert Edwards, was at Bombay up to April 22 in dock, and after being repaired was to leave again for Muscat.

Resistance, Capt. A. T. Thrupp, moved from the Sound into Devonport Harbour on the 14th inst., and will be surveyed by the dockyard officers as to her fitness for further service.

Ruby, Capt. R. Molyneux, which is to be recommissioned by Capt. Charles Foote, left Zanzibar for the Mozambique on April 5.

Seaflower, Lieut. G. C. Higgins, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

Sealark, Lieut. G. R. Bromley, sailed from Plymouth Sound on Monday for a cruise.

Swift arrived at Chatham Dockyard on Thursday, to be completed for sea. She is a new vessel, having recently been launched from the yard of the Thames Shipbuilding Company. She has been built for speed, and will be fitted with engines of 870 horse-power, although she is only of 770 tons burden. It will be some months before she is ready to hoist the pendant.

Triumph, Capt. A. H. Markham, flagship of the Commander-in-Chief, is expected to arrive at Vancouver Island about April 25. The Triumph has, says the Hampshire Telegraph, been having some submarine mining operations at Payta, under the direction of her torpedo lieutenant, Mr. Chisholm Batten. A sunken wreck was much in the way in the bay, and it was thought advisable that it should be removed if possible by mining, and it was most successfully demolished, thus doing Payta Bay a service, and giving the Triumph some excellent practice.

Vestal, Com. G. Tandy, was at Zanzibar, but about to leave for Aden on April 17.

Vigilant, Lieut.-Com. W. Annesley. On April 4, two men, one named Orr, coxswain of the Naval Yard steam launch, and the other Baird, a seaman on the Vigilant, were walking along the wall at the Hung Ham Docks, when they both fell into the water. The men, we understand, were a little the worse for liquor, and Orr has never been seen since. Baird was picked up and drawn on shore by a dog belonging to a person in the dock.—China Telegraph.

Vivid, Staff Com. J. R. Ryan, was taken outside Plymouth Breakwater, after repairs, for a short steam trial.

Vulture, Com. J. Pringle, was at Bushire, and was to leave for Kurrachee and Bombay about the end of May.

Wild Swan, Com. S. Dacres, was at Bombay, under orders to leave for Zanzibar at the end of April.

TORPEDO-BOAT ATTACK.

Of the long and important series of competitive trials between the five-barrelled revolving Nordenfeldt machine-gun and the Hotchkiss revolving cannon, which were concluded at Portsmouth last week, the Times says:—The accuracy and penetrating powers of the rival weapons had been previously tested at Whale Island, and proved to be practically the same, and the purpose of the present experiments was to ascertain whether the Hotchkiss gun, when fired from a ship under way, was better adopted for riddling and disabling a torpedo-boat, also under steam, than the Nordenfeldt gun, which has been fitted to a great number of our ships-of-war. With this object, the trial took a very practical turn. The two machine-guns were mounted on the forecastle of the Medway gunboat, while the targets consisted of four full-sized models of second-class torpedo boats, with dummy machinery inside, and floating upon rafts. The experiments were conducted by Lieuts. Hammill and Nichol, of the Excellent, under the superintendence of Capt. Hopkins, and among those who witnessed the firing, in addition to the inventors, were Admiral Boys, Col. Close, R.A., and Capt. Lewis, R.E., of the Machine-Gun Committee; Commanders Brown and Custance, who had been specially sent down by the Admiralty; and Capt. Labrano, of the Italian corvette Christoforo Colombo, then at Portsmouth. The two guns were subjected to precisely the same conditions, the crews, having been trained in the use of both for several weeks previously, being changed from one to the other during each day. The trials were made at Spithead, and resulted as follows, the number of hits in the last runs not having been ascertained at the conclusion of the firing:—

	Shots per run.		Hits per run.		Shots per minute.		Hits per minute.
	Nordenfeldt.	Hotchkiss.	Nordenfeldt.	Hotchkiss.	Nordenfeldt.	Hotchkiss.	Nordenfeldt.	Hotchkiss.
1st run 2nd run	118	35	62	11	23	7½	12	2½
3rd run 4th run	330	129	65	35	40	15	8	4
5th run 6th run	349	103	117	54	48	12½	16	6½
7th run 8th run	135	50	not counted		93	21	not counted

The Medway, starting at 1,500 yards' distance, advanced towards the torpedo-boats, each gun firing all the way until close up, and in a couple of instances the range was shortened to 600 yards. The firing continued all day from 10 o'clock until 6 at night, the attacks being directed sometimes against the broadside and at other times against the bow of the targets. The Nordenfeldt scored the greater number of hits for each run as well as per minute, the excess varying from two to three times as many as the rival piece. The practice against the target end-on demonstrated the effectiveness of a good machine-gun at long range, seeing that at a distance of a mile the models could scarcely be discerned on the water. During this run the Nordenfeldt gun riddled the torpedo-boat through and through, until about 120 hits had been registered, every third shot scoring. Five of the shots hit the models of piston-rods in the interior, and many penetrated the fire-box, any one of which in actual hostilities would have disabled the boat and defeated the attack. The Hotchkiss gun, which is more suitable for military than naval purposes, also made very excellent practice for a single-shot machine. It had, however, the misfortune to break a firing-pin during one of the runs and to prematurely explode a couple of its shells, or explosive bullets, in the gun.

At the meeting of the Meteorological Society on Wednesday evening, a paper was read by Mr. C. Harding, F.M.S., "On the Winds and Weather Experienced in the North Atlantic between lats. 30° and 50° during February and March, 1880." This period includes the time during which her Majesty's ship Atalanta was on her homeward passage, as she left Bermuda on Jan. 31. From the data collected, it is shown that a gale blew in the Atlantic every day throughout the month of February, except on the 21st, and the 24th to the 27th. With special reference to her Majesty's ship Atalanta, it appears probable that she would not have met with any exceptionally severe weather earlier than about Feb. 12 or 13, and allowing that she had averaged from five to six knots per hour on her homeward course, she would on that date have inevitably encountered a severe hurricane. A heavy gale is noted on the 12th, in lat 38° N. and long. 45° W., which is in the direct homeward-bound track from Bermuda; and if the Atalanta had only averaged four knots per hour on her homeward course, she would have fallen in with this gale. The storm on the 12th and 13th may fairly be considered as about the most severe during the two months of February and March.

Eighty £5 Bank-of-England notes were dug up in a meadow at Dover on Friday. They were encased in a circular shell of plaster of Paris, and had been damaged by the wet. So far as the numbers could be made out, they corresponded with the notes stolen in 1872 from the Paymaster's Office, Walmer Royal Marine Barracks, on which occasion nearly £2,000 was stolen.

The annual general meeting of the Royal Naval School was held on Thursday, at the Royal United Service Institution, Admiral R. H. Stopford, V.P., in the chair. The Council's annual report contained a long list of successes and honours gained by former pupils. The reports of the examiners were highly satisfactory. A satisfactory account was given of the financial condition of the school, the council bearing testimony to the zeal of Mr. Alfred Eames, the secretary, who had been the means of greatly increasing the prosperity of the institution. Legacies and donations to the amount of £1,359 had been invested.

The New Boot Polish.—An entirely new idea for polishing boots has just been introduced which does away with the laborious method hitherto in use. Propert's Ebony Blacking polishes instantly without brushing, is of an oily nature, and, being waterproof, retains its lustre in all weathers. One application upon ladies', gentlemen's, or children's boots lasts a week.—Of Bootmakers, price 1s.—Wholesale of J. Propert, Battersea Park Road, London.

ROYAL NAVAL ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS.

We have received from the Bristol Brigade the following interesting statement of the progress of the Brigade for the twelve months ending March 25, 1880:—Experience having shown that the funds of the Brigade could not stand the strain of supplying uniform of the cost price of £3 15s. to members for an entrance-fee of one guinea, it was decided by the committee, in February, last year, to raise this fee to £2 10s. This has had the effect on one hand of considerably checking the entries; but on the other hand, of placing the finances in a satisfactory condition. The Brigade is out of debt, and the balance this year in its favour is the largest since 1876. Since March 26, 1879, 23 new members have been enrolled, 51 have been struck off the rolls, showing a decrease during the year of 28 members. Of the 51 members who have been struck off, 28 have been removed for non-attendance at drill, and non-payment of subscriptions; 22 resigned from various causes, and 1 had died. Owing to depression of business last year, several members left Bristol to seek employment, and others had to discontinue their subscriptions. The Brigade at present numbers 140 members, out of which 123 have their uniform, and 17 are awaiting it. Last August two detachments were embarked for a week's cruise on board the Cromer, Lieut.-Com. Bolitho, who spoke in high terms of the conduct of the Volunteers during these cruises. The average attendance at drill for the year, reckoning the whole brigade, is 36½ drills to each member. Some members have attended over 100 drills; the best attendance being 161. When it is considered that to count a whole drill men must be punctual to time, and if only one minute late they only count half a drill, and that no capitation-grant is allowed for "efficient members" (15 drills), this annual average attendance may fairly be called satisfactory. The Mayor of Bristol has consented to inspect the Brigade on Saturday, June 5.

THE SPITHEAD DEFENCES.

The Committee on Working Heavy Guns paid a visit to Portsmouth on Wednesday, for the purpose of testing the working of the guns mounted at the Spit-bank Fort. Having inspected the fort thoroughly, and examined the various alterations in the fittings, &c., which had been effected, at their recommendation, since the last "field-day" at the fort, the programme of the day was commenced. The general idea, says our correspondent, was:—A detachment of an enemy's fleet is supposed to have forced the Needles passage, and is manœuvring between Fort Gilkicker and Spithead, with the object of bombarding the Dockyard. Co-operating with these ships is a flotilla of gunboats between the Horsesand Fort and Eastney (represented by two targets). The action began with five 12·5-inch guns opening fire in succession on the imaginary fleet, which, owing to the proximity of the land, were unshotted. After firing three rounds the action was continued by the remaining four 12·5-inch guns, loaded with the battering charge, 160lb. P2 powder and a Palliser's shell. The practice was much interfered with by small craft getting in the range and remaining there, so the first round was completely thrown away. The splash of these monsters, weighing over 800lbs., added to their erratic course after the first graze, was a sufficient hint to the skippers of the boats that accidents will happen, and they cleared off accordingly. The practice was then very good, and the left-hand target, consisting of a barrel with a banderoll stuck in it, soon disappeared. The guns proved themselves straight shooters, and a gunboat would have had very poor chance when once within range of the whole three forts. The only point which caused dissatisfaction was the "jump" of the slide after each round. Sometimes the front of the slide would rise from 12 to 15 inches, this however, can easily be remedied, but will cause an expensive alteration in the fittings.

SHIPBUILDING FOR ROYAL NAVY.

During the first quarter of the present year six vessels of various tonnage and power were launched, and there are 24 others either ordered to be built or under construction at the Government dockyards or by private firms. The vessels now being fitted for service or just ready for commission include the Ajax, sister ship of the Agamemnon, of four guns, 8,492 tons burden, with engines of 6,000-horse power; a composite screw sloop of 1,124 tons, and 900-horse power, to be armed with six guns, built at Chatham, the Doterel; a double-screw composite gun-vessel, the Linnet, sister ship to the Swift, built by the Thames Shipbuilding Company, of 770 tons, with engines of 870-horse power; a paddle vessel of 540 tons and 480 horse-power engines, by Messrs. J. Elder and Co., named the Niger; and two out of three screw composite gun-vessels, each of 774 tons burden, with engines of 750 horse-power, to carry three guns each, also built by Messrs. Elder, and named the Rambler and Ranger. The new vessels ordered to be built include three cruisers, of the second rate, to be named, Arethusa, Leander, and Phæton, and an armoured barbette ship, to be named the Collingwood. The other vessels under construction, some of which are in a forward state for launching, comprise five composite screw gunboats, of 455 tons burden, each to be furnished with four guns, and to be fitted with engines of 360 horse-power, to be named the Banterer, Grappler, Redwing, Wasp, and Wrangler. The Redwing is being built at Pembroke Dockyard, and is to be fitted for Coastguard service; the other four are under construction by the Barrow Shipbuilding Company; a double-screw steel armour-plated turret-ship and ram of 6,200 tons, to have engines of 4,500 horse-power, building at Chatham, to be named the Conqueror. This vessel is to be entirely coated with steel armour, and will be armed with four heavy guns; in the wake of her turret-guns, and in other exposed positions, her armour will be 12 in. in thickness; she is being built on the lines of the Rupert, but is not likely to be ready for launching for about a year; a screw composite gun-vessel, sister ship to the Rambler and Ranger, of 774 tons, with engines of 750 horse-power, building by Messrs. Harland and Wolff, of Belfast, to be named the Algerine, and designed to carry three guns; two steel double-screw gunboats of 253 tons each, and 168 horse-power engines, to be armed with one gun each, and building at Pembroke Dockyard, to be named the Bouncer and Insolent; two double-screw steel armour-plated turret-ships of 9,150 tons burden, to be supplied with engines of 6,000 horse-power, one building at Pembroke, and to be named the Majestic, and the other at Portsmouth, to be named the Colossus, designed to carry six guns each; a double-screw, steel, armour-plated torpedo-ram, of 2,640 tons, and to be furnished with engines of 5,500 horse-power, building at Chatham Dockyard, and to be named the Polyphemus. Three screw corvettes of steel and iron cased with wood, each of 2,383 tons, with engines of 2,300 horse-power, to carry 14 guns, one under construction at Chatham Dockyard, and to be named the Constance,—this vessel is being prepared for launching,—and the other two building at Portsmouth, to be named the Canada and Cordelia; three screw composith gunboats of 455 tons each, to carry four guns, and to be fitted with engines of 360 horse-power, to be named the Bullfrog, Cockchafer, and Espoir, all under construction at Pembroke Dockyard; and two composite screw sloops, of 1,124 tons and 900 horse-power engines, each to carry six guns, building at Devonport, and to be named the Espiègle and Mutine. There are at present no broadside armoured ships building for the Navy.

"ORPHEUS" MEMORIAL FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—My appeal for subscriptions to the above fund, which appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette on the 15th inst., having thus far met with great success, I shall be much obliged if I may be allowed to state that a committee is in course of formation, whose names will shortly be published, and that an account has been opened at Messrs. Charles Hopkinson and Sons' Bank, 3 Regent Street, St. James's, S.W., where cheques can be paid into, crossed "Orpheus Memorial Fund," and donations will be received.—I am, &c., CHARLES GEORGE BROOKE-HUNT.

Stinchcombe, Gloucestershire, May 20.

[We have received a further subscription of £1 towards the memorial from Mrs. Hungerford-Eagar.—ED. A. & N. G.]

A water-colour drawing of the Atalanta, by Mr. Yockney, R.N., is at present on view at 168 New Bond Street.

A monument, consisting of a large cross of Aberdeen granite, has been erected in Canongate Churchyard, Edinburgh, in memory of soldiers who have died in Edinburgh Castle from 1692 to the present time. The monument, which is the gift of Mr. William Ford, Holyrood, was unveiled last week in the presence of Major-Gen. Hope, commanding the Forces in North Britain.

The following compliment to our Sailors' Homes has been addressed by the captain of the U.S. ship Constellation, to the committee of the Cork Sailors' Home:—"Gentlemen,—Before leaving this port I beg to express my acknowledgment for kind treatment and attention shown to the petty officers and seamen of this ship who visited Cork, and who report that they received every attention, and were well-cared for by the authorities of your most excellent institution.—I have, &c., EDWARD L. POTTER, Captain, U.S. ship Constellation."

The members of the Navy Club dined together at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday. Admiral Erskine presided, and Sir William Bruce, Bart., was the guest. There were also present:—Admiral of the Fleet Sir Rodney Mundy, G.C.B., Admiral Lord Edward Russell, Vice-Admiral Boyle, Vice-Admiral Hon. J. W. Spencer, Vice-Admiral R. A. Oliver, Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., Rear-Admiral Seccombe, Capt. Sir Lambton Loraine, Capt. Codrington, Capt. Robinson, and Com. Gassiot.

On Tuesday the steam-tug Lord Elgin, of Queenstown, picked up near Daunt's Rock Lightship the port of a man-of-war. The ring bolts were marked with the Government brand. The wreckage was painted black on one side and white upon the other. It was removed on board the guard-ship Revenge for inspection. It was at first supposed to belong to the missing ship Atalanta, but it appears to have been only a few hours in the water, and most probably was lost from the Trinity steamer Alert which left Queenstown on Tuesday morning for the Lizard, and passed in the vicinity of the place where the port was found drifting.

The statutory meeting of the Investment Registry and Stock Exchange (Limited) took place on the 19th inst., at their offices, West-End Stock Exchange, in Pall Mall. The proceedings were necessarily formal, but Major-Gen. the Hon. W. Feilding, the chairman, was enabled to inform shareholders that during the few weeks the Exchange had been open a very considerable amount of business had been done, that the shares already taken up were considered to furnish a capital amply sufficient for the present purposes of the company, and that what they all had to look for and work for was not additional capital, but additional business, which could best be obtained by shareholders making the objects of the West-End Stock Exchange known among their friends and acquaintances, and inviting their co-operation. After a few questions had been put and answered, the proceedings terminated with the election of auditors and a vote of confidence in the board.

Obituary.

Lieut.-Gen. F. A. Whimper, C.B., died on Tuesday, at Pondwell, Ryde, Isle of Wight, in his 66th year. Gen. Whimper entered the Army in 1835, as ensign in the 98th Regiment, saw active service with that regiment in the China expedition (for which he received the medal), and was present at the capture of Ching Kiung Foo. He also served with the 55th Regiment through a great part of the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, including the Alma (medal and clasp, brevet of lieutenant-colonel, Turkish medal, and 5th Class of the Medjidie). He was nominated a C.B. in 1873. His commissions bore date as follows, viz.:—Ensign, Jan. 23, 1835; lieutenant, March 23, 1838; captain, Oct. 5, 184 ; major, June 24, 1853; lieutenant-colonel, Dec. 12, 1854; colonel, June 3, 1860; major-general, March 6, 1868; and lieutenant-general, Oct. 1, 1877.

Major-Gen. Sir B. T. Phillips, formerly of the Indian Army, who died on the 10th inst. at Paris, was 75 years of age. A son of the late Mr. S. H. Phillips, of Haroldstone, Pembrokeshire, he was born in the year 1804, and entered the Bengal Cavalry in 1821, serving in India, with slight intervals, down to 1856. He raised and commanded the Bengal Cavalry depôt at Cawnpore, and when with the 7th Regt., in 1824, made a forced march of upwards of 80 miles to the relief of Jeypore. He also served through the Bheel campaign, and through the Sikh campaign of 1848-49 (medal). He was lieutenant of the Yeomen of the Guard from 1857 down to 1861, and received the honour of knighthood in 1858.

The South of India Observer says:—"Another of the officers who obtained their commissions and served in the days of the Hon. East India Company has passed away. Col. W. H. Godfrey entered in the Army in 1828, had seen some service, and been wounded on two or three occasions. He was present at the capture of the town of Gotah; the engagement in the Panorah Pass in 1835; and the capture of Runseehoor in 1837; also at the battles of Meeanee and Hyderabad. In 1855, Col. Godfrey, then Major Godfrey, received the thanks of Government for his gallant conduct in the field. Col. Godfrey retired in 1861.

Amusements.

Favoured by fine weather, the Whitsuntide holiday-makers largely patronised the places of amusement in the environs of the Metropolis. No special novelty was provided at any of the theatres, but most of the managers gave morning performances, which were generally well attended.

At the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, Covent Garden, Madame Adelina Patti has received a cordial greeting on her reappearance, and her vocal powers have exhibited no sign of decay. On Tuesday the favourite prima donna appeared as Rosina in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," her next appearance, on Friday, being as Violetta in "La Traviata." On Thursday, Madame Albani appeared as the heroine of Ambroise Thomas's opera of "Mignon."

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA has commenced its season auspiciously with Madame Christine Nilsson in "Faust and Marguerite," her voice being in admirable condition, and her welcome being as enthusiastic as ever. To Sir Michael Costa has now succeeded Signor Arditi, but it cannot be said that the change has been detrimental to the efficiency of the orchestra. Mr. Joseph Maas is deservedly taking his place in the front rank of tenors on the Italian lyrical stage. "La Sonnambula" favourably introduced on Monday night Mdlle. Emma Nevada, a young American vocalist, who is said never before to have sung on any stage. Her voice is a light soprano, of fresh and sympathetic quality. "Carmen," with Mdlle. Minnie Hauk, followed on Tuesday, and "Aïda," with Madame Marie Roze, on Thursday.

"Les Cloches de Corneville," already represented more than seven hundred nights, has been restored to the programme of the GLOBE, with decided advantage. The powerful acting of Mr. Shiel Barry as the old miser, Gaspard, retains all its former intensity; Miss Violet Cameron resumes her place as the graceful Germaine, and Miss Emma Chambers is full of quaint drollery as the merry, mischievous Serpolette. Mr. Harry Paulton is exuberantly comic as the loquacious Bailie, and the general rendering of Planquette's melodious comic opera is now as perfect as at any previous period of its prolonged career.

The last nights of "La Fille de Madame Angot" are now announced at DRURY LANE, the later representations being rendered additionally attractive by the engagement of Madame Selina Dolaro as Clairette.

The season of French plays will commence at the GAIETY on Monday next, and will comprise a period of eight weeks. The repertory will include about fifty pieces, old and new. The American season at the Gaiety will begin on July 19, with Mr. Raymond in "Colonel Sellers," and at the end of August Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence will appear in the American drama called "The Mighty Dollar."

Mr. Albery's new comedy at the VAUDEVILLE is entitled "Jacks and Jills," and Saturday week is assigned as the date of production.

Mr. George Honey is so seriously ill that doubts are entertained of the popular comedian being able to return to the stage.

Madame Modjeska, the Polish actress, will appear, after this week, every evening at the COURT THEATRE, and her next character will be Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet."

Mr. Burnand's new comedy, to be produced next week at the OLYMPIC, is an adaptation of "Le Mari de la Débutante," by MM. Meilhac and Halévy, brought out at the Palais Royal Feb. 5, 1879. Mr. John Hollingshead purchased the English right of producing this four-act comedy on the first night of its representation in Paris.

The CANTERBURY THEATRE OF VARIETIES has added to its attractions a very pretty and picturesque ballet called "Nymphs of the Ocean," arranged by M. Dewinne. The supplementary entertainments are well supported by Miss Nelly Power, Mr. G. H. Macdermott, and other popular favourites of metropolitan amusement-seekers.

The Earl of Fife entertained the members of the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms at dinner on Saturday last, at his residence in Cavendish Square.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. All who have difficulty in taking Cod Liver Oil should insist on having Allen and Hanburys' "PERFECTED" OIL. Sold only in capsuled imperial ¼ pints, 1s 4d; ½ pints, 2s 6d; pints, 4s 9d; quarts, 9s. Trade Mark, a Plough. Of all Chemists.

A cricket match will be played at Lords, on Saturday, May 29, between eleven professional huntsmen and eleven professional jockeys, for the benefit of the Hunt Servants' Society and the Bentinck Benevolent Fund, under the patronage of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

CHLORODYNE.

THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE,

Which is admitted by the Profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases—Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, and Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, &c.

From Lord FRANCIS CONYNGHAM, Mount Charles, Dec. 11, 1868.

Lord Francis Conyngham, who this time last year bought some of Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne from Mr. Davenport, and has found it a most wonderful medicine, will be glad to have half-a dozen bottles sent at once to the above address.

⁂ Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he had received a despatch from her Majesty's Consul at Manilla, to the effect that Cholera has been raging fearfully, and that the ONLY remedy of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

CAUTION.—BEWARE of PIRACY and IMITATIONS.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE; that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in Bottles at 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, and 4s 6d. None is genuine without the words, "Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Indigestion and Liver Complaints.—The digestion cannot be long or seriously disordered without the derangement being perceptible on the countenance. These Pills prevent both unpleasant consequence; they improve the appetite, and with the increase of desire for food, they augment the powers of digestion and assimilation in the stomach. Holloway's Pills deal most satisfactorily with deranged or diseased conditions of the many organs engaged in extracting nourishment for our bodies from our various diets—as the liver, stomach, and bowels, over all of which they exercise the most salutary control. By resorting at an early stage of this malady to these purifying and laxative Pills, the dyspeptic is speedily restored to health and strength, and his sallowness gradually vanishes.

PERFECTLY PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—NITROUS OXIDE GAS.—By the use of this, the most simple, speedy, and successful agent, after an experience of 45,000 cases, Mr. B. L. MOSELY, the Dentist, Member of the College of Dentists, England, and original introducer of this Gas, guarantees entire immunity from pain in every operation pertaining to Dental Surgery, and successful painless adaptation of artificial teeth. The daily experience of Hospital and extensive private practice demonstrates that, unlike every other anæsthetic, the Nitrous Oxide Gas is innocuous and even pleasant, while want of success or the least pain is simply impossible. For confirmation of this, vide Lancet, British Medical Journal, of 15th January, 1870, and opinions of leading members of the faculty. In the use of Mr. B, L. Mosely's Painless Artificial Teeth, the following results may be confidently relied on. All loose Teeth are permanently fastened, and the Artificial Teeth as firm in the mouth as the natural. Such entire comfort, combined with a fit so perfect is secured by this spécialité that the wearer, so far from being inconvenienced by his Artificial Teeth, is actually uncomfortable without them. In appearance and in use, both for eating and speaking, they are precisely the same as natural teeth—there is no difference whatever.

"Ease and comfort most apparent, while mastication appears completely provided for."—Advertiser.

From the Lancet, April 2nd, 1870 (p. 480):—"The reasons why we advocate the use of Nitrous Oxide Gas are 'Its safety;' 'The rapidity with which anæsthesia can be induced, viz., from 50 to 100 seconds;' Because it is actually pleasant to inhale, and therefore fright and mental distress are avoided;' 'Because recovery is usually bright, pleasant, and complete, after-discomfort being extremely rare.'"

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of extending the sale of the Bilin Natural Mineral Water, and the Bilin Digestive Pastilles, and for acquiring the business now carried on by Mr. Ludwig Epstein, at the Bilin Water Depôts, at 27 King Street, Cheapside, and 46 Gresham Street, London, and 12 King's Road, Brighton, and his rights in respects of sale of these articles in the United Kingdom, its Colonies and Dependencies, and the continents of and islands of America, both North and South, and also for the sale and manufacture of mineral, gaseous, and aërated waters generally. Powers are also taken for the sale of wines and spirits and other drinks, whether alcoholic or otherwise, in case it should ever appear desirable to exercise such powers.

Mr. Epstein has recently entered into an agreement for a term of fifty years with His Serene Highness Prince Lobkowitz, Duke of Raudnitz, the proprietor of the springs at Bilin, in Bohemia, for the exclusive supply to him for sale in the British Empire, its Colonies and Dependencies, and on the continent of and islands of North and South America, of the Water and Pastilles, contained in an agreement and supplementary agreement, dated respectively February 24, 1880, and April 4, 1880.

The Mineral Water of Bilin is rapidly rising in the estimation of the public, both as a cure for indigestion and all those diseases which arise from acidity of the digestive organs, and as a delicious and refreshing table-water.

On the Continent it has been known and appreciated for many years, and the first medical authorities have testified to its valuable qualities. Since its introduction into this country its popularity is daily increasing, and it is highly recommended by the Faculty here, as appears from the high testimonials received.

The Bilin Digestive Pastilles possess all the beneficial properties of the water. They have been admitted into the Austrian Pharmacopœia, and their efficacy has been attested by undoubted authorities.

The Bilin Water is imported in its natural state.

From the valuable qualities of the Water, it is not only a luxury for the table, but also a necessity to those who are troubled with indigestion and acidity; and when it becomes as well known in England as it already is in Austria and Germany, it is sure to be in very large demand; and as the agreements with Prince Lobkowitz have been concluded on very advantageous terms, large profits may be expected by the Shareholders in the Company.

The only contract that has been entered into by or on behalf of the Company can be seen at the Offices of the Solicitor of the Company, and is dated May 6, 1880, between Ludwig Epstein, of the one part, and J. A. Partridge, as trustee for the Company, on the other part, for the sale to Mr. J. A. Partridge of the business and goodwill and stock-in-trade of Mr. Epstein and the benefit and burden of his provisional agreement and supplemental agreement with Prince Lobkowitz. Under his contract Mr. Epstein is to receive the sum of £4,000 in cash and £4,000 in fully paid-up shares of the Company. The said provisional agreement is dated February 24, 1880, and the said supplemental agreement is dated April 4, 1880, the said agreement and supplemental agreement are made between Prince Lobkowitz, of Bilin, Bohemia, in the Empire of Austria, of the one part, and Ludwig Epstein, of 27 King Street, Cheapside, of the other part, and were entered into in the German language and in the German form, and under the advice of, Austrian lawyers. The said provisional agreement and supplemental agreement and translations into English thereof can be seen at the offices of the Company's Solicitor. The final agreement will have to be deposited with the Imperial District Court at Prague, pursuant to the requirement and practice of Austrian law.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained of the Bankers, Brokers and Solicitor, and at the Registered Offices of the Company, where the Memorandum and Articles of Association can be seen.

In case no allotment is made, the money paid on application will be returned in full.

THE severe censure pronounced by Sir Garnet Wolseley on the members of the Court-martial which tried Lieutenant Harward, confirmed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, was, in our opinion, only too well deserved. That censure has been, or will be, read to every regiment in the Service, and it will, we hope, be taken to heart by every officer and man in the Army. The reproach which such a castigation conveys can be deserved only by those who come within its scope; but it is difficult to suppose that these officers were the only men in the Service who would have assented to such a finding, If the members of the Court, or any one of them, thinks the censure was unjust, the means of justification are not wanting. Time was when such scathing words would have been regarded as a very broad hint that those to whom they were applied might retire from the Service, but we must accept as an explanation of the view taken by the officers composing this particular Court, that the notions of Military duty have become so depraved in South Africa that an offence against duty of the most grave and reprehensible sort was considered as an adequate and honourable performance of it. If not, how is the finding to be accounted for? Either Sir Garnet Wolseley and the Duke of Cambridge, who echoes his weighty remonstrance and indignant protest, are wrong, or the members of the Court were right, or the reverse is the case. We venture to say that the opinion of the British Army is that never were remonstrance and protest better deserved or more needed. In the case of a former court-martial, in connection with the tragical event for which the Zulu war will be chiefly remembered in history for all time to come, it is understood that the finding of the Court was that the prisoner was guilty of the serious charges against him. It is said the authorities quashed the finding because the Court was not legally constituted. The members of the second Court may have been under some misapprehension respecting the views which governed the action of the powers that be in that case. They may have thought they were bound to regard Mr. Harward's excuses and explanations as ample grounds for a decision which would be grateful to the Horse Guards. It was high time that there should be a pronunciamiento in high places. Although we cannot agree with the expression of the Duke of Cambridge's opinion, that the finest deeds of the British Army have been inspired by the reliance of the soldier on the officer, we think there is no army in the world in which the quality and character of the officer have such an influence on the conduct of the men. Sir G. Wolseley has not made any imputation on the British Army in stigmatising the behaviour of the subject of his remarks as he did, nor has he assailed the officers of the British Army in covering the members of the Court which acquitted Mr. Harward with an official approbrium of no ordinary dimensions and weight. The unhappy Zulu war afforded instances of very extraordinary military crime and military virtue. The defence of Rorke's Drift was preluded by the apparition of a mounted field-officer at the post, which was not exactly like that of the twin brethren to the struggling Romans, for he galloped off to "alarm the nearest post," and bring the garrison succour, which never came. Chard and Bromhead rose on the ruins of the field-officer's fortunes, for, had he stayed behind, it is hard to say what honours would not have awaited him. One day beheld the best and bravest of our host flying or dying on Zlobane; the living, in a "sauve qui peut" which only those who were in it can describe. The next saw them the heroes of Kambula, victors in the master struggle of the war. In such necessitudes—the outcome of the catastrophe of Isandlwana, the escapade of Zlobane, the beleaguring of Etshowe, the laagering of each nightly host, and the like—the sense of what the officer and the man should be to each and by each other became rather "mixed." Sir Garnet Wolseley denied with much heat that the Army in South Africa had committed any act of indiscipline which the Duke of Wellington or Lord Clyde would have stamped out with an iron heel; but he has certainly read a lesson to some of the officers of the Army, which might be interpreted as a very sweeping indictment of their fitness for the duties which their predecessors discharged with credit and renown.

The remarks we made last week on the constitution of the Court to be empowered to inquire into the loss of the Atalanta were evidently not uncalled for, and already there is abundant proof that the view we took of the feeling of the public on the question was substantially correct. In alluding to the Court which had the sad duty of sifting the causes of the loss of the Eurydice, we pointed out that the public was not altogether satisfied with it, and the fact of its being composed of Naval officers was not looked upon with favour. It is not that the public has any real mistrust of the Naval element, but the fact that they all owe allegiance to those in authority over them, and that to run counter to so important a body as the Board of Admiralty might mean something akin to professional ruin, so long as that Board remained in power, are facts not lost sight of by those not connected with the Service. As we remarked, the mode of instituting an inquiry entertained by the Admiralty is closely allied to the usual form of a Naval court, composed of Naval officers and held afloat; and since those remarks were made, the statements of Lord Northbrook and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre have put the public in possession of the intended constitution of the committee of inquiry. The members selected by the Board are Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth; Vice-Admiral Randolph; Staff Captain Batt, who took an active part in the operations connected with raising the Eurydice; Mr. Rothery, wreck commissioner; and Mr. Wayland, late chief surveyor to Lloyd's Registry. The scene of the inquiry, although not fully admitted, is intended to be on board the Duke of Wellington or the Victory should the meeting of the court on board the flagship interfere with the domestic arrangements of the Captain's family, and it is absurd to speak of an inquiry held afloat as being really an open one. Only those very deeply interested in the inquiry would submit to the trouble and expense of going to Portsmouth, and taking boats to and from the ship, to hear the deliberations of a slow-moving Naval court of inquiry, and it will be through the representatives of the Press alone that the results of the inquiry will become ventilated. Against those composing the court not one word can be said individually, and for ourselves, we should have the utmost confidence in leaving the matter in their hands. But the public does not see it in the same light, and knowing that two of the officers are even now on full pay, that the third is still on the Active List and looking for further employment, and that the two other committee-men are nominees of the Admiralty Board, considers itself justified in suspecting that it is very like a packed meeting. To such a court, we said last week, "objections will most certainly be raised, for what the country wants to see is an open and public inquiry, made by a committee or board on which there are some who are free from all control of the Admiralty." But the new Admiralty would not alter the preconceived idea of the form of the inquiry, and consequently a large section of the public looks upon their Lordships' action with suspicion. The Secretary of the Admiralty has acknowledged that there have been complaints as to the constitution of the Court, but further remarked that Lord Northbrook would not feel disposed to alter its nature or the form of the inquiry. Why there should be such obstinate persistency in opposing the wishes of the country, it is difficult to imagine, for, as we have previously remarked, we trust their Lordships have nothing to fear in submitting every detail to the closest scrutiny. But such opposition to the feeling of Parliament will most assuredly reflect upon the Department, and instead of disarming suspicion by yielding to the most searching examination, this seeming anxiety to nominate its own court will tend to raise doubts as to the responsibility of the Department. This is the very first occasion on which the new Admiralty has come before the public, and the Board is, apparently, doing its utmost to earn a doubtful reputation with that section of the British people which is never tired of remembering that the public Service is made for the country, and that Government Departments were not invented solely to give ambitious politicians a chance of climbing into office. As we have before said, for our own part, we have believed that the Admiralty Board has nothing to fear, and we feel confident that as far as the late First Lord of the Admiralty was concerned, nothing was intentionally left undone which might have added to the safety of the ship. But this most extraordinary unwillingness to allow the country to have the matter inquired into as it would wish, must necessarily raise opposite opinions as to the responsibility of the Department in the equipment of the Atalanta, and if it be possible that we really have in office scientific bunglers, in whose crude ideas as to the displacement of weights and angles of stability we have put faith, the sooner they are discovered, the better it will be for the country and the credit of the Navy.

Mr. Childers has plainly foreshadowed the intentions of the present Government with regard to the discipline of the Army. Nothing is to be done this year, because it is naturally found necessary to devise some system of punishment which can be substituted for flogging, but next year the lash will be abolished. Experienced officers declare, with almost one voice, that discipline cannot be maintained on board a hired transport or in the field unless the power, when necessary, of inflicting flogging be retained. Certain civilian theorists maintain, on the other hand, that as there is no flogging in foreign armies, it is quite possible to dispense with it in the British Army. These forget that in foreign armies the punishment of death is far more frequent than it is with us, that foreign military service is of a very different nature than is ours, and that the Army of England is constituted of materials widely differing from the armies of the Continent. On the Continent the entire population is liable to military service, and each class furnishes its contingent. Hence the respectable are in the large majority. Besides, desertion is more difficult, and entails graver consequences; and every man's character being known, no one who has committed crime is admitted to the honour of serving. With us, we are obliged to take any recruits who offer, many of these are of the worst moral and social strata; nothing is known of their antecedents, and if it were, we could not afford to be particular. In short, the conditions of service and the composition of armies on the Continent differ so widely from those of England, that we cannot with any amount of reason treat British like foreign soldiers. The cases are not parallel, therefore the discipline ought not to be similar. What strikes us most is that the pseudo-humanitarians who object to keeping the lash in reserve, because a few blackguards dislike being flogged for their crimes, apparently have no sympathy with the luckless inhabitants of the theatre of war. Yet these will be the chief sufferers from the relaxation of discipline which will inevitably follow the total abolition of flogging.

The outgoing troops will consist of one regiment of Cavalry, one battery Royal Horse Artillery, seven batteries of Field Artillery, one battery of Garrison Artillery, and four or five battalions of Infantry, the following having been placed on the list for embarkation, viz.:—

Rear-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh having visited the Coastguard stations at Gorleston, Corton, and Lowestoft, and inspected the men and life-saving apparatus, afterwards returned to London. He will be present at the annual dinner of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday next.

A Cork paper announced on Tuesday that the Duke of Edinburgh would be in command of the ironclad squadron about to sail in a short time for "revolutionary purposes." We hope our foreign friends will not be needlessly alarmed at this very sanguinary, but unfounded statement.

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, honorary president of the Royal Geographical Society, has consented to preside at the annual dinner of the society at Willis's Rooms on Monday next.

On Trinity Monday a special general court was held at the Trinity House, at which the Duke of Edinburgh was re-elected Master, and Admiral Sir R. Collinson, K.C.B., Deputy-Master, of that ancient Corporation for the ensuing year. The Court then proceeded to the parish church of St. Olave, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. F. Hervey, M.A., domestic chaplain to the Prince of Wales.

Although the Coastguard ships which are being refitted at Portsmouth for the annual cruise in conjunction with the Channel Squadron are ordered to be ready for sea by June 20, the Hercules, Captain Townsend, which will bear the flag of Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh as Superintendent of the Reserves, is ordered to be ready by the 15th. She will then join the Belleisle, Captain Barnardiston, at Plymouth, and the two ships will sail together to Holyhead for the purpose of receiving the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, who will embark on board the flagship, and proceed to the Clyde to witness the launch of the new yacht Livadia, which Messrs. Elder and Co. are building for the Emperor of Russia. The Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, which is undergoing her annual refit at Portsmouth, is ordered to be ready by July 1 for the use of the Queen. The work is confined to renovations and embellishments.

Lord Northbrook will probably visit Portsmouth early in June, to be present at some experiments with torpedoes.

The Earl of Northbrook, as First Lord of the Admiralty, has issued invitations for a full-dress banquet at his official residence at the Admiralty to-night, in celebration of her Majesty's birthday, when Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh and a large party of Naval officers and heads of departments will dine with his lordship.

Lord Northbrook, on going out of office as president of the Royal Geographical Society, will probably be succeeded by Lord Aberdare. Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, G.C.B., will change from the post of vice-president to that of councillor. Among the new councillors whose names have been put forward for ballot are Captain Sir George Nares, K.C.B., and Mr. J. K. Laughton, of the Royal Naval College.

Mr. H. F. R. Yorke and Mr. T. Foster have been appointed assistant private secretaries to the Earl of Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Admiral the Hon. Charles Elliot, C.B., Commander-in-Chief at Devonport, left the port on short leave of absence on Wednesday, when his flag was struck on board the Royal Adelaide, and the flag of Rear-Admiral Curme, Superintendent of the dockyard, was shifted from the Indus to the flagship as senior officer during the Commander-in-Chief's absence.

A committee of French officers at the Invalides, Paris, for the examination of "arms and engines of war," appointed as a "mixed committee," have reported that they have been commissioned by the Minister of War to consider a new system of gunnery proposed by Mr. George Fawcus, whose letters on the subject have frequently appeared in these columns, and have recommended its application either to the barbette fire of batteries of forts or of men-of-war. Our authorities, although the system has been brought under their notice, have not, we believe, taken the trouble to inquire into it.

The Council of the Royal Naval School, New Cross, has decided at once to ascertain the number of children of officers of ward-room rank left fatherless by the loss of the Atalanta, with a view of receiving their sons into the school on such terms as the circumstances in each case may render necessary.

By the withdrawal of the Chinese sub-lieutenants Soh Ching Ping and Lin Yung Sing, from the Monarch and Minotaur respectively, the number of foreign officers serving in her Majesty's ships has been reduced to half-a-dozen. Of these, three are Japanese, one Siamese, one Chilian, and one Chinese. At one time China had fully six young officers under training in our Navy, but the warlike preparations of that country has necessitated the recall of these attachés.

The Admiralty will have completed its directions as to the particulars respecting the Atalanta, which shall be inquired into by the committee it is about to appoint, by the second week of June, when the members will assemble. This is very much like leaving an inquiry in the hands of a department whose responsibility is in question, and Lord Northbrook will be unwise if he does not show more readiness than at present to yield to public opinion.

The delay in the issue of the Perak medal still causes annoyance in the Navy. As regards the Army the hitch is explained by Mr. Childers, who says that the list of officers and men claiming the decoration has been sent back to India for verification. But this excuse will hardly apply to the Navy.

The two new Coastguard cruisers, the Rose and Hind, are to be attached to the Hector and Belleisle respectively, and will each have a complement of about twenty-five officers and men. The names of these two vessels do not yet appear in the Navy List, but they are nearly ready for service.

The gunnery staff of the flagships receiving and training ships at the home ports, and of the Coastguard ships, has been revised, and instructions have been given for the complement to be altered accordingly.

Captain Nicholson, the late Naval Attaché for the maritime courts of Europe, has, we hear, received a very satisfactory letter of approval of the manner in which he performed the somewhat delicate duties of the office.

We remarked last week on the time the Vulture had been in commission, suggesting that a new crew should be sent out to her. As the Vulture had new boilers before her present commission, we concluded that the Admiralty would order her recommission on the station; but we hear that, although she is not shown in the Navy List as ordered home, she has received her orders, and is now actually homeward bound.

The following is the programme of the intended movements of the Mediterranean Squadron. The ships, under the command of Admiral Sir Beauchamp Seymour, K.C.B., will leave Malta on June 1, arrive at Corfu 4th, leave 7th for Aveona, arriving 8th; sailing 10th for Durazzo, arriving 11th; sailing 14th for Cattaro, arriving 15th; sailing 16th for Lissa, arriving 18th; sailing 21st for Pola, arriving 25th; sailing 28th for Trieste, arriving 29th; sailing July 5 for Malamanco, Venice, arriving July 6; sailing 13th for Ancona, arriving 14th; sailing 16th for Manfredonia, arriving 19th; sailing 20th for Aveona, arriving 22nd; sailing 23rd for Corfu, returning there on the 24th. From Corfu the squadron will visit Salerno, Naples, Civita Vecchia (Rome), Spezia, Genoa, Ville Franche, Barcelona, Carthagena, Malaga, Gibraltar.

Rear-Admiral Gore Jones, C.B., intends to leave Bombay in his flagship Euryalus on Tuesday next, for Trincomalee and a visit to the southern portion of his command.

A Naval pension of £50 per annum is vacant by the death of Commander William St. L. Quinlan, who received the reward last year, and the retirement of Captain Cortland H. Simpson places a good-service pension of £150 a year at the disposal of the new First Lord of the Admiralty.

Vice-Admiral Robert Coote, C.B., having paid a visit to Canton, has proceeded in his flagship to the northern division of his command, and will shortly proceed to Japanese waters. Unless circumstances order otherwise, the Admiral will not return to Hong Kong until about September next.

We presume that the name of the Atalanta will be removed from the Navy List for June, and that the accounts of officers and men will be made up from returns in office. As allotments to relatives must also cease, immediate steps will be adopted for the award of the usual year's pay of their late husbands to widows of those lost in the ill-fated ship. An Atalanta fund will probably be started at Portsmouth, and if so, it will be well to place it in the hands of those who so ably managed the working of the Eurydice fund. Sad, indeed, it is that another such a duty should fall upon Portsmouth officials so quickly after winding-up their labours on behalf of those of the former training-ship.

The Rev. Charles Dawes, retired Sub-Lieutenant, R.N., has been given the chaplaincy of the Missions to Seamen at Hastings, Mr. Thomas Brassey having assisted in a liberal manner in providing funds for keeping the fisherman's chapel in repair.

The following are the addresses of ships at present homeward bound. The Charybdis, Cape of Good Hope, on arrival; Frolic, Aden, to await arrival; Growler, Devonport; Hornet, Aden, on arrival; Plover, Portsmouth; Spartan, Suez, on arrival; Vulture, Suez; and the Vestal, Malta. The Hart has arrived at Devonport.

The War Office has addressed a circular letter, inviting the inventors of machine-guns to submit a specimen of their weapon, adapted to fire the Westley Richards solid-drawn Martini-Henry cartridge, to compete at trials to be carried out at Shoeburyness before the select Committee appointed to inquire into the relative merits of small-bore mitrailleurs, the Boxer cartridge being definitely condemned.

Captain Evans, the Admiralty Hydrographer, did not intend to make a move from the Vice-Presidents' List of the Royal Geographical Society, but we hear that an effort is being made to put forward another officer for this post. The result of this effort will be seen at the ballot on Monday, and few will be surprised if Captain Evans should lose his seat.

Rear-Admiral Hoskin has postponed, and, we fear, withdrawn, his paper on "The Defence of the Australian Colonies," which he had arranged to read before the Royal United Service Institution. As Admiral Hoskins so recently served on the station as Commodore, the paper was looked forward to by those interested in the important question of the defence of our Colonies. But it has been suggested that, as there is a Commission now engaged on inquiring into colonial defence, a Lord of the Admiralty should not take the question in hand independently.

Lieutenant Charles Bell, R.N., on the Retired List, Lieutenant-Instructor of the London Brigade of Naval Artillery Volunteers, is, we hear, a candidate for the vacant post of Naval Knight of Windsor.

The Sachsen, which was recently put in commission at Kiel for the first time, is the first of six ironclad corvettes built mainly for defensive coasting service, for which purpose they combine comparatively small draught with the utmost possible speed. The Sachsen is of 5,034 tons, with engines of 5,600 horse-power, which will drive her, in moderate weather, at the rate of 16 to 17 knots. Her ship's company consists of 318 hands, all told.

It is stated that Messrs. Krupp, of Essen, have supplied the Chinese Government up to now with no fewer than 150 pieces of heavy ordnance of modern design, all of them breech-loaders. That number includes seven 17-centimètre guns and four 21-centimètre guns, which have been mounted at the Taku Forts to protect Pekin from the seaboard. These forts are commanded by Chinese officers, who have learnt how to serve the guns at Spandau.

A Nordenfeldt machine-gun drill, carefully drawn up under the immediate supervision of Commander Custance, will shortly be issued to the Service.

At Westminster, George Swain was charged on Thursday, on remand, with obtaining money by false pretences from Lord Robert Bruce, Sir John Henry Thorold, the Hon. Richard Bingham, Sir Claude de Crespigny, and others. The prisoner's plan was to obtain the names and addresses of gentlemen who had served in her Majesty's ships or regiments. He then wrote a pitiful tale, associating himself with old circumstances, and obtained loans from these gentlemen. In the case of Lord Robert Bruce, he pretended that he had been an officer on board the Hercules, and in that of Mr. Bingham, on board the Immortalité; in that of Sir John Thorold, he had pretended to have been an officer of the 17th Regiment. The prisoner will be again brought before the magistrate on Wednesday at noon. The arrest of this swindler is due to the energy and perseverance of Inspector Swanson, of the Criminal Investigation Department.

The Cavalry regiments under orders for Aldershot are the 1st Life Guards from Windsor, the 4th Dragoon Guards from York, the 4th Hussars from Shorncliffe, the 5th Lancers from Woolwich, and the 8th Hussars from Hounslow. The regiments which are to constitute General FitzWygram's command for the drill season are the 1st Life Guards, 5th and 7th Dragoon Guards, 5th Lancers, and 11th and 18th Hussars. At the end of the summer the 1st Life Guards, 5th Dragoon Guards, 5th Lancers, and 11th and 18th Hussars will leave the station, when the 4th Dragoon Guards and 4th Hussars are to join the Division, and will, with the 7th Dragoon Guards, make up the Cavalry Brigade for the winter. The decision of the Horse Guards not to move the 4th Hussars to the Camp early in the season is, we think, a wise one. The regiment has but lately returned from India, and its ranks are filled with young soldiers, who could not be expected to hold their own against seasoned regiments. It would be more than madness to put the regiment under canvas in its present state; in fact, it would have the effect of undoing all the good that has been done, and the authorities are to be commended for having taking a common-sense view of the matter.

We are pleased to learn that a subscription is being raised for the benefit of the unfortunate Mrs. Emmett, widow of Major-General Emmett, R.E., a distinguished Peninsular officer, to whose distressing case we have on several occasions felt it our duty to refer. It does not redound to our credit as a nation that the friendless widow of an old and most meritorious officer should thus be required to appeal to the public to provide her with the means of subsistence. But there is no help for it, for hard as Mrs. Emmett has striven to obtain a Government allowance, all her applications have hitherto been refused, because her late husband committed the military offence of marrying late in life. The friends of her late husband have, therefore, determined to do what they can to raise a fund for the purpose of purchasing an annuity for her, and we shall be happy to receive and acknowledge any subscriptions which may be forwarded to us on behalf of so charitable an object.

Minor operations last week proved a fiasco at Aldershot. An advanced guard was to harass a rear guard, but unfortunately the former were started from a point much nearer the tail of the imaginary army, which was being covered by a rear guard, than the rear guard itself. The consequence was immediate interception and such hopeless confusion, that nothing was left but to send all the troops home to barracks. The scouting of the 11th Hussars was the only thing worthy of admiration; this wonderfully smart and efficient regiment is said to be going to remain at Aldershot another year, and, for the sake of example, it is fervently to be hoped that the report is a true one.

We have reason for believing that the occupation of St. John's Wood Barracks by a battery of Royal Horse Artillery, determined upon by the late Secretary of State for War, may not improbably be cancelled, owing to the nervous apprehension of unpopularity which the new Ministry fear they may incur by quartering artillery in the Metropolis. This strange dread of familiarising the populace with the Army, in this case so flattering to the scientific corps, is, it would appear, to be repeated in a new and almost ridiculous manner. It may not be generally known that the head-quarters of a company of Royal Engineers has for some time been stationed in London, without any feeling of alarm having been experienced by the inhabitants, and that the Artillery is the only branch of the Service which is without due representation in the capital of the Empire.

D Battery C Brigade R.H.A. is now in its fifth year of service at Dorchester. Colonel Denne has been there the same length of time. Change is sadly needed in every respect. The latter officer has also had considerably over twenty years' home service without a break, though it must be admitted that within that time he has been for a few months to the Channel Islands. A return of the home service of above six Lieutenant-Colonels of Horse Artillery now at home would be a very instructive document.

Major-General E. Price, C.B., becomes Lieutenant-General, in succession to Lieutenant-General H. S. Rowan, C.B., Royal Artillery, deceased; Colonel G. V. Johnson, R.A., becoming Major-General, and a run of promotion going through the Royal Artillery.

To-day there will be, no doubt, a very great crowd assembled to see the Queen's Birthday Parade at the Horse Guards. The occasion and the circumstances of the celebration render the annual event one of great public interest, though very few, comparatively, can witness the ceremony. Although there are in the present Government gentlemen of very advanced views on the subject of monarchical institutions and their concomitants, we do not suppose any of them would now join in the cry, which was once on a time in many Radical mouths, of "Down with the Guards!" but there are rumours that changes or reductions are not improbable, if some ardent reformers have their way. The surrender of the advantages which commissions in the Guards formerly conferred on the holders has left the Line and the other branches of the Service but little to complain of. If the officers of the Guards were scattered up and down through the various regiments of the Regular Army, their social position would still, in this best of all possible worlds, secure them a fair share of the good appointments; but the abolition of the Guards, if such a measure were ever to be carried out, would, without reference to its political aspect, deprive the country of its most solid reserve of officers and men, and the Army of its standard of military excellence and efficiency. The non-commissioned officers of the Guards are alone a tower of strength to the Service, and the officers are ever to the front where volunteering for arduous duty is concerned.

There is no appointment which might be abolished with greater advantage to the Service than that of Inspector-General of Artillery. This officer, accompanied by an aide-de-camp, makes an inspection of the whole of the Royal Artillery in the United Kingdom, with the exception of that portion of it quartered at Woolwich, once every year. Inspections are, doubtless, salutary and necessary, but there cannot be any reason why the Royal Artillery should be put through the mill so much more frequently, and at so much greater cost, than the rest of the Army. Every district in which Artillery is stationed is presided over by a regimental full Colonel, who is usually assisted by a Brigade-Major and an Adjutant; and surely the inspection of this official, followed by that of the General officer commanding the district, is sufficient to ensure the efficiency of the several branches of this arm of the Service, as far as its condition and interior economy are concerned. Complaints have, with great reason, been made at a certain large station, by the General in command, of the number of days that the Artillery is rendered non-effective during the drill season, owing to the inordinate amount of inspection that it is put through; for needless to say, when the latter takes place, the battery or batteries inspected are not available for general field-days. Should the Government take the wise and economical step of abolishing the appointment, it would be found that, while the expenditure of over £1,000 a year, to say nothing of an enormous bill for travelling expenses, is avoided, its loss, as far as efficiency is concerned, would not be perceived. The Auxiliary branches of Artillery, Militia, and Volunteers are not visited by the Inspector-General of Artillery, but are left entirely to the lieutenant-colonels in command of sub-districts, of which there are twelve, so that the appointment of the former is simply valueless, as far as these important services are concerned. Moreover, he is not allowed to inspect the Royal Artillery under command of the major-general at Woolwich; and we must conclude, that if his supervision of these batteries is considered unnecessary, his inspection of those under other General officers might well be dispensed with. With regard to the nature of the inspection itself, it is far too much restricted to minor detail, such as the position of a towel in a man's kit, the fitting of straps and buckles, and general "pipeclay," while the all-important parts of an artillerist's duties are utterly ignored; the time-honoured sentiment that Horse Artillery are smart cavalry soldiers handicapped by the presence of their guns being, we fear, as prevalent as ever, not only with the Horse, but also with the Field Artillery. Our batteries are universally acknowledged to surpass those of all other nations in appearance and material; how lamentable it is that in knowledge of gunnery they should be so far in arrears! Reform is sadly needed, and in no way could it commence better than with the reduction of a practically useless appointment, and the substitution of an instructor of gunnery in every district, whose duty during the winter months should be to instruct the officers and men of every battery in turn in the district, each being struck off all duty for the time. Let him report confidentially and direct to Army Head-quarters, and let him supervise the practice, like a musketry instructor of cavalry and infantry. We should then soon have better shooting, and a marked improvement in the knowledge of gunnery, among the non-commissioned officers and men; while spit and polish, strap and buckle might well be left to the watchful care of the Colonel on the Staff, and General commanding the district.

THE BRIGHTON VOLUNTEER REVIEW.

(BY ONE WHO SERVED ON THE STAFF.)

The Volunteers who took part in the Review at Brighton on March 29 last ought to feel greatly elated at the encomiums lavished upon them by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, as well as by the several Generals, and other distinguished officers who were present on that occasion. No one who was there can deny that the general conduct, discipline, and bearing of the Volunteers were anything else but excellent. There is, however, one General officer—a sincere admirer of our citizen soldiers—who, whilst giving all credit to the Volunteers for their military bearing, &c., yet ventures to pass a mild censure upon them in respect of certain shortcomings. This censure, coming, as it does, from a distinguished and experienced soldier, will, it is felt certain, cause no heart-burning in the patriotic breasts of our Volunteer soldiers; but, on the contrary, will spur them to greater efforts. The following remarks, contained in the official report of Major-General Cameron, C.B., are the censorious ones referred to, viz.:—

> "There was a marked improvement in the manner in which the Volunteers performed the movements, to what I recollect when I last took part on a similar occasion; but I am bound to say that there is but very little knowledge on the part of officers of manœuvring, or taking the initiative on their own responsibility, when favourable opportunities offer. They hardly moved without a succession of orders, and, in fact, do not yet understand how to lead their men. The same must be said of the non-commissioned officers. I think, with more experienced officers and non-commissioned officers, the Volunteers would require but a short period of continuous practice to make them an efficient fighting body, for the superior intelligence of the men is undeniable."

The writer, who was present at the Review, can endorse one statement of the Major-General's,—that which refers to the not taking the initiative when opportunity offers, as he, on one occasion in particular, observed a captain, in command of a flank company, quietly allow the enemy to form up at right angles to his position, and at a distance of only twenty yards pour in a succession of volleys, the reason given by this captain for not wheeling his company so as to check the movement being that he had no orders to do so. The consequence was that his entire regiment was put out of action. "We do not mind our faults being pointed out to us," said a Volunteer officer, "by those entitled to criticise, and we are always glad if officers of the Regular Forces will take sufficient interest in us Volunteers, and tell us when we do wrong; but what we do strongly object to is the cold-water that certain people are in the habit of sprinkling rather plentifully upon us." These are honest and straightforward words, and they show how much in earnest the Volunteers are. An officer of one of the steadiest and most efficient of the regiments assembled at Brighton said to a Linesman, "What we want in the Volunteers are a few good officers from the Line; there should be, in every regiment, at least two or three, to whom both officers and men could look up, and have confidence in; men who have the knowledge of their profession at their finger's ends." This officer was asked if he knew that a suggestion had been made for an experienced Line officer to be appointed to each consolidated battalion of Volunteers. His reply was:—"I have heard of it, and the idea finds considerable favour amongst us; but there are those—professedly friends of the force—who deprecate the carrying into effect any such idea. I, for one, would hail with pleasure such an appointment being made to my regiment." The defects pointed out by Major-General Cameron can easily be remedied by increased attention, and officers should not be afraid of acting upon their own judgment. It is not enough for officers to give the word of command only, they should see that the orders are carried out. In these days of extended formations, it is an absolute necessity that commanders, whether of battalions or companies, should be able to act independently, and to seize at once upon an opportunity of counteracting an enemy's movements. For instance, had the captain already alluded to but wheeled his company back, and presented a full front to the enemy on his left, who was deploying into Line, he would, by a volley or two, have thrown him into utter confusion, instead of allowing himself and his regiment to be placed hors de combat. Whistles are carried by Line officers at drill, and these unmusical, though useful, instruments are a very great assistance to the human voice. When a high wind is blowing, or a rattling musketry fire is being carried on, the voice cannot be heard distinctly. It was observed at the Review that these whistles, though carried almost universally, were seldom brought into use, hence, perhaps, the "succession of orders," &c., referred to in the Major-General's remarks. In concluding these remarks upon the Volunteers, the writer begs to say that no disparagement whatever is intended; that they are penned in the interests of the whole Volunteer Army by one who has a high regard for our "home defenders," and who, should the time ever come for defending our shores from a foreign foe, will gladly shoulder a rifle, and take his place side by side with the British Volunteer, so greatly does he admire him and appreciate the patriotic feelings which have prompted him to undertake voluntarily the defence of our shores.

The Army.

1st Life Guards. The Grand Duke of Hesse and suite, attended by Major-Gen. Du Plat, Equerry in ordinary to her Majesty, visited the quarters, Spital Cavalry Barracks, Windsor, the other day, and was conducted by Col. Keith Fraser to the riding-school, where the C Troop were engaged in a sword competition. The band, under Mr. W. Van den Hemel, played upon the lawn during the visit. The Grand Duke, after inspecting the barrack buildings, quarters, and stables, quitted Spital about 1 o'clock.

2nd Life Guards. The adjutancy having fallen vacant by the retirement of Lieut. Wake, the commanding officer will be called upon to recommend a non-commissioned officer of the regiment for a commission as 2nd lieut. to fill the vacancy.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. If the regiment can be spared from the Cape, it has been definitely decided to send it to India with the 1880-81 reliefs. Capt. C. Gandy, late of the regiment, died at Barndale House, Alnwick, on the 25th inst., aged 40 years.

3rd Dragoon Guards. Brevet Major Stewart arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday, in the Conway Castle, with Sir Garnet Wolseley.

4th Dragoon Guards. The regiment will go to Aldershot at the close of the drill season, and remain there for the winter.

5th Dragoon Guards. It is now certain that the regiment will leave Aldershot at the end of the summer drills.

7th Dragoon Guards. It has been arranged that the regiment shall remain at Aldershot for the winter.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). Capt. Johnstone has vacated his appointment as extra aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. Lieut. James is a candidate for admission to the Staff College, and has been noted for attendance at the competitive examination next month.

3rd Hussars. The regiment is to remain at Colchester for the winter.

4th Hussars will leave Shorncliffe at the end of the summer for Aldershot, and take over quarters there for the winter, an arrangement which cannot fail to meet with the approval of all experienced soldiers, seeing how recently the corps has returned from foreign service, and that its ranks are full of recruits.

5th Lancers are to proceed shortly from Woolwich to Aldershot for the summer drills.

6th Dragoons. It has been finally arranged that, in the event of the King's Dragoon Guards being detained at the Cape, the Inniskillings shall embark for India with the 1880-81 reliefs.

7th Hussars. The Irish Times hears that Brevet Major M'Calmont is to be promoted a Lieut.-Col. by brevet, in recognition of his services on Sir Garnet Wolseley's Staff at the Cape. Major M'Calmont arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday, with Sir Garnet Wolseley.

10th Hussars. The Irish Times says:—"Capt. Brabazon, 10th Hussars, is, we understand, to receive a brevet majority, in recognition of his recent services with the Cabul Field Force, with which he has fulfilled the duties of brigade-major, and shown a devotion to duty which has earned for him the gratitude of all ranks, from Generals downwards. Capt. Brabazon was in the Army before as a captain in the Brigade of Guards, and after quitting the Service was gazetted to a lieutenancy in the 10th Hussars in 1874, as a reward of his services in the Ashantee campaign of 1873-74, during which he served as a volunteer under Sir Garnet Wolseley."

11th Hussars will leave Aldershot after the drill season.

14th Hussars. Brevet Major Russell will be attached to the 20th Hussars, at Newbridge, for duty during the summer drills at the Curragh. Capt. M'Taggart's retirement will give no promotion, he having been supernumerary to the establishment as a Yeomanry adjt.

15th Hussars. The regiment is under orders of readiness to come home from India with the 1880-81 reliefs, when it will occupy quarters at Shorncliffe.

18th Hussars proceed from Hounslow to Aldershot for the drill season.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Lieut.-Gen. H. S. Rowan, C.B., Col.-Commandant, died on the 26th inst., at 57 Oakley Street, Chelsea, S.W. He served throughout the Syrian campaign in 1840-41, and was present at the bombardment and capture of Beyrout (Naval medal with clasp, Syrian Turkish medal, and brevet of major). Also in the Crimean campaign from Sept. 1854 to Jan. 1855, including the battle of Inkerman and siege of Sebastopol, in the Trenches with the siege train and bombardment of Oct. 17 (medal with two clasps, C.B., 5th class of the Medjidie, and Turkish medal). He joined the Army, June 20, 1832; became major-gen., March 6, 1868; lieut.-gen., Oct. 1, 1877; and col.-commandant, May 5, 1879.

Among the passengers who left India lately for England in the s.s. Duke of Sutherland was Viscount Guillamore, late R.A., well known in Madras society as Major the Hon. S. H. O'Grady.

Lieut. J. J. Porteous, 5th Brig., was severely wounded lately in action in Afghanistan, whilst serving with a force under Brigdr.-Gen. Geb at Mazeena against the Shinwarris.

Major W. R. Barlow, 8th Brig., has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs.

Lieuts. J. S. Frith, D. C. Dean-Pitt, and W. A. Plant have vacated their appointments on the Staff of the Governor of Bombay.

"A Field Officer" writes:—On reading a recent number of your Gazette having reference to crime in the Army, I find that the largest amount of crime has been in the Royal Artillery, and that during the year 1878 about one in ten of the whole strength of the regiment was tried by court-martial. Now, Sir, I can point out, for the information of the Secretary of State for War, the chief cause of this dreadful state of things, and that is the transfer of the old soldiers, both non-commissioned officers and gunners, to the Coast Brigade, and the places of the former being filled up by inexperienced boys. I have no hesitation in saying, that hundreds of cases of trial by court-martial are caused by the improper manner in which the young soldiers are dealt with by the striplings now promoted to be non-commissioned officers. I speak with the authority of nearly 40 years' service in the regiment, and I submit that the men of the Coast Brigade should be at once retransferred to the depôts, to assist in teaching the young recruits not only how to perform their duties, but the manner in which they should submit to regimental discipline. There are plenty of invalids who can take the place of the effective men of the Coast Brigade at the forts round the coasts, where the latter are now idling their lives away, positively not knowing how to kill time."

A correspondent writes from Afghanistan:—"In the Army and Navy Gazette of March 13 is a paragraph purporting to give a list of the officers specially mentioned by Lieut.-Gen. Sir F. Roberts in his despatches relating to the period Dec. 10 to 24, 1879. In this list the name of Major C. A. Gorham is most strangely omitted, though he is the senior of all the majors mentioned; and as the Lieut.-Gen. was pleased to give him his special thanks in his despatch for his services in utilising, making ammunition for, and fighting the captured guns, when no other artillery officer could be spared, I cannot understand why it has been left out of your list, and presume it must be a mistake, especially as your list comprises the names of a number of majors who were employed only on purely departmental duties, and were never under fire at all."

The London correspondent of the Western Daily Mercury writes:—"I hear that a little shuffling of the 'cards political' is going on in the city of Hereford, with the object of securing for Col. Arbuthnot, R.A., one of the seats now filled by Messrs. Pulley and Reid, Liberals, elected the other day. Messrs. Pulley and Reid, who are threatened with a petition, will, it is said, retire, and that immediately afterwards writs will be issued for the return of new Members. Thereupon Mr. Pulley and Col. Arbuthnot will be nominated, and their return secured without opposition. The meaning of this curious and, may I add? dubious move, is that Mr. Reid shall be dropped. The case of the Conservatives, I certainly think, must be strong indeed. Hereford has a rather curious political history, however, and this chapter of which we now hear is not the least remarkable."

Capt. W. R. Fox and Lieut. A. G. Creagh arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday, with Sir Garnet Wolseley.

Lieut.-Col. B. F. Schreiber has been ordered to join the Northern District, on his recent promotion from the command of a battery.

Capt. W. Martin, Depôt Baty. 3rd Brig., is about to retire on temporary half-pay, in consequence of the state of his health.

Brevet Col. F. T. Whinyates, C Brig. R.H.A., has been ordered from Woolwich to Dublin.

Lieut. F. Waldron has been transferred from the Depôt Baty. A Brig. R.H.A., to the B Baty., at Dublin, vice Spencer, promoted, and ordered from Woolwich to Dublin.

Capt. F. C. Ord, 10th Brig., has been appointed to the adjutancy of the 19th Lancashire Artillery Volunteers.

Capt. D. W. Lawrell, 11th Brig. (late Madras), has been appointed adjutant of the Orkney Artillery Volunteers.

The following batteries have been selected to proceed home from India with the 1880-81 reliefs, viz.:—I (Major H. C. Magenis's) Baty. C Brig., R.H.A.; A Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major R. C. Drysdale), B Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major J. H. Blackley), C Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major W. R. Stirke), D Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major A. C. Davidson), E Baty. 3rd Brig. (Brevet Lieut.-Col. T. M. Hazlerigg), F Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major D. S. Pemberton), G Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major J. Charles), H Baty. 3rd Brig. (Major H. J. T. Shea), No. 9 Baty. 8th Brig. (Major F. B. Roberts), No. 10 Baty. 8th Brig. (Major W. R. Barlow), No. 14 Baty. 8th Brig. (Major B. Yaldwyn), and No. 2 Baty. 9th Brig. (Major C. E. Reid). The batteries to proceed out from England consist of D Baty. C Brig., R.H.A. (Major H. W. Shakerley); B Baty. 1st Brig. (Major W. F. Hutchinson), G Baty. 1st Brig. (Major E. G. H. Alexander), and No. 4 Baty. 9th Brig. (Major J. P. Nolan).

Lieut. A. F. Liddell vacates his appointment as aide-de-camp to Lord Lytton, and reverts to duty with a battery. Lieut. Liddell has received an appointment to the Horse Artillery Battery, stationed at Umballa. Lieut. Liddell, when attached to F A R.H.A., and also to Swinley's Mountain Battery at Cabul, during the operations of Dec. last, did good service, and his appointment permanently to the R.H.A. proves that the Authorities at home have deemed his services worthy of recognition, although his love for his profession and a pardonable desire to see some fighting were the means of his absenting himself from a levée, and resulted in his dismissal from the Viceroy's Staff. Lieut. Liddell's commission bears date Sept. 12, 1872.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

A London correspondent says:—"The Sappers have been very hardly treated by the Government. When some of them went out to Zululand, they were told they must put the most of their kit into store, as they could not be allowed to take with them, when they went to the front, more than a certain quantity. They obeyed, of course, but you may imagine their dismay when, on their return, they discovered all their things had been stolen. The worst of it is, too, that the Government refuse too make them good, so that the unfortunate men are deprived of everything in consequence of the gross carelessness of those who were responsible for the safe custody of the goods, and get no recompense for the loss of their property from the War Office. This is the way to make the Service popular."

Lieut. J. C. M. Beresford has vacated his appointment as aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

Grenadier Guards. Col. the Hon. W. H. P. Carington, M.P., has been again returned for Wycombe without opposition, in accepting office in her Majesty's Household under the present Administration.

1st, or Royal Scots. The 2nd Batn. has been placed under orders to return home from India with the 1880-81 reliefs. Capt. Isaacson, 2nd Batn., has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, and Lieut. Fenton for nine months, on medical certificate.

4th King's Own. Col. Bray, C.B., who has lately arrived in India from Zululand with the 2nd Batn., is named for a five years' appointment as brigdr.-gen. on the Staff of the Bombay Army.

5th Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is to return to England with the 1880-81 reliefs. The Batn., from Peshawur, was ordered up to Afghanistan, when the mail left, to relieve the 1st Batn. 12th. As a result of incendiary preaching by Mollahs, the tribes near Jellalabad recently manifested a spirit of active hostility. Several attempts at robbery were made. On the 19th the Mohmands had the temerity to enter the Besud plain, opposite Jellalabad, and were immediately attacked by 600 infantry of the 1st Batn. 5th and 12th Foot, two mountain guns, and one squadron of the Central India Horse, and were routed with loss. As the cavalry cut them off from the hills, a few desperate men shut themselves in a bastion of a ruined fort, which was speedily carried by Capt. Kilgour, of the 5th Fusiliers. Col. Rowland was slightly wounded, and three privates of the 5th and 12th Foot and three men of the Central India Horse severely. Quiet has now been completely restored.

6th Regiment. Capt. Doyne is transferred from the 1st Batn., at Aden, to the 2nd Batn. in Bengal, on promotion, and Lieut. Etheridge from the 2nd to the 1st Batn.

7th Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is to be conveyed from Queenstown to Pembroke in H.M.S. Assistance, about the middle of next month.

9th Regiment. Capt. James remains with the 1st Batn. on promotion. Lieut. Vesey is transferred from the 2nd to the 1st Batn.

12th Regiment. The 1st Batn. has been ordered back to India from Afghanistan, the 1st Batn. 5th Fusiliers moving up from Peshawur in relief. The 12th will probably go to the same hill-station to recruit their health, which has been much impaired by over a year's residence in tents. Lieut. Perceval has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on medical certificate.

13th Light Infantry. Capt. Madden, 2nd Batn., has been ordered home from India to join the depôt, vice Capt. Randall, retired.

14th Regiment. When the mail left India, the 2nd Batn. at Lundi Kotal had been ordered to Peshawur, to relieve the 1st Batn. 5th. Capt. Noyes, 2nd Batn., was slightly wounded in a skirmish lately in Afghanistan, when serving with a force under Gen. Gib at Mazeena.

17th Regiment. Lieut. Stewart, 1st Batn., a probationer, squadron officer, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Nov. 2, 1877.

18th Royal Irish. The 1st Batn., at Peshawur, was under orders for Lundi Kotal when the mail left India to relieve the 2nd Batn. 14th.

19th Regiment. An entertainment, under the management of Qrmr. Hedingham, was given at St. George's, Bermuda, lately, by the 1st Batn., in aid of the Irish Relief Fund. The sum of £20 was realised, and forwarded to Dublin. The local papers give great praise to the manager and his company for their energetic efforts towards so good a cause.

20th Regiment. Col. Davis, who was for over seven years in command of the 2nd Batn., took his final departure from Mullingar on the 20th inst. The esteem and respect in which he was held were fully evinced by the enthusiasm with which he was greeted by the battalion when he appeared before it previous to his departure. The horse which was attached to the car that was to convey him to the railway-station was unyoked, and the car drawn by men of the battalion; and even when there he was carried on the shoulders of his men from the car to the platform, on which was assembled a large number of the gentry and inhabitants of the town, with whom he was most popular. Most of the officers of the battalion were present, and the band played tunes appropriate for the occasion.

21st Fusiliers. The Transvaal Argus relates the following:—"Capt. Burr, one of the officers of the garrison here, recently went on an expedition in the direction of Standerton. He was accompanied by his orderly and a Kafir servant. On arriving at a farm the party outspanned, and the Kafir was despatched to the homestead to purchase milk and other necessaries. The good man of the house, who was a Boer, expostulated with the Kafir as to his master outspanning on a spot which was not a public outspan, and we hear he immediately proceeded to horsewhip the poor native, who was in no way responsible for his master's act, even if a trespass had been proved. Capt. Burr, on coming up shortly afterwards, complained of the Boer's conduct to the Kafir, whereupon several other Boers with guns came out, and the worthy farmer also treated the officer to a good taste of the lash. Capt. Burr's orderly then came upon the scene armed with a revolver, which he pointed at the Boers and threatened to fire. This frightened them, as they all went away, remarking that they would stand no chance against that weapon, as six shots to their one could be fired with it. The matter is being thoroughly investigated, and we hope in this case the Government will not slacken its hands, as has been its wont in regard to similar conduct on the part of this class of people hitherto."

23rd Fusiliers. The 1st Batn. is to embark for India in September or October next.

26th Cameronians. Major Hale has two years' boys' service, and will not, therefore, be retired under the seven-years' clause at present. The Irish Times states that "Capt. Knollys, C.M.G., is about to take up regimental duty. Capt. Knollys was promoted to a company in the Cameronians in February, 1877, from a lieutenancy in the 32nd, in recognition of his services in Fiji, and has not yet seen his new regiment, having been absent on Staff employment."

29th Regiment. Lieut. Chapman has been appointed an extra aide-de-camp to Sir James Ferguson, Governor of Bombay.

32nd Light Infantry. Major Stabb arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday, with Sir Garnet Wolseley. Lieuts. Turnbull and Clarke obtain their companies, vice Capts. Hardinge and Trueman, retired.

36th Regiment will embark at Liverpool about the middle or end of next month, in H.M.S. Assistance, for Queenstown.

37th Regiment will leave Pembroke Dock about the middle of next month for Queenstown, in H.M.S. Assistance, on relief by the 1st Batn. 7th Fusiliers.

38th Regiment is to proceed to India with the 1880-81 reliefs.

39th Regiment. Capt. Young, brigade-major, Rawul Pindee, has been granted leave from India to England, on medical certificate.

40th Regiment. Lieut. O'Brien is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed squadron officer 1st Punjab Cavalry, on probation.

41st Regiment. Should a fifth battalion of Infantry proceed to India with the 1880-81, reliefs it has been decided to select this regiment for the service, and it would embark at Portsmouth early in 1881.

43rd Light Infantry. Mr. Onslow asked the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, on Monday, whether there was any recent information in the Colonial Office regarding the present state of the graves of officers and non-commissioned officers of her Majesty's 43rd and 68th Light Infantry, buried at Tamangar, in New Zealand; and if not, whether he would cause inquiries to be made. Mr. Grant Duff, in reply to the hon. Member, said, "We have no information upon the subject, but if the hon. Member will communicate with me, we will make any inquiries which he may desire."

45th Regiment. It is notified in divisional orders at Aldershot that "H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to approve of Capt. Thrupp, 45th Regt., being appointed deputy-assistant-adjutant and quartermaster-general while holding the post of inspector of Army signalling at the camp, in succession to Major le Mesurier, R.E., whose term of service in the appointment has expired."

48th Regiment. It is intended to bring this regiment home from India next winter, provided five battalions of Infantry are sent out from England, otherwise it will remain for another six months in India, returning about Oct. 1881.

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. Heseltine, R.M.L.I., Lieut. Marriott, R.M.A., and Lieut. Skipwith, R.M.L.I., embarked on board H.M.'s troopship Himalaya on the 25th inst., for passage to the Mediterranean, to join their respective ships Monarch and Thunderer. Lieuts. Goldsmid and Powell also proceed to India in the same vessel, on transfer to the Indian Staff Corps from the Royal Marines.

50th Queen's Own. Capt. Elmhirst is about to be appointed to the adjutancy of the 38th Middlesex (Artists') Rifle Volunteers.

51st Light Infantry. Lord Waveney intends on an early day to ask the Under-Secretary for War whether the details of the death of Lieut. Thurlow have been correctly reported in the public Press, and whether it is proposed to recommend that any special mark of her Majesty's favour be conferred upon his surviving comrade, 2nd Lieut. Reid.

54th Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Shiffner has been granted leave from India to England for twelve months, on private affairs.

57th Regiment. Col. Clarke, C.B., half-pay, late of the regiment, has embarked for the Cape, to assume the duties of his appointment as Commandant-General of the Colonial Forces. Lieut. Michel arrived home on Tuesday from the Cape, with Sir Garnet Wolseley.

59th Regiment. It has being arranged to bring this regiment home from India with next year's reliefs.

60th Rifles. The 2nd Batn. is to return to England next month from India. Capt. O'Brien, 3rd Batn., arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday, with Sir Garnet Wolseley.

64th Regiment left Templemore on Thursday for the Curragh. Capt. Savage is about to retire on a pension, after 25 years' service. This officer was promoted to an unattached company on the disbandment of the Royal Canadian Rifles, he being at the time the senior subaltern of that corps, with 15 years' service.

66th Regiment. We learn from Candahar by last mail that "there is talk of an expedition to Maruf. If it takes place, the force will be composed of some companies of the 66th Foot, the 19th N.I., and perhaps two guns."

67th Regiment. The following appears in the General Orders by the Commander-in-Chief in India:—"Her Majesty the Queen has been pleased to approve, on the recommendation of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, of the grant of a silver medal for distinguished conduct in the field to each of the soldiers named below, without annuity or gratuity:—67th Foot—Colour-Serjt. G. Wheeler, Corpl. W. Heath, and Corpl. M. Woolley—as a reward for their gallant conduct in the action near Doaba, Afghanistan, on Nov. 10, 1879, when opposed to a very superior force."

68th Light Infantry. Capt. Covey obtains his majority, vice Major Kay, retired. See 43rd L.I.

72nd Highlanders. Her Majesty has been pleased to approve, on the recommendation of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, of the grants of a silver medal for distinguished conduct in the field to the following—viz., Colour-Serjt. G. Jacobs, Lance-Corpl. J. Clunas, and Pte. P. Gillon—as a reward for their conspicuous gallantry in the recent engagements near Cabul.

73rd Regiment is to come home from India with the 1880-81 reliefs. Lieut. Wiley has been granted leave from India to England for six months, on urgent private affairs.

77th Regiment will embark for India towards the end of the year. Lieut. Westmacott has been confirmed in his appointment as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. the Hon. H. H. Clifford, V.C., K.C.M.G., commanding the troops at the Cape of Good Hope.

78th Highlanders. 2nd Lieut. Christopher has been appointed an aide-de-camp to Sir James Fergusson, the Governor of Bombay.

81st Regiment. Lieut. Satterthwaite obtains his company, vice Brevet Major Faircloth, retired.

83rd Regiment is to be brought home from India next winter. A correspondent writes:—"There are things 'no fella' can understand,' and the promotion in last Tuesday's Gazette of Lieut. Meynell, 98th Foot, to a company in the 83rd Regt. is one of those things. Of course, the man behind the scenes knows all about it. Capt. Meynell may count himself a very fortunate fellow, seeing that there are upwards of eighty subalterns senior to himself, all probably thirsting for a view of the promised land, and some of them have field-service to back up their claims. The linked-battalion system is evidently an exploded one, else why was not the senior lieutenant, with over 11½ years' service, of the 86th Regt. (the linked battalion of the 83rd), not promoted to the vacancy? The second lieutenant of the former regiment is senior to the late Lieut. Meynell! I have no interest, beyond the love of fair-play, for referring to the subject." [Our correspondent is evidently not aware that Capt. Meynell is a "reduced officer," and would long since have got his company in the Ceylon Rifles, had not that regiment been disbanded. It is only right that those who have suffered by reduction should be remembered by the Horse Guards. On other grounds, too, this officer had strong claims, as we point out in another column.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

85th Light Infantry. It is proposed that the regiment should come home from India with next winter's reliefs.

92nd Highlanders. It has been determined to bring the regiment home from India with the 1880-81 reliefs. Lieut. Boyd has been granted leave from India to England for nine months, on medical certificate. Serjt. J. M'Laren and Lance-Cprl. E. M'Kay have been granted the medal for distinguished conduct in the field, as a reward for their gallantry in the action on the Asmai heights, Afghanistan, on Dec. 14, 1879.

96th Regiment. Brevet Major Josselyn has applied for permission to retire on a pension.

102nd Fusiliers. Capt. Rogers becomes major by the retirement of Major Stevens. The company is not likely to be filled in the regiment.

103rd Fusiliers are to be conveyed from Queenstown to Liverpool about the middle or end of next month.

Rifle Brigade. The 1st Batn. is to embark for India with the 1880-81 reliefs. Col. Newdegate, C.B., will be placed on half-pay, from command of the 4th Batn., from the 14th prox., on completing five years as lieut.-col. Lieut. Lord Bennet has vacated his appointment as extra aide-de-camp on the Viceregal Staff in Ireland.

2nd West India Regiment. The Standard says:—"Sir Garnet Wolseley, previous to his departure from the Cape, invested Sir William Lanyon with full powers as Administrator of the Transvaal. Sir Theophilus Shepstone, although he has returned to the Cape, will occupy no official position."

Commissariat and Transport Staff. Assist.-Comy.-Gen. H. S. E. Reeves arrived home from Natal on Tuesday, in the steamer Conway Castle.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major R. W. Jackson, C.B., arrived home from the Cape on Tuesday with Sir Garnet Wolseley. Surg.-Major J. Parr, M.D., in medical charge, Colaba Depot, has passed the lower-standard examination in Hindostanee. Surg.-Major F. Ferguson, M.D., has been granted leave from India to England for eight months, Surg.-Major N. Ffolliott for six months, Surg. A. E. Hayes for twelve months, and Surg. W. H. Briggs for six months.

Veterinary Department. At the meeting of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, held on Tuesday last, Inspecting-Vet.-Surg. G. Fleming was unanimously elected president for the ensuing year.

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

2nd Royal Cheshire. James Hill, a young man, living at No. 3 Medlock Square, London Road, Manchester, was charged, at the Stockport Police-court on Saturday, with desertion under the following peculiar circumstances:—The prisoner offered himself to the recruiting officer of the 2nd Royal Cheshire Militia, at Stockport, as a recruit. Police-Inspector Marshall was present, and the prisoner's answers being unsatisfactory, he was refused. The prisoner offered himself again on a subsequent occasion, and his statements being now confirmed by a comrade he was accepted, and received the usual money allowance. He was enlisted in the name of Thomas Jones. When the 2nd Cheshire was called up for training, the prisoner, already belonging to the 1st Lancashire Militia, found he could not attend, and induced another man to personate him. This substitute accordingly presented himself and answered to the name of Thomas Jones, but, being known, he was arrested and placed in the guard-room, when he admitted the whole of the facts. Being a very flagrant case of imposition, the Bench were asked to inflict salutary punishment. They fined the prisoner £5, and in default of payment, committed him to Belle Vue Gaol for three months.

Hampshire Engineers (Submarine Miners). This corps, commanded by Capt. Croker, has been ordered to assemble at Fort Grange, Gosport, on Sept. 1, to undergo training for 84 days.

East Kent. The 1st Batn., under Col. Howell, and the 2nd Batn., under Col. Beales, were inspected, on Monday afternoon, at Canterbury, by Major-Gen. Newdigate, C.B., commanding the South-Eastern District, who had arrived from Dover, with his Staff, for the purpose. The two battalions were formed into a brigade, Col. Steward, commanding 45th Brigade Depôt, acting as brigadier, the inspecting officer being received in line at open order with a general salute. After marching past in column of double companies and in line of quarter-column, a number of brigade movements were performed, the General at the close expressing great satisfaction at what he had witnessed, especially the marching past, the steadiness of the men under arms, their silence in the ranks, and the knowledge of their work displayed by the officers. He had also, he said, received a most favourable report from Col. Napier (the senior officer in the garrison) of the conduct of the men in barracks and billets. On Tuesday week the regiment marched out to Barham Downs, and practised outpost duties, in accordance with a "general idea" issued from the Brigade Depôt Office, parading at 8.30 a.m., and returning to barracks at 6.30 p.m.

West Kent. The Assembly Rooms at Maidstone were on the 18th inst. once more the scene of the annual ball given by the officers of the regiment. At the entrance to the hall was stationed a guard of honour, comprising 30 men and three serjeants, under the command of a subaltern. The ball committee consisted of Capt. Pemberton, Lieut. Lord W. Nevill, and Lieut. Meade-Waldo, under whose supervision, and with the assistance of Qrmr. Hart, the ball-room and staircase were most tastefully adorned. Dancing commenced shortly after nine, and continued until half-past three the next morning. At 12 o'clock a most récherche repast was partaken of in the skating-rink. The annual inspection took place on the 20th inst., at Mote Park. Col. Hales Wilkie, of the 46th Brigade Depôt, was the inspecting officer. Having assembled at the barracks, the two battalions, to the number of about 960, under command of Lieut.-Cols. Treherne and Larking-marched through the town to the scene of the in, spection. Arriving on the ground, they formed line and received the inspecting officer in the usual manner. The two battalions, as well as the recruits, then underwent a rigid inspection. The march-past in quarter-column, column, and at the double was most creditably performed, the inspecting officer expressing his satisfaction at the entire performance of the men while under arms. The regiment was disbanded on the 21st.

Royal London. The recruits, some seven score, are making rapid progress with their setting-up and drill. During the late fine weather a morning and afternoon parade of two hours each has given the staff serjeants of the regiment an opportunity of introducing the new hands to military life; and as the raw material enlisted seem of good physique, although young, the battalion is likely to have a valuable addition in its new blood by the time of training on June 28.

5th West York. This fine regiment, under command of Col. Gunter, was inspected on May 21 by Major-Gen. Willis, C.B., commanding the Northern District. This inspection was not the usual annual one, which is held by Col. Lloyd, commanding 6th Brigate Depôt, but was owing to the Major-General wishing to test the efficiency of a battalion which has such a high reputation in the Militia force, and of which he had heard so much. Consequently, it was ordered to parade on Harrogate Stray, about four miles from its head-quarters, for his inspection. The regiment, therefore, marched from Knaresborough in the morning, and paraded at Harrogate at eleven, the parade-state showing a total of 1,018, all told. The Major-General, who was attended by the Qrmr-General, Col. Gillespie, and Capts. Sargent and Coke, aides-de-camp, was received with the usual salute. The regiment then marched past in column, quarter-column, and at the double; the manual and firing exercises were then performed, under the direction of Major Bates, and on Col. Gunter resuming the command, the battalion went through a smart and rapid field day, the new attack eliciting the highest praise, both from the General and the numerous spectators. After advancing in review order, Col. Gunter was ordered by the General to express to the regiment how pleased he was with all he had seen, and added that the battalion more than came up to his highest expectations; that they were a fine, powerful set of men, well drilled and handled, and that he felt they would be of the greatest use to the country, should their services ever be required. Col. Lloyd, on another day, inspected the regiment in marching order, and its interior economy, and also expressed his satisfaction at the high state of discipline and efficiency he found it in. The following officers were present:—Col. Gunter (late 4th Dragoon Guards) in command, Major Bates (late 8th Hussars), Major Cadman, Capts. Hoole, Podmore, Seymour, J. Hoole, Montagu, Lodge, Radcliffe; Lieuts. Hon. M. Hawke, Hon. E. Lascelles, Hon. R. Wentworth-Fitz-William, E. de Grey, Beaumont, Marquis de Stacpoole, Wardle, Talbot, Starkey, Wigram, Ellis; and Capt. and Adjt. Stoney. Lieut. Sir Hubert C. Miller, Bart., has been transferred from the regiment to the Coldstream Guards. The men will be disbanded on Saturday, May 29.

Cavan. Capt. James Robinson, a Waterloo officer, died last week at Jersey, at the age of 87. Seventy-three years ago he joined the 32nd Regiment as ensign, and served in it throughout the Peninsular campaign. He was present at the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse, for which he received the war medal and six clasps. He served during the campaign of 1815, and was severely wounded at Quatre Bras. He afterwards exchanged to the 50th, and was appointed paymaster of the Cavan Militia in 1855, which post he held till 1879, when the appointment was abolished, Capt. Robinson held the Waterloo medal for services in the Army under the Duke of Wellington.

North Cork. Col. Aldworth and the officers gave a ball at Buttevant on Thursday night, which was much enjoyed by the numerous guests, among whom were the élite of the county and many strangers.

South Cork. Col. Sir A. Warren and the officers gave a very successful fancy-dress ball at Fermoy on Wednesday last week, which was attended by the nobility and gentry of the district in large numbers. The regimental training was highly satisfactory. The accounts of the disturbance at the Mallow Station on the disbandment of the regiment, in the local papers, are, we hear, very highly-coloured. The railway authorities who detained the special train engaged for the conveyance of the men are most to blame for what occurred, but we trust the War Office will take steps for the better management of the Militia paying-off and disbanding generally all over the Kingdom before the next training. Great regret is felt in the South Corks at the prospects of losing their adjutant, the indefatigable and excellent Capt. Davidson, at the close of his five years in which he has done much for the regiment.

Mid-Ulster Artillery. Major Saunders has vacated his appointment as extra aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

A "Militia Subaltern" writes:—"Upon reading last week's issue of the Army and Navy Gazette, I could not notice without surprise the remarks made by 'Fair-play' with reference to Militia subalterns as candidates for the Army. Militia subalterns who wish to get commissions in the Army are obliged first to pass a preliminary and afterwards a qualifying examination before the Civil Service Commissioners, and, after having served two trainings with their Militia regiments, they are eligible to present themselves as candidates at the competitive military examination for commissions in the Army. I hope this may meet the eye of 'Fair-play,' who is evidently badly informed upon the subject."

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Royal North Devon Hussars. The regiment, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Sir Arthur Chichester, Bart., is assembled at Barnstaple for its annual training. In former years the regiment has met at Torrington. On marching into the town the regiment was met by a crowd of citizens, who were assembled in the square where the men halted, and were then dismissed to their billets. The officers present are Lieut.-Col. Sir A. Chichester, Bart., Capts. Sir Bruce Chichester, Williams, Deane, and Holley, Lieuts. Oldham and Lord Ebrington, and 2nd Lieut. Whyte.

Royal Wilts. In future years the regiment will be equipped with a head-dress similar to that worn by the Hussars of the Regular Service, in place of the old shako.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

A deputation, consisting of Viscount Ranelagh, the Marquis of Donegall, the Hon. Charles Lindsay, and Col. Wilkinson, had an interview on Tuesday with the Secretary of State for War, who was accompanied by the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Morley, the Under-Secretary of State, and Gen. Sir D. Lysons, to obtain permission to hold the review on June 26 in Hyde Park. The deputation were informed that the application would be taken into most favourable consideration, but doubts were expressed whether it would be possible that the review should be held in Hyde Park, on account of the great damage which would be occasioned to the shrubs and flower-beds by the large crowds which would attend the review.

A meeting of the committee appointed by the Metropolitan commanding officers on the 13th inst. was held on Saturday last, at the offices of the National Rifle Association, to concert measures for the holding of the proposed Royal review. A deputation was appointed to confer with the authorities and apply for the requisite permission, and it is now thought probable, if the application is granted, that the review will be held about the 26th of June, in Hyde Park. All the arrangements will, of course, be made subject to the Queen's convenience.

19th Madras N.I. Major F. Smalley, wing-officer, has been granted leave to England for one year, on medical certificate.

2nd Bombay Light Cavalry. Brevet Major W. H. J. Stopford, 3rd squadron-commander, has been appointed 2nd squadron-commander; Major J. Fagan, 3rd squadron-commander; and Lieut. A. 19th Bombay N.I. Major Waudby's gallant defence of the Dubrai post excited universal admiration of all villagers around. The enemy confess to a loss of 12 killed and 18 wounded. A correspondent writing from Allahabad on April 26 gives further particulars of the late action before Ghuznee:—"Gen. Stewart says the enemy were drawn up across his line of march. He had with him, as advanced force, one brigade of infantry, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, 19th Bengal Lancers, A-B R.H.A., and one additional native infantry regiment, brigade not named (but probably the 59th Foot), 3rd Goorkhas, 2nd Sikhs, and 19th Punjab Infantry. As our troops advanced to attack, 3,000 Ghazis rushed down overlapping our flanks. The cavalry behaved splendidly, and by charging prevented flanking movement. The succeeding enemy fought with most determined bravery, Gen. Stewart saying he has seen nothing to compare with their rush except when rebel sepoys charged the Black Watch at Bareilly during the Mutiny. Our cavalry suffered worst, Lieut. Young, of the 19th Bengal Lancers, being fearfully cut. Nearly all the wounds are from knife-cuts, proving how severe was the fighting during the hour it lasted. Lieut. Young's horse bolted with him, when his regiment was ordered to charge, right into the middle of the Ghazis.'' Lieut. Young is a son of a former Chief Secretary of the Bombay Government, and was formerly in the 11th Hussars.

Reviews.

The Wellington Despatches. Volume VIII. London: John Murray.

No period could be more opportune than the present for the publication of the eighth volume of The Wellington Despatches. In it there will be found some valuable observations as to the discipline and efficiency of the Army, and particularly as to the crucial question of corporal punishment. In reference to the question, the Duke observes that it is quite obvious that there must be in the hands of the commanding officer of a body of armed men some easily attainable means of punishing, in order to maintain discipline or regularity. A commanding officer of a battalion has at his disposal several trivial punishments, but the execution of these depends upon the infliction of some one more severe, in case any of them should be resisted:—

> "It is the power existing of inflicting a greater punishment, the certainty that it will be inflicted, and the terror it inspires, which render these minor punishments effectual, establish subordination among the soldiers, and ensure discipline. The use of the more severe punishment becomes less necessary, and is less general."

The question then arises,—"Would nothing but corporal punishment answer the purpose?" The Duke's reply is,—"I know of nothing that could produce the same effect." Solitary confinement may be regarded as a myth, which could not be inflicted, and which, even if it could be, would not prove effectual. Nor can a soldier be mulcted of his pay; to do this would simply increase his debt to his captain. In fact, there remains corporal punishment alone, as regulated at the discretion of the officer in command. Such are the views entertained some fifty years by our greatest General. After the lapse of that lengthened period the question is still vexata, and at the present moment possesses more than ordinary interest. In expressing his views on this subject, the Duke narrates the following anecdote:—There was one remarkable case, in a regiment in which the commanding officer had invented punishments, all of them very innoxious in themselves, but very teasing to the soldier, in order to avoid this great punishment, against which he had heard so much. It ended by the battalion which he commanded firing upon him and his officers at a field-day, with their buttons in their muskets. In concluding this valuable memorandum on the question of corporal punishment in the Army, the Duke says:—

> "When we come to consider the great operations of war, that in such we must be the example of obedience, good order, and discipline to our allies, and the terror of our enemies, on account of our possessing these same qualities, I cannot conceive that there is a man with information upon the subject who will think otherwise than that if the State is to have an Army, we must maintain in it the use of corporal punishment."

The political condition of England at the moment lends additional interest to a perusal of the great soldier's appreciation of events which were passing some fifty years ago, and which were fraught with danger to her prosperity. Those perils were avoided or safely combated, and England secured a position amongst the great European Powers which must be maintained. We find in the year 1831 a most emphatic protest by the Duke, in a despatch to Mr. Gleig, against his being held up as an enemy to all reform:—

> "It is curious enough that I, who have been the greatest reformer on earth, should be held up as an enemy to all reform. This assertion is neither more nor less than one of the lying cries of to-day. If by 'reform' is meant Parliamentary reform or a change in the mode or system of representation, what I have said is that I never heard of a plan that was safe or practicable that would give satisfaction, and that while I was in office I should oppose myself to reform in Parliament."

In respect to the details of the question on which the Duke so emphatically pronounced his opinion, he points out that the change which is so sought for could only be made by adding to the number of the representatives in Parliament from England, or by disfranchising the so-called "rotten boroughs." The first, however, could not be done without a breach of the Acts of Union. The last would be a violation of the first and most important principle of the Constitution, for no valid reason and upon no ground whatever, excepting a popular cry and an apprehension of the consequences of resisting it. In concluding this highly-interesting despatch, the Duke utters this prophetic warning:—

> "I tell you that we must not risk our great institutions and large properties, personal as well as real. If we do, there is not a man of this generation, so young, so old, so rich, so poor, so bold, so timid, as that he will not feel the consequences of this rashness. This opinion is founded not on reasoning only, but on experience, and I shall never cease to declare it."

In a despatch to Lord Kenyon, under date November, 1831, the Duke deals with the question of the Disestablishment of the Protestant Church, at least in Ireland, which he regards as at the "outpost," and the first to be attacked. Notwithstanding the existence of this apprehension, or indeed conviction, in his mind, the Duke entertained the opinion that the landed interests of the country—that is, the Protestants—if fairly supported as they ought to be by the Government, and supporting the Government as they ought, would prove too strong, whether in a moral, a political, or a military view, for all the rest. In reference to a scheme for paying a Roman Catholic Establishment in Ireland, he does not consider any to be possible, in the view of the laws passed at the period of the Reformation. There is not a line in the book which does not bear the impress of the Duke's thoughtfulness, earnestness, and sagacity. The pious care of the inheritor of so great a name is building up an imperishable monument to the hero whose name, but for it, might be classed among those of great soldiers, merely, whereas now we see by the light of these labours, that he was a great soldier because he was a great man.

Amusements.

With the arrival of what is properly known as the "Derby week," the Metropolis assumes its gayest aspect. On the opera nights fashionable patronage seems pretty fairly divided between the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, and Her Majesty's Theatre, though neither establishment is severely taxing the attention of musical critics. At the former house, Madame Adelina Patti, whose attraction remains undiminished, has sung for the first time this season in "Dinorah," and Madame Albani has twice appeared in "Mignon." Her next appearance will be in "Puritani" and "Lohengrin." At Her Majesty's Madame Christine Nilsson resumes her position on Saturday evening, as Elsa in "Lohengrin," and the other nights have presented Mdlle. Marie Vanzandt in "Sonnambula," and Madame Marie Roze in "Aida." Madame Eleanora Robinson makes her début next week in "Fidelio" as Leonora.

At the Gaiety, the new season of French plays commenced on Monday night with "Adrienne Lecouvreur," Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt embodying for the first time the arduous character of the heroine. The reception of this clever, if capricious, actress was in curious contrast to the enthusiastic greeting which welcomed her last year, but long before the play had ended, her undeniable powers were fully and frankly acknowledged, and the curtain fell amidst the hearty applause of a brilliant audience. The drama was originally written by MM. Eugène Scribe and Legouvé for the celebrated Rachel, who, after captivating Paris by her display of tragic intensity in 1849, exercised an equal influence over English sympathies when playing the part for the first time at the St. James's Theatre in July, 1850. An excellent adaptation by Mr. John Oxenford, called "The Reigning Favourite," was prepared at the same time for Mrs. Stirling. It will be remembered the purpose of the play is to show the superiority of genius, as typified by the actress, over the nobility of rank. In the green-room scene, with which the play commences, Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt quickly proved that she had thoroughly seized the idea conveyed by the dramatist. The stormy passion that Rachel used to manifest in such passages as the sobs of baffled rage over the returned bouquet, and the appalling despair of the death-struggle, was less striking; but when tenderness of expression was demanded, the capabilities of the present actress were found fully adequate to the occasion. Of the the rest, it will be sufficient to say competent support was given by Mdlle. Devoyod as the Princess de Bouillon, M. Train as Count Maurice, and M. Dieudonné as the Abbé.

The charming dramatic idyll of "Iolanthe," poetically rendered by Mr. W. G. Wills from the Danish poem, "King René's Daughter," has given Miss Ellen Terry another character in which her talents compel unqualified approbation, and the little piece will supplement the abridged play of "The Merchant of Venice" during the remainder of the Lyceum season.

The careful revival of "As You Like It," played 100 times in succession at the Imperial Theatre, will now be transferred to Drury Lane, the characters being retained by the same representatives.

The production of Mr. Burnand's adapted comedy, "Society and the Stage," has been postponed, and the Olympic has fallen back on "High Life Below Stairs" and the burlesque of "Little Don Cæsar."

Mr. Albery's new and original three-act comedy, called "Jacks and Jills," will be produced at the Vaudeville on Saturday evening.

A new grand ballet of action, called "Diona," is to be brought out at the Alhambra on Monday night.

Under the title of "A Flying Visit," a new vaudeville will be incorporated next week with Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's always pleasant entertainment.

On Monday evening last Mr. E. L. Blanchard gave a lecture, under the title of "More Remembrances," to the Short-Hand Writers' Association, at 2 Westminster Chambers, Victoria Street. Mr. T. J. Wood, the president of the Association, occupied the chair. The lecture was an interesting history of the origin and development of pantomimes from their first introduction, illustrated by many amusing incidents and anecdotes. The hall was crowded by a most appreciative audience, which included many literary celebrities.

THERE ARE FEW, IF ANY, MEDICINES MORE TROUBLESOME TO ADMINISTER than Cod Liver Oil, and it is often grievous to find that patients whom it would most certainly benefit will not take it. It is, therefore, a great boon to get such an Oil as the present. We have tried it, and find it is exceedingly bland to the taste, and causes no eructations or nausea afterwards. It well deserves the name of "Perfected."—The Practitioner. See also, the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c., &c. Army and Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1880.

ONE of the last acts of Colonel Stanley ere quitting the War Office, was to advise her Majesty to remove all the Purchase lieutenant-colonels from the command of their regiments. The motive is clearly, though briefly, exposed, and it must be admitted that it is not without weight. The Royal Warrant of 1877 laid it down that, out of regard for vested interests, all officers who had obtained their lieutenant-colonelcies previous to the abolition of Purchase should be exempt from the rule which limited the command of a regiment to five years. Many, nay, most of these officers had obtained their positions by the expenditure of large sums of money, and the remainder had given an equivalent in the shape of long and valuable service. To remove these officers from their commands, without giving them any compensation, would, it was felt, have been very hard, and likely to create much dissatisfaction. Had, on the abolition of Purchase, all officers been given the value of their commissions down, this and many other complications would have been avoided, and the Army would have been fairly content. The then Government, however, prompt to break the contract which officers had made with the State, without the consent of the officers, shrank from asking that the compensation demanded should be paid. In short, they were guilty of a high-handed act of virtual confiscation, and treated the officers of the Army much worse than the West Indian slaveholders half-a-century ago. The result was wide-spread discontent, and as we have above said, numerous complications. Saddled with this legacy, the Conservative Government have done their best to combine a practical solution of difficulties with a reasonable regard for the rights of those affected by Lord Cardwell's hasty legislation and ill-conceived measures. One of these difficulties soon cropped up. It was evident that if Lieutenant-Colonels who had already held the command of regiments for, in some cases, upwards of ten years were to be allowed to hang on till they were promoted or retired, the case of the Majors and senior Captains would be hopeless, especially in the face of the retiring clauses of the Warrant of 1877. The authorities, therefore, did a great wrong, to prevent one still greater, and having exhausted all the resources of moral pressure, had recourse to a new Warrant, summarily placing the Purchase lieutenant-colonels on half-pay. It is impossible to deny that by so acting they benefited the majority, but it was at the expense of the minority. This minority will, we fear, be unwilling to accept the plea that the happiness of the greatest number should be the object of all legislation. Such an argument might, indeed, be employed to justify the wildest communism. Moreover, the disestablished lieutenant-colonels may fairly say that they have been wronged for the sake of economy, as if they had been paid down the value of their commissions at the date of the abolition of Purchase, they would have had, at all events, no more right to complain than their comrades. Lord Cardwell boasted that by the abolition of Purchase the hands of the Government were freed. Such, however, was not the case, for they were not in justice free to upset vested interests, unless they compensated the holders of those interests by paying at once their value,—i.e., the value of their commissions. They have now, per fas aut nefas, placed all lieutenant-colonels on the same footing, which was certainly desirable; but, on the other hand, the distrust and suspicion of the Army have been aggravated. Evidently, in the opinion of all ranks of the latter, nothing is more sacred for a Secretary of War than for a sapeur, and the War Office will shrink from no breach of faith. The Conservatives will, we fear, on account of this last act of Colonel Stanley, share some of the odium which has hitherto been directed exclusively against the Liberals. It is, however, only just to remember that the former were almost compelled to adopt harsh measures by the previous action of the latter, and that the Conservatives have honestly endeavoured to remedy the legacy of mischief, complication, and inefficiency left them by Lord Cardwell.
